(b) Section 2302 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(4) 'Component' means any individual part, subassembly, assembly, or subsystem integral to a major system, which may be replaced during the service life of the system. The term includes spare part and replenishment spare part. The term does not include packaging or labeling associated with shipment or identification of a 'component'.

"(5) 'Major procurement center' means a procurement center that awarded contracts for components other than commercial items totaling at least $150,000,000 in the proceeding fiscal year.

"(6) 'Major system' means a combination of elements that will function together to produce the capabilities required to fulfill a mission need. The elements may include hardware, equipment, software or any combination thereof, but excludes construction or other improvements to real property. A system shall be considered a major system if (A) the Department of Defense is responsible for the system and the total expenditures for research, development, test and evaluation for the system are estimated to be more than $75,000,000 (based on fiscal year 1980 constant dollars) or the eventual total expenditure for procurement of more than $300,000,000 (based on fiscal year 1980 constant dollars); or (B) a civilian agency is responsible for the system and total expenditures for the system are estimated to exceed $750,000 (based on fiscal year 1980 constant dollars) or the dollar threshold for a 'major system' established by the agency pursuant to Office of Management and Budget (OMB) Circular A-109, entitled 'Major Systems Acquisitions', whichever is greater, or (C) the system is designated a 'major system' by the head of the agency responsible for the system.

"(7) 'Technical data' means recorded information (regardless of form or method of recording) of a scientific or technical nature, including data resulting from work which was specified and directly funded as an element of performance of a contract from the United States, but does not include—

"(A) computer software;

"(B) financial, administrative, cost or pricing, management data, or other information incidental to contract administration;

"(C) data relating to products, components, or processes developed at private expense; or

"(D) data relating to products, components, or processes developed at private expense and offered for sale to the general public.".

(c)(1) Within one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the head of each agency shall develop a plan for the management of technical data received under contracts for the development, production, modification, or maintenance of major systems within its jurisdiction. At a minimum, the management plan shall address procedures for—

(A) inventorying, indexing, storing, and updating items of technical data into a system;

(B) verifying contractor-imposed limitations on the Government's rights to make future use of the data in competitive acquisitions; and

(C) assuring that agency procurement officials and prospective contractors will have timely access to complete and current technical data for the competitive acquisition of supplies and services for the maintenance of the system during its service life.

(2) Within 5 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the head of each agency shall complete implementation of the management plan required by paragraph (1), and include in the system the available technical data for each currently operational major system within the jurisdiction of the head of such agency.

(3) Not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this section, the Comptroller General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress a report evaluating the plans of selected agencies for the management of technical data for major systems within the jurisdiction of such agencies. The report shall include an evaluation of the plans.

(4) As used in this subsection, the term "agency" means an agency which is subject to chapter 137 off title 10, United States Code.

(d)(1) Chapter 141 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 2402. Prohibition of contractors limiting subcontractor sales directly to the United States

"Each contract for the purchase of supplies or services made by the Department of Defense shall provide that the contractor will not—

"(1) enter into any agreement with a subcontractor under the contract that has the effect of unreasonably restricting sales by the subcontractor directly to the United States of any item or process (including computer software) like those made, or services like those furnished, by the subcontractor under the contract (or any follow-on production contract); or

"(2) otherwise act to restrict unreasonably the ability of a subcontractor to make sales to the United States described in clause (1).".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"2402. Prohibition of contractors limiting subcontractor sales directly to the United States.".

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 14. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the amendments made by this Act shall take effect 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b)(1) The amendments made to section 8(d) of the Small Business Act by subsections (b) and (c) of section 6 of this Act shall take effect immediately upon enactment, and shall be included in all contracts required to contain the clauses contained in paragraph (3) of section 8(d) of the Small Business Act which are awarded on or after the date 180 days following the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) The amendments made to section 8(e) of the Small Business Act by section 6(a) of this Act shall apply to procurement actions initiated on or after the date 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(3) The amendments made by sections 5, 9, and 11 shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

AMENDMENT NO. 3603

(Purpose: To make technical corrections)

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, many of the provisions of S. 2489 were incorporated into the fiscal year 1985 DOD authorization bill by the Armed Services Committee's task force on selected defense procurement matters, chaired by Senator QUAYLE with Senator LEVIN serving as ranking minority member. This action was taken while the task force was also considering S. 2489, and preparing it for action by the full Armed Services Committee.

The technical amendment I am about to offer conforms the text of the provisions of S. 2489 as reported by the Committee on Armed Services on June 11, 1984 with the text of the provisions of S. 2489 which were incorporated into the Senate's version of the fiscal year 1984 Department of Defense authorization bill, as adopted by the Senate on June 21, 1984.

Mr. President, I move the adoption of the technical conforming amendment to S. 2489.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER] proposes an amendment numbered 3603.

Mr. WEICKER. I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 9, line 8, before "A Federal" insert the following: "A person denied the opportunity to demonstrate the ability to meet the standards specified for qualification pursuant to paragraph (1)(D) may not be denied the opportunity to submit and have considered an offer for a contract solely because the person (A) is not on a list of qualified bidders prescribed or maintained by the agency, or (B) in the case of a contract for the purchase of a product, does not have its product on a list of qualified products prescribed or maintained by the agency.".

On page 16, line 15, strike out "(a)".

On page 17, line 4, strike out "not".

On page 19, line 3, beginning with ", except", strike out all through line 15 and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon.

On page 22, line 8, strike out "or to" and insert in lieu thereof "and".

On page 23, line 3, insert "as defined in" before "section".

On page 23, between lines 23 and 24, insert the following new section heading.

PLAN FOR MANAGEMENT OF TECHNICAL DATA

On page 23, line 24, strike out "(b)(1)" and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 8. (a)".

On page 24, line 8, strike out "(A)" and insert in lieu thereof "(1)".

On page 24, line 11, strike out "(B)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)".

On page 24, line 14, strike out "(C)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

On page 24, line 20, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(b)".

On page 24, line 23, strike out "paragraph (1)" and insert in lieu thereof "subsection (a)".

On page 25, line 1, strike out "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(c)".

On page 25, line 11, strike out "8." and insert in lieu thereof "(9)".

On page 28, line 18, strike out "(9)" and insert in lieu thereof "10.".

On page 32, line 13, strike out "10." and insert in lieu thereof "11.".

On page 32, line 21, strike out "unreasonably".

On page 33, line 3, beginning with "restrict", strike out all through "the" on line 4, and insert in lieu thereof "restrict the".

On page 33, line 8, strike out "11." and insert in lieu thereof "12.".

On page 34, line 2, strike out "12." and insert in lieu thereof "13.".

On page 34, line 5, strike out "7 (b)" and insert in lieu thereof "8".

On page 35, beginning with line 16, strike out all through page 37, line 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(4) 'technical data' means recorded information (regardless of the form or method of the recording) of a scientific or technical nature (including engineering data) relating to the property procured by an agency and used throughout the life cycle of the property for the purposes of performing management, engineering, maintenance, modification, test, and other functions relating to the property and to procure spares or additional spares of such property, and includes data resulting from work which was specified and directly funded as an element of performance of a contract from the United States, but does not include computer software, or financial, administrative, cost or pricing, management data, or other information incidental to contract administration. For purposes of commercial products, technical data shall be restricted to only that data necessary to fully operate and maintain the system during its service life.

On page 38, line 12, strike out "13." and insert in lieu thereof "14.".

On page 42, line 25, after "(a).", insert the following: "A person denied the opportunity to demonstrate the ability to meet the standards specified for qualification pursuant to subsection (a)(4) may not be denied the opportunity to submit and have considered an offer for a contract to be made by the Department of Defense solley because the person (1) is not on a list of qualified bidders prescribed or maintained by the Department of Defense, or (2) in the case of a contract for the purchase of a product, does not have its product on a list of qualified products prescribed or maintained by the Department of Defense.".

On page 49, line 10, strike out "to or" and insert in lieu thereof "and".

On page 49, line 19, beginning with "may", strike out all through "(41 U.S.C. 403 (4))" on line 23, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "shall be implemented in the single system of Government-wide procurement regulations, as defined in section 4 (4) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403 (4)) and may be waived in accordance with such procurement regulations".

On page 55, beginning with line 20, strike out all through page 58, line 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(7) 'Technical data' means recorded information (regardless of the form or method of the recording) of a scientific or technical nature (including engineering data) relating to the property procured by the head of an agency and used throughout the life cycle of the property for the purposes of performing management, engineering, maintenance, modification, test, and other functions relating to the property and to procure spares or additional spares of such property, and includes data resulting from work which was specified and directly funded as an element of performance of a contract from the United States, but does not include computer software, or financial, administrative, cost or pricing, management data, or other information incidental to contract administration. For purposes of commercial products, technical data shall be restricted to only that data necessary to fully operate and maintain the system during its service life.".

On page 58, line 14, strike out "unreasonably".

On page 58, line 21, beginning with "restrict", strike out all through "the" on line 22, and insert in lieu thereof "restrict the".

On page 59, line 5, strike out "14". and insert in lieu thereof "15".

On page 60, line 1, beginning with "9.", strike out all through "11" on line 2, and insert in lieu thereof "10, and 12".

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the technical conforming amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3603) was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, first, let me announce to my colleagues as they sit in committee meetings or with constituents in their offices that it is the intention of Senator DIXON and myself to wrap this matter up within the hour, so those who have amendments should come to the floor right now to present them, as third reading will be moved very shortly. It is also our expectation that the vote on the matter will actually take place at 5 o'clock. That, at least according to the latest request from the leadership, has not been finally determined, but that is what I expect will happen. So with those words of advice, Mr. President, let me begin.

Mr. President, as chairman of the Small Business Committee, I am especially pleased that the Senate is considering today S. 2489, the "'Small Business and Federal Procurement Competition Enhancement Act of 1984." This legislation will go a long way to increase the number of competitive contracting opportunities available in the Federal procurement process. Such increased competitive contracting opportunities will benefit all business, large and small, but equally important, will result in substantial cost savings and quality improvements, as more agency procurements reap the benefits of the positive forces of the competitive marketplace. The bill will assure that all competitors will have an even chance to compete.

Mr. President, the text of S. 2489 that is before the Senate is a bill that has been carefully refined. It reflects important conceptual contributions from other legislative proposals. It reflects careful consideration by the Committee on Armed Services to which it was sequentially referred. It reflects 3 days of legislative hearings, 2 before the Small Business Committee and 1 before the Armed Services Committee. Finally, it derived full benefit from the almost exhaustive analyses of DOD's "spare parts problem" generated by extensive congressional hearings in both Houses, GAO investigations, and the reviews undertaken by the Department of Defense, its Inspector General's Office, and the individual military services.

The "Small Business and Federal Procurement Competition Enhancement Act of 1984" is the successor to S. 1730, the "Small Business Competition in Contracting Act of 1983," introduced by Senator ALAN DIXON a little more than 1 year ago today. S. 1730 helped to identify the problems addressed by S. 2489. Senator DIXON is to be commended for his leadership. I thank him for his steadfast support of our mutual effort, his steady hand in guiding S. 2489 through consideration by the Committee on Armed Services, and his bipartisan approach to effective procurement practices—basically a Government-management activity that cannot be rationally ascribed partisan labels as to the methods of its conduct.

The bill expands the potential for competitive procurement basically in two ways. First, it confronts several of the most persistent obstacles to competition present in the procurement practices and procedures of most executive agencies. These anticompetitive practices and procedures are especially burdensome on small businesses that attempt to participate in the Federal procurement market. For example, prospective contractors are often confronted with prequalification requirements—conditions that must be met before their bid will even be considered by the procuring agency. While a valid case can be made for some of these prequalification requirements, they are an impediment to free and open competition and a very substantial obstacle to the entry of new competitors, especially small business concerns. S. 2489 seeks to bridge this obstacle by requiring a procuring agency to demonstrate the need for the prequalification requirement, to specify the least-restrictive standards to fulfill the prequalification requirement, and to give a new competitor the chance to show that its product can make the grade. This provision of the bill alone could bring competition to the procurement of over a quarter of a million items within the Defense Department's spare parts inventory, each with an annual buy value in excess of $10,000, and each currently purchased without competition.

Second, S. 2489 requires the procuring agencies to plan for the competitive procurement of the spare parts, support equipment, and support services that will be required to maintain the major systems under their responsibility during the service lives of those systems, periods spanning a decade or more. By integrating such "up-front" planning for future competition into the contracts awarded for the design and production of a new major system, Federal agencies—the civilian agencies as well as the defense agencies—will be better able to award these billions of dollars in contracts on a competitive basis rather than on the sole-source basis that prevails today. For example, S. 2489 would require an agency to consider in the process of awarding a contract for the design of a major system criteria which would give "points" in the contract award evaluation to a prospective major system contractor who would include in its design the largest number of components that are standard, commercially available, or that could be readily procured on a competitive basis when needed in the future as replacement parts. But, at the same time the bill recognizes that performance potential cannot be sacrificed. Similarly, S. 2489 would require that contracts for the design or production of major systems include provisions carefully prescribing the contractor's responsibilities relating to the delivery of technical data. Without current, complete, and unrestricted technical data, the procuring agency will be unable to competitively procure future requirements for replacement parts or support equipment. At the same time, the bill does not infringe upon the property rights which a contractor has in trade secrets developed at private expenses, a very important concern of Government contractors of all sizes.

Mr. President, while the Small Business Competition in Contracting Act of 1984 has received much of its impetus by being identified as a comprehensive legislative solution to the spare parts problem within the Department of Defense, it scope, as embodied in its title, is broader and more fundamental. Its full reach is to enhance the potential for competition in all Government procurement, by the civil agencies as well as the Defense Department. Its thrust is a continuation of longstanding efforts by the Small Business Committee to eliminate barriers to participation in the Federal procurement process. For example, S. 272 enacted in the first session of this Congress as Public Law 98-72. This very basic reform assures that prospective contractors will have timely notice of Federal procurement opportunities and adequate time to prepare their bid or proposal in response to the published requirement. Public Law 98-72 also placed the first specific statutory restrictions on the use of sole-source contracting.

S. 2489 in its present form incorporates the thrust of S. 2434, introduced by Senator RUDY BOSCHWITZ. Both S. 2434 and S. 2489 provide for the placement of Small Business Administration breakout procurement center representatives [BPCR] in each major procurement center and specifies their functions as advocates for competition. The bill's provisions are based upon a highly successful pilot program established by SBA in 1979, in which a breakout procurement center representative was placed in four of the five air logistics centers operated by Air Force Logistics Command. A 1982 GAO report found that these four BPCR's had been able to "breakout" to competition 294 items during an 18-month period, with a resulting savings of almost $7.4 million over the last sole-source award prices. During fiscal year 1983, these same four BCPR's were able to breakout 1,634 items, resulting in savings estimated at almost $36 million. Given these results, and the fact that most DOD spare parts dollars, $18 billion in fiscal year 1984 are expended noncompetitively, the potential for substantial savings from a Government-wide application of the SBA BPCR program seems almost certain.

Mr. President, S. 2489 would not be ready for Senate consideration today without the assistance of several very hard-working members of the Small Business Committee. Senator DON NICKLES, Senator BOB KASTEN, and Senator JIM SASSER each conducted valuable field hearings on the "obstacles faced by small business in Federal procurement." These field hearings helped frame the issues we are addressing today.

Further, S. 2489 has had the strong support of many small business associations. Many contributed through their own studies of the "spare parts problem" and through analysis of the legislation as it passed through the legislative process. Mr. President, I especially wish to commend the assitance of the National Federation of Independent Business, National Tooling & Machining Association, Small Business United, the National Small Business Association, and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. In particular, the Chamber was able to provide the assistance of both its Small Business Council and its Government Procurement Policy Committee.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of a letter of support on S. 2489 from these and other important groups that have assisted us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, as I have previously stated before this body, I am completely confident that our Nation's small business concerns have the capability to provide the Government with the quality products required, in a timely fashion, at competitive prices. American small businesses have the technical skills, innovation management, and vitality that makes them the basic thread of our Nation's economic fabric. They can, and do, bring the same qualities to the Federal procurement marketplace.

Because of my belief in the capabilities of our Nation's small businesses to compete very effectively, the Small Business and Federal Procurement Competition Enhancement Act of 1984 does not include any new small business set-aside programs or call for the expansion of any existing ones. The bill's purpose, pure and simple, is to increase competition.

DEAR SENATOR: The Senate Small Business Committee has reported out S. 2489, the "Small Business Competition Enhancement Act of 1984." This bill, introduced by Senators Lowell Weicker (R-CT) and Alan Dixon (D-IL), has 22 co-sponsors in the Senate and the strong support of the organizations listed below. Many of our organizations have contacted you in the past to express our support for S. 1730, the predecessor to this bill which was introduced last summer by Senator Dixon. We were pleased to see the comments and suggestions that were generated by the original proposal and are especially supportive of the improvements found in S. 2489.

S. 2489, when enacted, will constitute significant reform of the Federal procurement system. The bill does not superimpose requirements on an already-burdened system; the bill incorporates within the system incentives for more competitive and efficient contracting out. The bill:

provides "points" during the awarding of design and production contracts to encourage prime contractors to include specific proposals in their bids to facilitate competitive procurement of "spare parts"; permits the use of "prequalification" requirements only when agencies can justify their use under specific, prescribed standards, and provides for assistance to small firms seeking qualifications; establishes procedures to ensure the government's access to technical data necessary for future competitive "spare parts" procurements; specifies procedures to validate proprietary data rights asserted by contractors and provides financial disincentives to deter contractors from falsely asserting such rights; expands the Small Business Administration's pilot Breakout Procurement Center Representatives (BPCR) program and specifies their authority and responsibilities as advocates for competition; and requires the timely notice of forthcoming procurements and provisions for sufficient descriptive information to facilitate a sound decision by prospective contractors whether or not to respond to a solicitation.

We are in agreement that this bill offers significant and essential improvements in the procurement process, and with the addition of sufficient enforcement mechanisms, will be a major advance in Federal procurement. We would request that you give serious thought to cosponsoring this legislation. We look forward to your favorable consideration of this request. If you have any questions, please feel free to contact any one of us.

Sincerely,

STANLEY A. WEISS,
President, Business Executives for National Security, Inc.

JOHN J. MOTLEY,
Director, Federal Legislation, National Federation of Independent Business.

JERRY GULAN,
Executive Vice President, National Small Business Association.

WILLIAM SAUL,
Chairman & Chief Executive Officer, National Tooling & Machining Association.

HERB LIEBENSON,
Executive Director, Small Business Legislative Council.

JACK RENNIE,
President, Small Business United.

RICHARD L. BREAULT,
Group Vice President, Policy, U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator MATSUNAGA be added as a cosponsor of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise today to strongly urge the passage of S. 2489, a measure to amend the Small Business Act to enhance competition in Government procurement.

Senator WEICKER and I, along with our colleagues on the Small Business Committee, have crafted a measure that will constitute a significant reform of Federal procurement procedures and practices which currently inhibit maximum, free, and open competition for Government contracts, especially the small business competitors.

Mr. President, through the years, small business legislation has, at times, been viewed as unnecessary, and perhaps even as intrusive. Large corporations were often assumed to be the most effective and efficient suppliers to Government. Even when passed, legislation to assist small business seemingly has not always been enforced. This legislation, as the 21 Senators who join with us in cosponsoring agree, is long overdue. It provides opportunities for accelerated participation by small businesses in the procurement process, for reductions in costly noncompetitive procurement, and for increasing the capability of our industrial base to respond to both defense and civilian procurement requirements.

S. 2489, in fact, will end the misguided, routine use of noncompetitive procurement by Federal agencies, especially by the Defense Department. It will force all Federal agenices to carefully record and monitor the vast quantities of technical data that are received. In effect, through competitive bidding, except in special cases, the Government will be required to find the best offer that it can. Small business, I am certain, will play an integral role in the rejuvenated process.

Under the leadership of Senator WEICKER, the Small Business Committee conducted four extensive field hearings on obstacles facing small business in Federal procurement procedures. A consensus was reached.

Last August, I introduced S. 1730, the "Small Business Competition in Contracting Act of 1983," which served as the focal point for our committee's analysis of the considerable problems faced by the small business community in the Federal procurement process.

S. 1730 included two central proposals, which are retained in this legislation. In addition to increasing small business participation in the procurement process, thereby eliminating most costly noncompetitive contracting, one proposal broadens our Nation's industrial base for both civilian and military procurements. The second proposal provides all businesses with unhindered access to the technical information necessary for small firms to compete with giant corporations for contracts.

This initial proposal, which we further expand today, emphasized that our Armed Forces must make available options to purchase weapons and replenish parts on a competitive basis.

These proposals have been scrupulously analyzed and debated. Two additional Small Business Committee hearings were held in Washington. Then, on May 11 of this year, the committee unanimously reported S. 2489 with further amendments. Subsequently, the Armed Services Committee, of which I am also a member, held hearings on the bill as amended, further refining the proposal. Sections from S. 2489 were, in fact, included in the Department of Defense authorization package that passed the Senate June 21. The result of all these deliberations is a careful and long-overdue remedy to a troublesome dilemma. We have heard time and time again, Mr. President, the horror stories of the Government paying exorbitant prices for simple replacement parts. In fact, a consistent pattern of blatant inefficiency has taken root in the Federal procurement process.

Mr. President, an incensed public demands that we reform this system now. The citizens of the United States rightly expect that their tax dollars will be spent in a prudent and efficient manner by their Government. Our taxpayers deserve—and under this legislation will finally have—a system that is managed well and saves millions of dollars in each fiscal year.

Mr. President, during World War II, this country's defense industrial base proved at first to be insufficient for the extraordinary conflict we faced. We were largely unprepared in 1941, partly because Federal departments and agencies repeatedly refused to award contracts to small businesses. Fortunately, Congress later recognized its mistake and enacted legislation which allowed some access for small business. As the Federal bureaucracy has grown, that outdated system has been proven to be more and more unfair toward small firms. Let us not repeat the foolish mistakes of 1941.

Four years ago, Mr. President, a major report released by the House Armed Services Committee pointed out that the current limited number of private sector firms allowed to participate would again be unable to meet the full national need should we confront a similar national emergency. Thus, Congress must again intervene to correct inequities in the Federal procurement process. The use of noncompetitive bidding, especially by the Department of Defense, must be halted. In fiscal year 1984 alone, billions of dollars were channeled into sole source contracts of more than $500,000 each, excluding numerous small businesses which are ready, willing, and able to produce quality goods and services on time and within budget.

Of course, it is not feasible for Senators to monitor the daily procurement responsibilities of all Federal agencies. However, with the passage of this legislation, all Federal departments and agencies will be forced to address some of the most serious procedural impediments to competition in contracting. The bill's passage will mark a new era of prosperity for small businesses and for this Nation.

By increasing the use of competitive procurement practices, S. 2489 will slash the mounting costs of Federal contracting. The active participation of small firms, particularly in defense procurement, will allow Federal dollars to be more equitably disbursed. As a result, the industrial base of this Nation will be greatly strengthened.

Today, in a tight, competitive marketplace, small business owners must manage their firms extremely efficiently to remain profitable.

Taxpayers insist that Government spending be reduced in order to slice the huge Federal deficit. Unfortunately, at present, we find numerous examples of unnecessary spending in virtually every phase of the Federal procurement process.

It's almost unbelievable, Mr. President, that there is no current standard requirement for the Government to purchase, retain, and catalog the technical data for major weapons. Currently, whenever spare parts are needed for any weapons system the Government is virtually forced to retain the contractor who produced the original parts, and to pay whatever price that contractor deems fair, even though similar parts might be obtained at lower costs, especially from small firms.

Under present policy, small business contractors confront many needless obstacles when attempting to penetrate Government contracting. They are, for example, burdened with prequalification requirements and restricted access to timely information about contracting opportunities.

This legislation squarely addresses those impediments to free, fair and open competition within the Federal marketplace. S. 2489 finally breaks that cycle, providing all businesses an opportunity to successfully, and even profitably, serve their Nation's security needs.

As a recent report by the Defense Department Inspector General says:

> Most spare parts expenditures continue to be on sole-source procurements from prime contractors, even though significant opportunities for breakout exist.
> By not challenging sole-source procurements and taking other actions to improve the competitive status of spare parts, the buying centers paid premium prices to prime contractors.

As we know, those premium prices unnecessarily cost taxpayers millions of dollars every fiscal year.

Under the certificate of competency procedures included in this measure, the Small Business Administration would be prohibited from imposing any minimum dollar threshold on a procuring agency's referral to SBA of proposed procurement actions that would be otherwise subject to the certificate of competency review. In 1983, the Small Business Administration unilaterally imposed a $10,000 floor on procuring agencies' referrals to SBA under the COC Program. The General Accounting Office has twice ruled that any such minimum threshold contravenes the current law.

The second provision states that a procuring agency may not deny a prime contractor's use of small business concern as a subcontractor because of the procuring agency's determination that such potential subcontractor lacks responsibility without first referring that matter to the Small Business Administration for a certificate of competency review.

In summary, Mr. President, the Small Business Competition Enhancement Act of 1984 will help alleviate the unequal burden we have placed on small business in the Federal procurement process. The increase in the number of small businesses participating in the process, particularly in defense contracting, will bring about a fairer distribution of Federal procurement dollars. Full utilization of the tremendous potential offered by this Nation's small businesses will broaden our Nation's industrial base, which, in itself, is a vital element in strong defense.

Mr. President, the path we must follow is clear. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation. With the passage of S. 2489, the Small Business Competition Enhancement Act of 1984, the era of inequity for small business in Federal procurement will be nearer to an end.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I am delighted to yield to my friend and colleague from Indiana [Mr. QUAYLE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to thank the distinguished chairman of the Small Business Committee for the full cooperation and help which he has given in allowing the Armed Services Committee to take a very close look at and make some recommendations which have now been incorporated into the final language of the bill. I think it is most helpful. We hope our amendments, which have been accepted, improve the competition to get the access and second sourcing in which all of us are so vitally interested.

As chairman of the task force on procurement, along with the ranking member, Senator LEVIN, I have in fact worked very hard on this language.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON] has played a unique role in that he has contributed his ideas both as a member of the Small Business Committee and the task force on procurement of the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. President, again my thanks and appreciation to those on the Small Business Committee and those on the task force who worked so very hard on this matter.

I see across the aisle the Senator from New Mexico, who has been a very attentive member on the procurement task force. We have made some great strides, I believe. We will be having more hearings and discussions later on in the area of procurement, which I think is not only of interest of the two committees I mentioned but also the entire Senate and Nation as well.

Mr. President, I take a moment today to comment on S. 2489. The Committee on Armed Services had a sequential referral of this legislation, and on June 11, 1984, the committee reported substantial amendments to the bill. It is my understanding that it is the intention of the sponsors to permit the bill to be passed in substantially the form it was reported by the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. President, I congratulate the primary sponsors of this legislation, the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. WEICKER] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON]. This is a highly thoughtful piece of legislation which will not only enhance the opportunities of small business to participate in defense procurement, but is also a step toward solving the problems we have experienced in the acquisition of spare parts.

At this time, I should like to briefly summarize the major substantive changes in this legislation made by the Armed Services Committee. First, the Small Business Committee had proposed that the Federal Government pay the cost of qualifying new companies up to the number of five where there are fewer than five competitors on a qualified products list or involved in an engineering source approval. These costs of qualification would be paid for successful small businesses. In the view of the Armed Services Committee, this would have imposed an excessive financial obligation on the Federal Government with questionable benefit. Accordingly, the Armed Services Committee has amended the bill to provide that products of two actual manufacturers could be qualified at governmental expense, in the case of of successful small businesses seeking to be qualified, if the Federal agency involved determines that such additional qualified sources or products are likely to result in cost savings from increased competition for future requirements sufficient to amortize the costs incurred by the Federal agency.

Second, the bill as reported by the Small Business Committee had called for a review of prequalification requirements every 5 years. This has been extended to every 7 years.

Third, the bill as reported by the Small Business Committee had a general requirement that if a Federal agency ever failed to enforce an existing prequalification requirement, then the prequalification requirement could not be enforced at any subsequent time unless certain other procedural steps were followed. In the view of the Armed Services Committee there should have been an exemption with respect to emergent situations, and such exemption has been included.

The Armed Services Committee for some time has been concerned about the need for increased competition in subcontracts and for expanding the subcontractor base. Accordingly, the committee inserted a provision to require that not later than July 1, 1985, the Office of Federal Procurement Policy submit a report to the Congress on the desirability and feasibility of requiring the prime contractor for a major system to establish and maintain procedures to qualify competing sources for components of the major system likely to be needed in substantial quantities during the system service life.

The Committee on Armed Services has inserted into the bill a requirement that offerors submitting proposals furnish information in the proposal identifying the items for which technical data will not be provided to the United States and any restrictions on the Government's right to use data that is provided. In addition, there is a provision dealing with possible delays in the submission of this information where a contractor cannot ascertain at the time items are delivered to the United States that technical data which is to be delivered. Furthermore, there is a provision establishing the right of contractors under certain limited circumstances to establish restrictions on the use of technical data after it is submitted.

The bill as reported by the Committee on Small Business included a number of required contract clauses. The Armed Services Committee has added four additional clauses as follows: First, a clause to require a contractor to revise technical data delivered pursuant to the contract to reflect engineering design changes and to deliver such revised technical data to an agency within a specified time; second, a clause requiring a warranty that technical data is complete, accurate, and adequate for the purpose for which the technical data is procured; third, a clause requiring the contractor to promptly correct any technical data found to be incomplete, inadequate, or inefficient, or to promptly furnish complete, accurate, and adequate data to the agency; and fourth, a clause authorizing the head of the agency to withhold progress payments under a contract during any period that the contractor does not meet the requirements of the contract pertaining to the delivery of technical data.

A provision has also been added by the Armed Services Committee to clarify that nothing in the bill is intended to prohibit an agency from including in any solicitation or award of a contract, or as a negotiation objective where an agency is making a noncompetitive award, a provision specifying in the contract the date after which the United States shall have the right to use or have used for any governmental purpose technical data required to be delivered to the United States under the contract.

A new section has been added to the bill which prohibits prime contractors from limiting direct sales by subcontractors of the United States.

Identical provisions to those that are intended to be amendments to section 15 of the Small Business Act have in most cases been provided as amendments to title 10 of the United States Code. The general practice with regard to procurement law has been to have dual conforming statutes, one for civilian agencies and one for the Armed Forces. The procurement provisions for the Armed Forces are carried in title 10, and most provisions dealing with civilian agencies are carried in title 41. However, since the Small Business Committee has initiated this legislation, pertinent changes to the procurement laws have been carried in the Small Business Act over which the Small Business Committee has jurisdiction with respect to the civilian agencies. Since the Armed Services Committee wishes to maintain primary review of the procurement practices for all of the armed services, it has placed similar provisions in title 10 and intends to exercise continuing oversight of the implementation of these provisions.

I should point out that many of the provisions of S. 2489 have been duplicated in H.R. 5167, the Omnibus Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1985. That bill has already been passed by the Senate, and is now in conference. While I am optimistic that that represents a viable legislative vehicle for the enactment of these provisions, there is some uncertainty about the schedule on which this legislation may be enacted, and the chairman and ranking minority member of the Small Business Committee have indicated a desire to have the Senate act on the bill reported by their committee at this time. Since our two committees have worked in an exceedingly cooperative manner on this legislation, I see no reason to prevent the Senate from proceeding to act on S. 2489. I have discussed this matter with Senator TOWER and with our minority who concur in the view that even though many provisions of S. 2489 have already been passed by the Senate, we should take every available opportunity to ensure that these important items are enacted into law this year.

Mr. President, this bill is a sound piece of legislation, and I urge its adoption.

AMENDMENT NO. 3604

(Purpose: To require a General Accounting Office report on small business contract opportunities)

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] proposes an amendment numbered 3604.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 16, between lines 12 and 13, insert the following:

(d) Not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this section, the Comptroller General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress a report evaluating the implementation of the amendments made by subsections (b) and (c), and the extent to which such amendments have increased the opportunity of small business concerns and small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals to participate in the performance of Government contracts and subcontracts.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment to help ensure that small and minority-owned businesses will indeed have a fair chance to compete for Federal procurement dollars.

Each year the Federal Government spends more than $170 billion to buy goods and services from businesses in the private sector.

These procurement dollars can create real economic growth opportunities for small and minority businesses. And by giving these businesses a chance—which is all they ask—we stand to gain for the taxpayers of this country the benefits of free and vigorous competition.

The bill before us today is a good one.

It will result in more competition and more efficiency in one of the most abuse-ridden areas of Federal procurement policy—the money the Government spends on spare parts in defense contracts, particularly those involving major weapons systems.

The extensive record documenting abuses in this area could fill volumes. On June 1 of this year, in fact, a Pentagon audit demonstrated that the military has routinely paid too much for spare parts. Of the 2,300 items examined, more than half were overpriced.

Robert McNamara, who was Secretary of Defense under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, once estimated that the lack of competition in defense acquisitions leads to the waste of 25 cents on each procurement dollar.

Little has happened to change that estimate.

Inefficiency and the lack of competition in procurement continues to cost the Federal Government billions of dollars. And it keeps thousands of small businesses out of a market in which they have every right to be involved.

S. 2489 seeks to eliminate some of the obstacles to the competitive procurement of spare parts. For instance, the bill encourages prime contractors to include in their contract bids proposals to facilitate the competitive procurement of spare parts. Contractors who include such information will be given greater consideration when the time comes to award a contract.

The bill does not stop there.

Under this legislation, the Government will be assured more technical information about spare parts by restricting the type of data prime contractors can withhold from the Federal Government.

Under S. 2489, more descriptive information will be available to help small businesses make sound decisions on the feasibility of going after a contract.

And, S. 2489 will expand the SBA pilot program, which requires Federal procurement centers to identify—or break out—spare parts which could be bid competitively by small business.

My amendment will strengthen even more the ability of small businesses to get into the procurement field.

Federal policy requires that for contracts in excess of $500,000, prime contractors must use their best efforts to place subcontracts with small and disadvantaged businesses. S. 2489 expands this policy to include spare parts.

In other words, when prime contractors sign on the dotted line of a Federal contract they have agreed in principal to seek out small and disadvantaged businesses for the subcontract work.

But at procurement conferences I have sponsored in Ohio, Mr. President, I have time and time again heard small business people complain that, try as they might, they cannot get through the front door where subcontracts are concerned.

My amendment, Mr. President, requires simply that we check up on whether or not prime contractors are, in fact, taking seriously their obligation under Federal policy to count in—rather than leave out—the small and minority businesses.

It requires the GAO to monitor compliance with this policy and to report after 18 months to the Congress on the extent to which these requirements are being met.

That, Mr. President, is a way in which we can communicate to the prime contractors that we are indeed serious about opening up the entire procurement process to competition.

Mr. President, it is my understanding this amendment is acceptable to the manager of the bill and the ranking minority member.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, the amendment is acceptable. I urge its passage.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, this side has reversed the amendment and finds it acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back?

Mr. METZENBAUM. I yield back such time as I have.

Mr. WEICKER. I yield back our time.

The amendment (No. 3604) was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the manager of the bill and the ranking minority member for their cooperation.

AMENDMENT NO. 3605

(Purpose: To require a plan for improving Department of Defense computer capability regarding spare parts data)

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] proposes an amendment numbered 3605.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 62, after line 3, insert the following:

COMPUTER CAPABILITY IMPROVEMENT PLAN

SEC. 15. Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall transmit to the Congress a plan to substantially improve the Department of Defense computer capability to store and rapidly access data that is needed for the efficient procurement of spare parts. Such plan shall provide for a computer data base that includes price and procurement history, parts identification, sources of supply, and other relevant information. The plan shall specify a time frame for implementation and projected cost of implementation of the improvements.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be listed as a cosponsor of this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I am offering a simple amendment which has already been agreed to by the Senate as part of the Omnibus Defense Authorization Act, as it passed the Senate on June 21, 1984. The amendment requires the Department of Defense to improve its computer capability regarding spare parts procurement data.

As we know, there are glaring problems associated with the pricing of spare parts procured by the Department of Defense. These problems are, at least in part, due to a deficient computer capability, with regards to the management of spare parts data. While some capability apparently exists, it is grossly inadequate and antiquated. Last October, Mr. Warren Reid, of the General Accounting Office, in testimony to the Armed Services Committee, stated that:

The Defense Logistics Agency is the only organization (within the Defense Department) that uses a computer to report spare parts' price increases.

This lack of capability was attributed to "logically and technically outdated" software programs at the Department of Defense's procurement centers. This lack of capability has, unfortunately, also led to the increased costs of needed spare parts.

Last November, along with the distinguished junior Senator from Michigan, I wrote Secretary Weinberger, pointing out the need for improved software capabilities to deal with spare parts pricing problems. With the handling of millions of spare parts items, it is imperative that up-to-date computing techniques be used to maintain control over the procurement process.

DOD knows the value of developing this computer capability and has already started this process. However, it is my feeling that this amendment will provide the necessary impetus to complete computer modernization in this area. The amendment simply requires a report, within 180 days, including a plan of action to improve computer capabilities in DOD spare parts procurement. Additionally, the report shall contain cost and timetable projections. It is a simple step to require, but a necessary one, if we are to solve, as expeditiously as possible, this problem of deficient automatic data processing regarding spare parts. It is self-evident that the eventual cost savings of such improved capability will substantially exceed the expense of providing and maintaining the new computer system and software.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the aforementioned correspondence between myself and the Department of Defense be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the correspondence was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, November 1, 1983.

Hon. CASPAR W. WEINBERGER,
Secretary, Department of Defense,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Last week in testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee, Mr. Warren G. Reed of the General Accounting Office stated that "the Defense Logistics Agency is the only organization (within the Defense Department) that uses the computer to report spare parts' price increases." He attributed this lack of capability to "logically and technically outdated" computer software programs at the Defense Department's procurement centers.

Clearly, this computer software problem must be given high level attention and promptly resolved. We commend our colleague, Senator John Tower, for initiating this GAO review.

Our immediate concern is that the inability of most Defense Department procurement centers to know what was paid previously for a given part will undermine your ability to implement Section 1215 of the fiscal year 1984 Defense Authorization Bill. We would therefore suggest that you require in your implementing regulations that vendors supply price and quantity data for earlier orders of the spare part, if any, as part of their response to the request for bids.

We would hope that the present computer software problem in the Logistics Commands will soon be corrected. The Defense Department really should not be dependent on its vendors to know what it previously paid for a spare part.

We hope that this suggestion will help you in writing the regulations called for in Section 1215. We are looking forward to your early submission of the proposed regulations to the Senate Armed Services Committee, as called for in the bill.

Sincerely,

CARL LEVIN.
JEFF BINGAMAN.

OFFICE OF THE
UNDER SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, DC, November 10, 1983.

Hon. JEFF BINGAMAN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BINGAMAN: This is in reply to your joint letter of November 1, 1983, to Secretary Weinberger regarding our ability to implement Section 1215 of the Fiscal Year 1984 Defense Authorization Bill.

The Defense Acquisition Regulatory Council is currently in the process of staffing a proposed regulation to implement the requirements of Section 1215 of the Act. We agree there could be a problem with respect to knowing what was paid previously for a given part. Therefore, your suggestion that our implementing regulations provide that vendors supply price and quantity data for earlier orders of the spare part, if any, as part of their response to the solicitation has been incorporated into our initial draft of the proposed regulation.

A similar letter has been sent to Senator Levin.

Sincerely,

HARVEY S. GORDON,
MARY ANN GILLEECE,
Deputy Under Secretary (Acquisition Management).

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I believe the amendment is one that is agreed to by the managers of this bill, and I urge its adoption at this time.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, the amendment being offered by the Senator from New Mexico was contained in the Senate's version of the DOD fiscal year authorization bill which passed the Senate on June 21. We have no objection to its being added to S. 2489.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, may I say how indebted all of us are for the outstanding work done by the distinguished Senator from Indiana as chairman of the task force of the Armed Services Committee that incorporated all of these provisions into the DOD authorization bill.

I also thank the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] for his outstanding work. He cooperated fully and was at all the committee hearings. The amendment he has offered requires the Secretary of Defense to submit a plan to the Congress for upgrading the Department of Defense computer capability which is needed for the efficient procurement of spare parts. I can think of no issue before the American public today more important in connection with procurement policies. I am delighted to announce that this side enthusiastically supports the amendment by the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back?

All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment (No. 3605) was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, while there are Senators on the floor, I ask at this time for the yeas and nays on final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3606

(Purpose: To improve the procedures for procuring spare parts and other supplies, for encouraging contracting personnel to promote competition in contracting, and for making procurement regulations)

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] proposes an amendment numbered 3606.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 38, between lines 8 and 9, insert the following new sections:

COMMERCIAL PRICING FOR SPARE PARTS

SEC. 13. (a) Section 15 of the Small Business Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(s)(1) Except in the case of an offer submitted with a written statement under paragraph (2) and except as provided in paragraph (3), a contract made by an agency for the purchase of spare or replacement parts offered for sale to the general public may not result in a cost to the United States that exceeds the lowest price at which such parts are made available by the contractor to commercial buyers.

"(2) A person who submits an offer to an agency for the supply of spare or replacement parts having commercial application shall certify that the offered price is its lowest commercial price for the items submitted, or shall submit with the offer a written statement specifying the difference between the lowest commercial price of the offeror for the parts and the price offered and providing a justification for that difference.

"(3) Paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply to a contract if the contracting officer determines that the use of the price otherwise required by paragraph (1) for such contract is not appropriate because of—

"(A) national security considerations; or

"(B) differences in quantities, quality, delivery, or other terms and conditions of the contract from commercial contract terms.".

(b) Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the single system of Government-wide procurement regulations (as defined in section 4 (4) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403 (4))) shall be revised to include provisions specifying the manner in which each executive agency (as defined in section 4(1) of such Act (41 U.S.C. 403 (1))) may negotiate prices for supplies procured from a contractor which does not produce the supplies and does not add significant value to the total value of the supplies. The regulation shall include provisions reasonably limiting the amount of overhead costs which such a contractor may allocate to any item of supplies.

ECONOMIC ORDER QUANTITIES

SEC. 14. Section 15 of the Small Business Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(t)(1)(A) Each Federal agency shall procure supplies in such quantity as (i) will result in the total cost and unit cost most advantageous to the United States, when practicable, and (ii) does not exceed the quantity reasonably expected to be required by the agency during a fiscal year or longer period for which an appropriation is available for the purpose of procuring such supplies.

"(B) The head of a Federal agency shall take subparagraph (A) into account in approving rates of obligation of appropriations.

"(2) Each solicitation for a supply contract shall include a clause requesting each contractor responding to the solicitation to state an opinion on whether the quantity of the supplies proposed to be procured is economically advantageous to the United States and, if applicable, to recommend two quantities which would be more economically advantageous to the United States. Each such recommendation shall include a quotation of the total price and the unit price for supplies procured in each recommended quantity.".

PUBLICATION OF PROPOSED REGULATIONS

SEC. 15. The Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 401 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof "Changes to the single system of Government-wide procurement regulations (as defined in section 4(4) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403 (4))), including supplemental regulations to agency acquisition regulations, may not take effect until the date thirty days after the date such regulations have been published in the Federal Register for public comment."

PERSONNEL EVALUATIONS TO INCLUDE EMPHASIS ON COMPETITION AND COST SAVINGS

SEC. 16. Section 15 of the Small Business Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(u) The head of each Federal agency shall establish procedures to ensure that personnel appraisal systems of the agency given appropriate recognition to efforts to increase competition and achieve cost savings in areas relating to the contracts of the agency.".

Redesignate the succeeding sections accordingly.

On page 53, line 18, strike out the end quotation marks and the period after the end quotation marks.

On page 53, between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

§ 2321. Commercial pricing for spare parts

"(a)(1) Except in the case of an offer submitted with a written statement under subsection (b), and except as provided in subsection (c), a contract made by any agency referred to in section 2303(a) of this title for the purchase of spare or replacement parts offered for sale to the general public may not result in a cost to the United States that exceeds the lowest price at which such parts are made available by the contractor to commercial buyers.

"(b) A person who submits an offer to such an agency for the supply of spare or replacement parts having commercial application shall certify that the offered price is its lowest commercial price for the items submitted, or shall submit with the offer a written statement specifying the difference between the lowest commercial price of the offeror for the parts and the price offered and providing a justification for that difference.

"(c) Subsections (a) and (b) do not apply to a contract if the contracting officer determines that the use of the price otherwise required by paragraph (1) for such contract is not appropriate because of—

"(A) national security considerations; or

"(B) differences in quantities, quality, delivery, or other terms and conditions of the contract from commercial contract terms.".

On page 53, at the end of the last item set out after line 21, strike out the end quotation marks and the period after the end quotation marks.

On page 53, at the end of the matter set out after line 21, add the following:

"2321. Commercial pricing for spare parts.".

On page 59, between line 3 (and the material set out after line 3) and line 4, insert the following:

(d)(1) Chapter 137 of title 10, United States Code (as amended by subsection (a)(1)), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 2322. Encouragement of competition and cost savings

"The Secretary of Defense shall establish procedures to ensure that personnel appraisal systems of the Department of Defense give appropriate recognition to efforts to increase competition and achieve cost savings in areas relating to contracts covered by this chapter.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter (as amended by subsection (a)(2)) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"2322. Encouragement of competition and cost savings.".

(e) Section 2303 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Regulations prescribed under this chapter by the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of a military department may not take effect until thirty days after such regulations have been published in the Federal Register for public comment.".

(f)(1) Chapter 141 of title 10, United States Code (as amended by subsection (c)(1)), is further amended by inserting after section 2384 the following new section:

"§ 2384a. Supplies: economic order quantities

"(a)(1) An agency referred to in section 2303 (a) of this title shall procure supplies in such quantity as (A) will result in the total cost and unit cost most advantageous to the United States, where practicable, and (B) does not exceed the quantity reasonably expected to be required by the agency during a fiscal year or longer period for which an appropriation is available for the purpose of procuring such supplies.

"(2) The Secretary of Defense shall take paragraph (1) into account in approving rates of obligation of appropriations under section 2204 of this title.

"(b) Each solicitation for a supply contract shall include a clause requesting each contractor responding to the solicitation to state an opinion on whether the quantity of the supplies proposed to be procured is economically advantageous to the United States and, if applicable, to recommend two quantities which would be more economically advantageous to the United States. Each such recommendation shall include a quotation of the total price and the unit price for supplies procured in each recommended quantity.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter (as amended by subsection (c)(2)) is further amended by inserting after the item relating to section 2384 the following new item:

"2384a. Supplies: economic order quantities.".

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is considering S. 2489, the Small Business and Federal Procurement Competition Enhancement Act of 1984.

Senators WEICKER and DIXON have performed a great service to the taxpayers as well as to small business people all over the country. I am also proud to cosponsor it and to have participated in shaping it in both the Small Business and the Armed Services Committees.

I also wish to commend and congratulate my friend, Senator QUAYLE, from Indiana, for the active service that he has performed in helping to share this legislation and in saving taxpayers so many dollars that is going to result from this legislation being passed.

Before I speak to my own amendment, I wish to say a few words about S. 2489's treatment of the issue of technical data rights. Those are the property rights which companies claim for items that they produce at their own expenses. Some 18 months ago I began an indepth study of some of the causes of the overpricing of spare parts and the causes were many. Such a study of the Government procurement process is not a particularly glamorous undertaking. But by most accounts, the spare parts procurement tab this year will top $18 billion. So I strongly believe that if we are to continue asking the American public to foot this enormous bill we must ensure that the money is spent sensibly and sanely.

On April 12, 1984, along with Senators BINGAMAN and JEPSEN, I introduced S. 2571 and S. 2572. S. 2571 was the result of nearly a full year's study of procurement on my part and incorporated my 20-point package for procurement reform, while S. 2572 was the text of the House bill that was subsequently included in the House DOD authorization bill. When S. 2489 was referred to the Senate Armed Services Committee's Ad Hoc Task Force on Procurement we blended these three bills together to come out with one position on the treatment of rights in data.

We concluded that technical data rights should be the subject of negotiations between the contractor and the Government and that a contractor's willingness to give up those rights immediately or after a fixed period of time should be one element to consider in deciding to whom a contract should be awarded.

To strengthen the Government's hand, we also included provisions governing the review of alleged rights in data as well as allowing both Government and third parties to attempt to reverse engineer proprietary items in order to obtain competition.

What we did not do in this bill was conclude that rights should automatically become the property of the Government after a certain period of time unless the development of the part was funded with Government money. We did not do so because it would discourage industry from offering the latest technology to the Government when they developed that technology at their own expense.

I again commend the authors of this bill, as well as the Small Business and Armed Services Committees, for reaching a balanced treatment for a very controversial issue.

Now, Mr. President, I have sent to the desk an amendment containing five provisions. Four of these provisions on procurement reform were part of a bill which I introduced on April 12 in the Senate as S. 2571. All five of these provisions were included in the fiscal year 1985 DOD authorization bill at my urging, and I might add that the body of S. 2489 already contains 8 of the 20 proposals which were in my original package.

These five provisions, as previously passed by the Senate, covered only the DOD, which spends more than 80 percent of the Federal procurement dollars. However, in my amendment today, four of the provisions have been expanded to cover the remaining 15 to 20 percent of procurement dollars by being applied Governmentwide. These four provisions are as follows:

First. The lowest commercial price is going to be required. When a contractor sells the Government an item that the contractor also sells to the general public, he will be required to state that the price cited is lower than or equal to the lowest commercial price. Should that statement prove to be false, the Government may pursue a claim under the False Claims Act.

Second. Economic order quantities will be sought. In order to stop the process of Government purchases of one or two items, when it is clear that there is a steady need for an item over a long period of time, contractors will be requested to notify the Government when solicitation quantities are unreasonable. No one can deny that beginning a production line for 10 small specially machined items is ineffective and uneconomical for both the business concern and the Government procurement official's time.

Third. Purchasing officials who save money for the Government will be rewarded. Employee review regulations currently do not appear to contain any incentive for employees to attempt to save the Government money. In fact, when there is an emphasis on speed of processing absent a recognition that competition and good bargaining takes time, there is an implied disincentive for employees who attempt to save the Government money. This amendment would require that these regulations governing employee recognition be rewritten to reward money-saving behavior.

Fourth. Proposed regulations relative to procurement are going to have to be published. Currently, procurement regulations are exempt from the publication and review standards included in the Administrative Procedures Act. This amendment would require that procurement regulations be published in the future in order that they may be widely disseminated and more fully understood by the public and the businesspeople who must deal with these regulations.

Mr. President, there is also a fifth provision in this amendment which applies only to the Department of Defense and that provision is that overhead allocation to parts for which little or no value has been added by the contractor must be restricted. In my study of spare parts pricing, I have come across cases where large amounts of overhead have been added to spare parts for which the contractor has added little or no value. In fact, in some cases these parts have been shipped directly from the subcontractor to the Government, and the parts have never touched the contractor's hands. In cases such as these, my amendment would require the regulations to be rewritten to block all but a minimal allocation of overhead. It was the excessive overhead which was allocated to the famous Allen wrench which resulted in the Air Force being billed $9,600 for that Allen wrench. As drafted, this portion of my amendment would apply only to DOD, as we are currently unaware of instances of this problem existing outside of the defense contractor community. Should examples of this type of abuse come to light elsewhere in the Government, then we would, of course, revisit this issue and consider offering an amendment for Governmentwide application.

I again commend the authors of this bill, Senators WEICKER and DIXON. They, along with Senator QUAYLE, with whom I worked on these matters on the Armed Services Committee, have performed a real service for the taxpayers of this country. I sincerely hope the conference on the Department of Defense authorization bill will resume progress but in the event that progress there should not be forthcoming, I thank my colleagues for allowing me to add these amendments on this important matter to this small business bill that already contains much that should help control the runaway costs of spare parts.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, we are prepared to accept the amendments offered by the distinguished Senator from Michigan, and I wish to personally commend him for his input into this bill.

He has been an outstanding member of the Small Business Committee and more particularly the work which he has brought to the final product.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I wish to share those remarks of my distinguished colleague from Connecticut, the distinguished chairman of the Small Business Committee. My friend from Michigan played a very significant part throughout the entire proceedings on this bill, particularly working with my distinguished and warm friend from Indiana, Senator QUAYLE, in connection with this whole problem.

The Levin amendment would add to the bill identical dual statutory provisions that are applicable to both the civilian agencies through amendments to title 15 of the United States Code and the military agencies through amendments to title 10 of the United States Code.

We are all indebted to him for his outstanding contribution in this field. This side is delighted to support the amendment of my distinguished friend from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am grateful to my friend from Connecticut.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. WEICKER. I yield back my time.

Mr. DIXON. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment (No. 3606) was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my name be added as a cosponsor of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, lack of competition, seemingly systematic in many Federal purchasing offices, has resulted in outrageous cost overruns and excessive payments by the Government for basic needs. In addition, the present structure of the Federal procurement system has led many of our Nation's small businesses, our leading innovators and job creators, to avoid contracting with the No. 1 purchaser of goods and services in this country—the U.S. Government. Today, we are offered an opportunity to address these problems in a constructive manner and to alleviate several procurement-related difficulties.

The legislation we are considering today reflects the efforts of myself and many of my colleagues to cut down the waste in Government procurement and to make the entire procurement process more competitive. I have been following this issue for some time now, Mr. President. I chaired field hearings of the Small Business Committee in Nashville, TN, last fall to examine many of the obstacles facing small firms wanting to contract with the Government. My findings and those from similar field hearings added to the record which resulted in comprehensive procurement legislation reported out of the Small Business Committee earlier this session.

Some of the provisions of this legislation were adopted during Senate consideration of the Department of Defense authorization bill. Omitted at that time were two important provisions of S. 2489 which could prove critical to achieving our goals in reforming the procurement system. Specifically, these sections deal with the quality of procurement notices appearing in the Commerce Business Daily, the primary source for small businesses about upcoming Government contracts, and with the Small Business Administration's Breakout Procurement Center Representative Program.

I am particularly interested in the sections we are considering today dealing with this latter point. One study on factors affecting small business participation in Federal procurements found that breakout efforts constitute potentially, the single most important mechanism for increasing the number of procurement dollars going to small business. As some of my colleagues know, the Small Business Administration presently has a pilot program involving a few breakout procurement center representatives who review various contracts at purchasing centers and recommend competitive procurements where warranted.

During the hearing I chaired in Nashville, we heard from the breakout procurement center representative at the logistics center at Warner-Robbins airbase in Georgia. He testified that SBA's pilot breakout program had already saved the taxpayers nearly $30 million. As we increase the number of breakout procurement center representatives in S. 2489, I am confident that we will see this level of savings increase as more and more small firms are given an opportunity to compete on Government contracts.

Another aspect of the Breakout Procurement Center Representative Program that I find appealing is that it addresses the issue of accountability. Witness after witness at the Nashville hearings testified that they avoided Government procurement as no one in the Federal Government was accountable for dealings with small business firms. They believed, and rightly so, that most procurement officials had little or no time for the concerns of the small business owner. This bill goes far in rectifying this situation, since the primary focus of the Breakout Procurement Center Representative Program focuses on making more procurement contracts competitive. In so doing, I believe it squarely addresses the accountability issue. We now have individuals whose primary responsibility is to see that more firms are given a chance to bid on Government contracts. This opportunity to compete is all that our small business owners ask for.

In closing, Mr. President, I commend those Senators who have labored long and hard on this piece of legislation. It has been a time consuming task, but one well worth the effort. I urge my colleagues to join us today in passing this important piece of legislation.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER], who is a member of the Small Business Committee, has made substantial contributions in connection with this measure, as well.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I am pleased that today the Senate will consider the "Small Business Competition Enhancement Act of 1984," by incorporating the provisions of S. 2489 into the House-passed small business bill. This legislation will take us a long way in our efforts to reduce the Government's waste in spending, and I am proud to be a cosponsor.

Mr. President, this legislation contains many provisions which will sharpen up our spare parts procurement policies, and they certainly need sharpening. This legislation has already received approval from both the Small Business and Armed Services Committees, and will alleviate many of the complicated and interrelated obstacles that limit competition in the Federal procurement process. This legislation will require Federal agencies to plan for competitive bidding, establish a procedure for validating proprietory data claims asserted by contractors, bring to order the morass of prequalification requirements employed by agencies to regulate potential contractors and products, and will provide incentives for major contractors to cooperate in the procurement process. These, along with the legislation's other provisions, will enable us to take a great step toward ridding ourselves of a giant problem—excessive spare parts spending.

I am particularly pleased that this legislation incorporates the provisions of S. 2434—a bill I introduced earlier this year that will provide greater small business participation in spare parts procurement. Indeed, I am especially encouraged that the provisions of my bill will be signed into law because the House-passed small business bill the Senate is considering today is the companion bill in the House that contains the provisions of my bill. The passage of the House bill is the result of the bipartisan, dedicated efforts and hard work of its author, Congresswoman BARBARA BOXER of California. Although the Senate procurement legislation includes broader procurement reforms, the bipartisan support for the legislation pushed by Congresswoman BOXER and myself has been the driving force behind small business procurement legislation. As a result, both the House-passed legislation and the Senate bill include the provisions of my bill, virtually assuring that they will be enacted into law this Congress.

Mr. President, the provisions of the legislation pushed by Congresswoman BARBARA BOXER and myself were established with two main goals: first, to achieve substantial savings in the cost of spare parts purchased by the Government; and second, to provide small businesses with greater opportunities to bid on spare parts contracts.

These goals can be achieved by applying the guiding principle of our free enterprise system—competition—to the spare parts procurement process. Purchasing spare parts through competitive bidding will not only save the Government substantial sums of money, it will give small business a bigger piece of the Government pie because small business is very competitive.

Mr. President, we have all heard horror stories about how the Government pays exorbitant prices for the goods it buys. Unfortunately, there is a lot of truth to these stories. And, too often the Department of Defense [DOD] pays too much for spare parts. These are some of the prices DOD has paid for spare parts: $436 for an ordinary clawhammer, $440 for a $5 plastic knob, $94 for a $6 rubber door gasket, $153 for a $6 piece of bent sheet metal with three holes drilled into it, and the list could go on. Surely none of these items are so unique or so important to the national security that the exorbitant prices can be justified.

So why does DOD pay so much for so little? The answer is found in how DOD purchases spare parts. Indeed, it is how DOD does not purchase spare parts.

In fiscal year 1983, DOD awarded some 13 million contracts worth about $140 billion. Each year, DOD spends $13 billion for spare parts alone. The sheer magnitude of these numbers is staggering. But, DOD's record on competitive bidding is shocking—80 percent of spare parts contracts are awarded to sole source suppliers—specific firms designated as the sole supplier of the part—without competitive bidding. Common sense tells us that more than 20 percent of the spare parts can be purchased from more than one supplier. And, where more than one firm can supply the part, competitive bidding can be used.

This legislation will result in more competitive bidding on spare parts contracts by assigning Small Business Administration personnel to major procurement centers for the sole purposes of identifying spare parts contracts that can be awarded through competitive bidding. One SBA employee—called a procurement center representative or PCR—will be assigned to each procurement center that spent at least $150 million on spare parts in the previous year. Each PCR will be assigned four technical advisers that are employed by the procurement center and have technical training. At least one of the technical advisers must be an accredited engineer.

Each PCR will identify contracts for competitive bidding by reviewing the procurement codes assigned to spare parts to be purchased or replenished. Simply stated, a procurement method code tells the buyer how to select a supplier of the spare part: Through competitive bidding, or through a sole source or direct purchase from a single specified supplier. The PCR will break out contracts that have restricted codes for competitive bidding.

The PCR will also review proposals to consolidate a number of spare parts contracts into one contract solicitation and make recommendations to break out some, or all, of these contracts for competitive bidding. In addition, the PCR will receive value engineering change proposals. These are proposals submitted by potential contractors to supply spare parts or equipment that have been modified from the original specifications, but perform the same function. This will facilitate a determination that the modified parts or equipment can perform the same function at a lower cost, instead of the parts or equipment designated in the original specifications.

Mr. President, it is important to note that this legislation follows a spare parts break out program successfully operating at four Air Force air logistics centers since 1979. GAO conducted an indepth review of the four programs and came to some compelling conclusions. Of some 328,000 spare parts assigned procurement method codes, 75 percent were coded for purchase without competitive bidding. SBA personnel achieved substantial savings by breaking out spare parts contracts for competitive bidding. Indeed, SBA reported savings of $7.3 million as a result of only 294 breakout actions. GAO believes the savings were actually greater. In a separate study, SBA showed savings of $6.7 million—38 percent—when only 191 parts were broken out for small business competition. On the basis of these studies and GAO reports, this legislation could save $4 billion—each year.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that material in connection with this measure be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOSCHWITZ PROVISIONS OF S. 2489 ON PROCUREMENT CENTER REPRESENTATIVES

SBA assigns a Procurement Center Representative (PCR) to each major procurement center (center with at least $150 million spare parts contracts in previous year).

Each PCR will be assigned qualified, technically trained advisers, at least one of whom is an accredited engineer.

The technical advisers will be employees of the major procurement center and have the primary duty of assisting the PCR.

Each PCR has the authority and responsibility to:

Review procurement method codes (PMCs) to identify restrictive codes and recommends changes in restrictive codes to encourage competitive bidding.

Evaluate whether technical data to be used by small business in submitting bids is available from any source (including the major procurement center) and obtain unrestricted data for use by small business.

Review restrictions on access to technical data because an existing contractor claims a proprietary right to the data. The PCR can recommend that such restrictions be reevaluated.

Participate in making the determination of whether to award contracts without competitive bidding.

BOSCHWITZ AMENDMENTS TO PCR PROVISIONS (ADOPTED BY COMMITTEE)

Include in PCR's authority and responsibility:

Authority for PCR to receive unsolicited value—engineering proposals—a proposal to supply spare parts or equipment that have been modified from the original specifications but perform the same function—and submit them to procurement center personnel for review; and Review the procurement center's procurement policies and practices and recommend changes to increase competition. The Administrator of SBA will pursue recommendations with the other agency.

PCR PILOT PROGRAM HISTORY

Since 1979, a spare parts breakout program has been in operation at each of four Air Force Logistics Centers. GAO conducted an indepth review of the four programs. During the period of GAO's review, these four centers purchased a combined total of $7.46 billion in goods and services. GAO found that, of the 328,000 spare parts assigned PMCs, only 25 percent were coded for competitive bidding; 75 percent were coded for sole source or direct purchase procurement. SBA reported savings of about $7.3 million as a result of only 294 breakout actions. GAO believes that "SBA may actually be saving the government more money than its reports indicate."

ESTIMATED COST SAVINGS

$4 billion per year—based on GAO study and a separate SBA study verified by GAO.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 2489, the Small Business Competition Enhancement Act of 1984. Passage of this legislation is long overdue.

Like many of my colleagues, I have been appalled by the reports of spare parts bought by the Federal Government at prices much higher than necessary. While the greatest culprits have been the military services, these cases are examples of a much wider, far-reaching problem.

Since coming to Congress, I have supported legislation to open up Federal procurement procedures to small businesses. In fact, I was very proud last year when President Reagan signed into law my legislation making procurement information more readily accessible to small businesses. S. 2489 will open up the process even further.

I have always believed that competition will produce the best results—in people and in business. Indeed, our country was founded on the principles of fair and open competition among businesses. Unfortunately, the Federal Government has repeatedly ignored this most basic of values. Restrictive procurement policies have not only cheated small businesses of valuable business opportunities but have also cheated the American taxpayer by denying a fair return on their tax dollars.

I come from a State where almost all our businesses are small businesses. They are owned by honest, hardworking people who are still struggling to make ends meet under difficult economic conditions.

While some of these businesses may not have the expertise to sell goods to the Government, it is my belief that this expertise could be developed with Government assistance. If we do not encourage our businesses to stretch out, to take advantage of new opportunities, we doom them to economic stagnation. If, on the other hand, the Federal Government will make an effort to bring new businesses into the procurement process, businesses will expand, create new jobs and help the economy.

When a part that costs under $1 is sold to the Government for several hundred dollars, something is wrong. When Federal agencies ignore the many fine small businesses able to fill Government contracts, something is wrong. It is my hope the Senate will pass S. 2489 and allow these wrongs to be righted.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, it is with great pride that I rise today in support of the Small Business Competition Enhancement Act of 1984. This bill deals with the very complicated and often interrelated obstacles which often limit the opportunities for small business to enter and compete in the Government procurement process. This is a difficult problem and I want to compliment both Chairman WEICKER and Chairman TOWER of the Small Business and Armed Services Committees for their diligence and commitment in producing this bill. We have all heard the stories about hammers procured by Federal agencies which cost many times their actual worth due to the crazy quilt of procurement regulations and thus I am pleased that we have been able to produce a bill which will address and hopefully resolve some of these problems.

Mr. President, I am hopeful that the Senate, by supporting this bill today will take an important step toward ending abuse and waste in Government contracting and that through these efforts we can simultaneously give small business a better opportunity to provide the quality products at competitive prices that we know it can do. This bill provides no new set-aside for small business; on the contrary, it just gives small business an equal chance to compete with the much bigger companies who traditionally do the lion's share of the Government's contracting business.

As I understand this bill, it deals with five overriding issues in Federal procurement policy: planning for future competition, increasing the ability of small business to compete for Federal procurement contracts, managing technical data to foster future, competition, validating proprietary data restrictions, and establishing breakout procurement center representatives [BPCR].

I want to add just an additional comment on the breakout procurement center representative program [BPCR] which as many of my colleagues know has been extremely successful to date. This program identifies spare parts that are being purchased on a noncompetitive basis or sole source basis and "breaks them out" so that they can be competitively bid by small business. Essentially, they are advocates for competition. According to the General Accounting Office which has reviewed the pilot program, of the 1,634 items broken out a savings of almost $36 million was realized. I know we all want to see more of this kind of innovative savings program that small business can produce.

Mr. President, this bill represents an innovative and aggressive response to a problem that has been with us for too long and I am delighted to join my colleagues in support of S. 2489.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, we are waiting for Senators BYRD and NUNN, who I understand have amendments to the bill about which the committee is enthusiastic and prepared to accept. As soon as that is done, we can wrap up this matter and schedule a vote for a little later this afternoon.

Mr. DIXON. The ranking minority member of the Small Business Committee is on the floor.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], the ranking minority member of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. President, as the ranking Democratic member of the Senate Small Business Committee, and a cosponsor of this bill, I rise in support of S. 2489, the Small Business and Federal Procurement Competition Enhancement Act of 1984. This bill, which was introduced by Senators WEICKER and DIXON, is another product of the extensive work we have done in the Small Business Committee over the past several years in the important area of Federal procurement. The bill is designed to remove procedural barriers in the Federal procurement system which limit the competitive opportunities for small businesses and others. The legislation will also provide for the expansion of the SBA breakout procurement center representatives program and address several procurement practices in the Small Business Administration.

The legislation is carefully designed to ensure that no single type or size of business is given any competitive edge; rather, it has been formulated specifically to ensure that all businesses that want to participate in the Federal procurement process are treated equally. The legislation is designed to ensure that the Federal Government is provided with full and complete information about the nature of the items it is about to purchase so that it can make a conscious decision about the cost and provisioning for spare and replacement parts for major systems. Finally, the legislation is designed to provide for a regularized process for planning for future competition in Federal procurements.

With the amendments that have been offered by both the Small Business and Armed Services Committees, we now have pending before the Senate legislation that will truly help stem the tide of sole source contract awards and minimize the likelihood of overpricing for spare and replacement parts in the Department of Defense. This legislation should also reverse the decline in the rate of small business Federal procurement awards.

Mr. President, I know that many procurement officials in the Pentagon will oppose this legislation. They have told us how they are taking administrative action to correct these problems, how they have "identified" the horror stories about overpricing for spare parts and the waste from prematurely disposing of valuable Government property. I don't believe that this is enough. Frankly, I am concerned about the commitment within the Pentagon and within the White House to truly redress these problems. A recent statement by a Republican member of the House Armed Services Committee troubled me. He said:

(T)he Reagan Administration, conservative on economic and defense issues, resists wholesale competition in defense procurement. . . . The President's conservative friends in Congress have tried to convince him of the value of competitive procurement. Perhaps the prospects of debating a Democratic Presidential candidate will succeed where the urgings of conservatives have failed in getting the President to face this serious inconsistency in his defense policy.

So, while the administrative action will be helpful, clearly Congress must legislatively correct some of the problems, and impose on the procurement process a clear and unambiguous system for enhancing competition. Congress has already taken several actions in that direction, and this legislation is another important link in that chain.

Mr. President, I want to compliment in particular the Senator from Illinois, Senator DIXON, for taking the initiative on the legislation (S. 1730) which he introduced exactly 1 year ago. Many of the solutions which are proposed in this legislation are his, or flowed from his identification of the specific problems which small business faces in the procurement process. I am pleased to note that I was a cosponsor of his earlier bill, as well.

I also want to note the significant contributions which the Senator from Michigan, Senator LEVIN, has made to this bill. His extensive knowledge of the Federal procurement system and his commitment to ensure that small businesses are provided with a full opportunity to compete for Federal contracts have helped us develop this excellent legislation.

Mr. President, as the ranking Democratic member of the Senate Small Business Committee, I pledge that I will do all that I can to expedite a conference with the House, and work vigorously to see the Small Business and Federal Procurement Enhancement Act of 1984 enacted into law. I urge the Senate to promptly pass S. 2489.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the yeas and nays ordered on S. 2489 be transferred to H.R. 4209.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3607

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for himself, Mr. NICKLES, and Mr. LEVIN, proposes an amendment numbered 3607.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add a new section, as follows:

ADVOCATE FOR COMPETITION

SEC. . (a) Chapter 137 of title 10, United States Code, is further amended by inserting after section 2306 the following new section:

"§ 2306a. Office of the Competition Advocate General

"(a)(1) There is in the executive part of each agency referred to in section 2303(a) of this title an Office of the Competition Advocate General (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Office'). The head of the Office is the Competition Advocate General.

"(2) The head of a military department or the Coast Guard shall designate a commissioned officer of the armed forces who is serving on active duty in a grade not below colonel or, in the case of an officer in the Navy or the Coast Guard, serving in a grade not below captain, to be the Competition Advocate General of the agency. The head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration shall designate a civilian in a grade not below GS-16 to be the Competition Advocate General of the agency. The designation shall be for a term of two years. An officer of the armed forces while serving as the Competition Advocate General shall have the grade of major general or rear admiral, as appropriate, unless entitled to a higher grade under another provision of law.

"(3) The head of an agency shall provide the Competition Advocate General of the agency such staff or assistance as may be necessary to carry out the duties and responsibilities of the advocate for competition.

"(b)(1) The Office of the Competition Advocate General of an agency shall, under the direction of the head of the agency, promote competition in the procurement of property and services by the agency.

"(2) The Office of the Competition Advocate General of an agency shall, under the direction of the head of the agency—

"(A) review the purchasing and contracting activities of the agency;

"(B) identify and report to the head of the agency—

"(i) opportunities to achieve competition on the basis of price and other significant factors in the purchases and contracts of the executive agency;

"(ii) solicitations and proposed solicitations which include unnecessarily detailed specifications or unnecessarily restrictive statements of need which may reduce competition in the procurement activities of the executive agency; and

"(iii) any other condition or action which has the effect of unnecessarily restricting competition in the procurement actions of the agency.

"(c)(1) The Competition Advocate General of an agency shall review each proposed noncompetitive procurement in the agency involving more than $100,000 before a solicitation for the procurement is issued and shall recommend to the procurement or program officer involved specific acquisition actions as appropriate.

"(2) An agency need not delay the issuance of a solicitation for a noncompetitive procurement for more than 10 working days in the event of a procurement of more than $100,000 but less than $10,000,000, or for more than 15 working days in the event of a procurement of $10,000,000 or more, for the purposes of permitting the Competition Advocate General to accomplish the review referred to in subsection (c)(1).

"(3) The agency may waive submission of a solicitation for a noncompetitive procurement to the Competition Advocate General if—

"(A) the solicitation deals with a highly classified program and the head of the agency, or his designee not below the level of an Assistant Secretary, determines that review by the Competition Advocate General is not consistent with the security requirements of such program; or

"(B) the head of the agency, or his designee not below the level of an Assistant Secretary, determines that the urgency of the procurement is of such an extreme nature that the procurements should not be delayed for review by the Competition Advocate General.

"(4) At least 15 days before a procurement or program officer takes or directs an action inconsistent with a recommendation made by a Competition Advocate General under paragraph (1), the officer shall submit a written justification for such action to the head of the procuring activity, and shall transmit a copy of the justification to the Competition Advocate General of the agency.

"(d)(1) Each head of an agency shall transmit annually to the Senate and the House of Representatives a report detailing any procurements made by the agency which were inconsistent with any recommendation made under subsection (c)(1). Such annual report shall include the annual report required by paragraph (2) to be made by the Competition Advocate General of the agency.

"(2) Each Competition Advocate General of an agency shall prepare and transmit to the head of the agency an annual report describing the activities of the Office under this section during the preceding year.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 2306 the following new item:

"2306a. Office of the Competition Advocate General.".

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of Mr. LEVIN be added as a cosponsor of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

OFFICE OF THE COMPETITION ADVOCATE GENERAL

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment is identical to an amendment which I offered to the fiscal year 1985 Department of Defense authorization regarding the establishment of an Office of a Competition Advocate General in our armed services and NASA. The amendment was adopted on June 8, 1984, by a record vote of 80 to 4, after having been modified as a result of discussions with the distinguished Senator from the State of Indiana [Mr. QUAYLE] and the distinguished Senator from the State of Michigan [Mr. LEVIN].

The intent of the amendment which I offered, and which I again now offer, is to put real teeth into the competition advocate proposal originally incorporated into the DOD bill. The provision in the bill simply required that a full-time advocate for competition be assigned for each service. In promoting competition, the advocate must review all purchasing and contracting activities of the agency and report to the service chief on opportunities for expanding competition on the basis of price and other factors. He must identify solicitations which are written in a restrictive manner and which result in reducing opportunities for competition. Finally, he must provide an annual report to the service chief.

I believe it is necessary to give these competition advocates more stature, more clout, and more tools to do their difficult jobs, and my amendment would provide the following strengthening factors.

First, it gives a competition advocate clout within his own service by requiring that he be a flag officer—that is, either a general or admiral, depending on his specific service.

Second, in order to sustain his staying power and have the time to learn his job and be effective, that he hold the job for a term of 2 years.

Third, it beefs up his specific responsibilities by requiring him to review each proposed noncompetitive procurement involving more than $100,000 and make appropriate recommendations to the contracting officers before solicitations are made. If the action by the procurement or contracting officer is inconsistent with the advocate's recommendation, the procurement officer must justify his action in writing.

Finally, the head of the military service is required to report annually to the Congress any procurements made by his service which were inconsistent with the recommendations made by the competition advocate. This report must include a separate report on his annual activities by the competition advocate himself which includes his explanations in each case of disagreement.

My intent in offering this amendment is to shake up the system to halt the ingrained habits of procurement officials, and enforce fresh and constant reviews of the adequacy of competition within the procurement process.

I feel compelled to again offer this proposal because unfortunately, the DOD conference committee has been stalled, and I hope that we will not see everything go out the window. If that conference does not come back with a conference report, I hope by incorporating this amendment into this bill that this mechanism to increase competition and reduce waste in the Pentagon will become law.

I have discussed the amendment with the distinguished managers of the bill. I hope they will find it possible to accept this amendment.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator of West Virginia. As my colleagues will recall, this same amendment was offered during consideration of the 1985 Defense Authorization bill. This amendment was accepted by the Senate on June 8. It is appropriate that the amendment be added as part of this bill, S. 2489, the Small Business Enhancement Act of 1984, because there is an urgent need to establish a means by which small businesses can be made more aware of contracts being sought by the Department of Defense.

At the same time, this amendment, which will establish an office of the competition advocate general, will signal to the Department of Defense the desire of Congress that more competitive bidding be made available in the acquisition of parts, products, and services. It has been known for a long time in the private sector that the only way to get a good buy is to shop around. The advocate general office will make great strides in promoting a more competitive atmosphere in the Department of Defense procurement process.

During hearings I held in Oklahoma City in January, it became even more evident to me that small businesses face too many obstacles in trying to obtain Government contracts. Expansive paperwork and nearly unattainable qualification requirements make it close to impossible for the majority of small businesses to participate in the DOD contract process.

I commend the distinguished minority leader in seeking to add this amendment to S. 2489 and join him as a cosponsor. In addition, I urge my colleagues to support the bill before us, S. 2489, which establishes sound, workable ways to increase new competition in all Federal procurement processes.

Mr. President, there are thousands of highly capable small companies across our Nation who are just waiting for the chance to make parts for the Government at lower prices and shorter delivery times. The bill goes a long way in making it possible for more small businesses to become involved in the procurement process and I urge its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from West Virginia for his positive contribution to the legislation before this body, and certainly we have no objection to its being added to S. 2489. We feel it clearly improves the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I congratulate the distinguished Democratic leader, Senator BYRD from West Virginia, for his outstanding contribution to this legislation, and this side is delighted to enthusiastically accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. WEICKER. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DIXON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

The amendment (No. 3607) was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank both the distinguished managers.

Mr. WEICKER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, we have one more amendment to handle which is that of the distinguished Senator from Georgia, Mr. NUNN, whom I understand is due on the floor at any moment.

Awaiting that moment, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I am delighted to yield to the distinguished Senator from Georgia, our ranking member on the Armed Services Committee, for a substantial and invaluable contribution to this bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 3608

(Purpose: To establish minimum tour of duty lengths for military officers assigned to key procurement management positions in the Department of Defense)

Mr. NUNN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Illinois.

I send an amendment to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] proposes an amendment numbered 3608.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following new section:

"MINIMUM TOUR OF DUTY FOR OFFICERS ASSIGNED TO CERTAIN DUTIES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

SEC. —. (a) The tour of an officer of the Armed Forces assigned as a program manager of a major defense acquisition program (as defined in section 139a(a) of title 10, United States Code) shall be (1) not less than four years, or (2) until completion of a major program milestone (as defined in regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense).

(b) The tour of duty of an officer of the Armed Forces assigned as the commander of the Army Materiel Development and Readiness Command, the Naval Materiel Command, the Air Force Systems Command, or the Air Force Logistics Command shall not be less than four years.

(c) The length of the tour of duty prescribed in subsection (a) or (b) may be waived in the case of an officer by the Secretary of the military department of which the officer is a member. Such authority may not be delegated."

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, this amendment is not complicated nor complex. It is a part of the authorization bill which, unfortunately, is now in conference. We do not know what the final outcome of that conference will be. Some of us are optimistic, and others are pessimistic about the legislation which we have before us today. The amendment I propose, I hope, will be able to go through the legislative process, whatever the outcome of the authorization conference.

It is for that reason that I rise to present this amendment today.

This amendment addresses a very important part, in my view, of the overall procurement process. That is the turnover of key personnel managing key military systems known as systems that are covered by the selected Acquisition Report, the so-called SAR. This amendment would establish a mandatory tour length for certain procurement managers in the Department of Defense. It passed the Armed Services Committee unanimously. It has passed the Senate.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate Armed Services Committee report, which gives a full explanation of this amendment, be printed as part of the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, there is a general consensus that has emerged in the last couple of years that one of the biggest problems in the Department of Defense acquisition process for major weapons systems is program instability. Many causes of this instability are apparent. We lack a professional career acquisition work force in the military services. We have instability of defense budget levels. We have all sorts of defense bureaucracies in the Department of Defense. We also have a considerable burden to bear here in the Congress.

One of the things that is very apparent is that the average program manager's tenure for the major weapons systems procurement in all the services is not long enough. In the Army the average is 2.2 years, in the Navy 3 years, and in the Air Force 2.3 years. Also, it is apparent that the commanders of the procurement commands, the major commands in the services that handle procurement, also have a great deal of turnover. The average tenure of procurement command commanders for the past 15 years in the Army Material Development and Readiness Command is 3 years, in the Naval Material Command just under 3 years, and in the Air Force Logistics Command 2½ years. One of these procurement commands, the Air Force Systems Command, has not had a commanding officer stay for more than 3 years since 1970.

This kind of turnover, when it relates to command positions, may be understandable. I am not sure about that. But when it relates to procuring the most complicated, sophisticated weapons in the world, it simply is not effective nor is it efficient.

This amendment would establish, by law, a statutory tour of either 4 years or until at least completion of a major program milestone for program mangers. This would apply, again, to major weapons systems.

This also establishes a statutory tour of 4 years for commanders of the services' major procurement commands and it gives the service secretaries the authority to waive these tour lengths in unusual or unreasonable circumstances.

We are not trying to make the system rigid. We are not trying to say there are never any reasons for changing the 4-year period. We are saying that when those changes are necessary because of unusual circumstances, then the decision to make the changes should be at a high enough level so we are certain that it is indeed the exception rather than the rule.

That is the reason we have the service secretary be required to make the exception.

This kind of general statutory change is not entirely unprecedented. The Navy, for instance, has already adopted a 4-year tour length of their managers under Secretary Lehman. What we are saying is that now this Navy example, which has been a very recent action, should apply to the other services by law.

I am hopeful that this will give enough tenure in office to see that the whole system of accountability in military procurement is improved. I am hopeful that we will slowly but surely begin to shake the possible myth, but possible reality, that we have too many short-term decisions based on the old theory of "Don't let it happen on my watch," but not nearly enough long-range thinking in the procurement process and certainly not enough accountability.

I would hope that the committee managers, the Senator from Illinois on the Democratic side and the Senator from Connecticut on the Republican side, will accept this amendment. I am hopeful that the amendment will become law this year, as well as this bill.

Before giving up the floor, let me comment that I appreciate the leadership the Senator from Connecticut has offered on this bill in the Small Business Committee. The Senator from Illinois has rendered an unusual dual-hatted function by being both on the Armed Services Committee and the Small Business Committee and has done a lot of work on this. I also want to thank the Senator from Indiana [Mr. QUAYLE], who chaired the Procurement Task Force of the Armed Services Committee, and who substantially enhanced the passage of this bill.

I also want to congratulate the Senator from Michigan for hours and hours of diligent work in the Committee on Armed Services, on the broader issues of military procurement, on how we can find ways to make the system more competitive, and how we can really address the crucial question of why, with the tremendous advantages we have in the free competitive enterprise system in America, we cannot make our own military procurement system more competitive.

Indeed, one of the major advantages we have over the Soviet Union is our free enterprise system and its competitive advantage. Yet much of that advantage is lost in defense procurement unless we can fully explore the capabilities of our contractors by opening up the procurement process. That is what this bill is all about.

The Senator from Michigan has done tremendous work in this area. I want to thank him. As the ranking Democrat on the Armed Services Committee and the former ranking member of the Small Business Committee, I want to pay special tribute to both his efforts and the efforts of the Senator from Illinois in working on this very important problem.

Again, I have a great deal of admiration for the Senator from Connecticut for his work in this area and his overall leadership in the small business area.

Mr. President, I do not know whether further explanation is necessary on this amendment. I would be delighted to go into it further. I would be hopeful, however, that the Senator from Connecticut would agree to the amendment.

EXCERPT FROM SENATE REPORT NO. 98-500 ON THE OMNIBUS DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT, 1985

SEC. 199D, TENURE OF KEY PROCUREMENT MANAGERS IN THE MILITARY SERVICES

There is a general consensus that one of the major problems in the Department of Defense acquisition process is program instability. There are many causes of this instability, including instability of Defense budget levels and meddling in procurement decisions by all layers of the Defense Department bureaucracy and the Congress. The relatively short tenure of key procurement managers in the military services is both a cause and a manifestation of the overall instability in the Defense Department weapons acquisition process.

This year the committee received testimony concerning the average tenure of program managers for the current Selected Acquisition Report (SAR) systems in each of the military services. According to this testimony, the average tenure of program managers for the Army's current SAR programs is 2.2 years; for the Air Force's current SAR programs, 2.3 years; and for the Navy's current SAR programs, 3.0 years.

This same instability exists at the top of the major procurement commands in each of the military services. For the last 15 years, the average tour of duty for the commanding officer of the Army Material Development and Readiness Command has been 3 years; for the Naval Material Command, just under 3 years; for the Air Force Systems Command, 2 years; and for the Air Force Logistics Commands, 2½ years. This Air Force Systems Command has not had a commanding officer stay for more than 3 years since 1970.

In the committee recent hearings on the organization and mangement of the Department of Defense, witnesses such a former Secretary of Defense Harold Brown and former Deputy Secretary of Defense David Packard recommended longer tenure and greater accountability for program managers. The recent Report of the President's Private Sector on Cost Control, also known as the Grace Commissions, made similar recommendations. One of their recommendations to improve program stability is to "lengthen the assignment period of key Government personnel, such as program managers." The Grace Commission also concluded:

"We have determined from private sector sources that industry keeps key employees in positions on an average of 8 years for projects and operations of less financial magnitude and technical complexity than major defense weapons systems."

The committee has reviewed current policies concerning program manager tenure in the Department of Defense. DOD Directive 5000.1, "Major System Acquisitions", directs each of the Service Secretaries to "ensure that the program manager's tenure is of sufficient length to provide continuity and management stability."

Recent Army policy on this subject states that program managers "are considered to have accepted a moral obligation to fulfill at least a 3-year assignment for the project for which designated." The Air Force does not have any specific written policy concerning program manager tour lengths, but Air Force officials have indicated that the Air Force tries to make the rotation date for their program managers coincide with major program milestones. The Navy has recently adopted a policy of 4-year tour lengths for their program managers, with rotation dates to coincide with major program milestones whenever possible. The committee believes the Navy's example should be followed by the other services.

Accordingly, the committee recommends a provision, which establishes a statutory tour of 4 years, or completion of a major program milestone, for program managers of SAR systems; establishes a statutory tour of 4 years for commanders of each of the Military Services' major procurement commands; and gives the Service Secretary the authority to waive these tour lengths in unusual or unforeseen circumstances.

The committee believes that this provision will improve stability and accountability in the Defense Department weapons acquisition process by leaving key procurement managers in place longer. The committee's provision provides a waiver authority for the tour lengths prescribed by this provision for unusual or unforeseen circumstances. However, the committee has placed this waiver authority at a high enough level (Service Secretary) so that its use should be the exception rather than the rule. It is the committee's intent that as this provision is implemented, military promotion boards should give full consideration to the tour lengths prescribed by this provision and the significant responsibilities of program managers of major SAR systems when these individuals are under consideration for promotion. The committee will also take into account the prior program management experience of flag and general officers nominated for positions at the military procurement commands before acting upon such nominations.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from Georgia for his amendment. I have no objection to it being added to S. 2489. Again, whether as former ranking member of the committee or now a member, his input has been valuable to the overall work product of the committee, and, more particularly, to this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. I congratulate my warm friend from Georgia, Senator NUNN, who is without peer in Congress in connection with his knowledge of the subject at hand. I thank him for his contribution to this legislation. I am delighted to enthusiastically support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back?

Mr. DIXON. I yield back the remainder of our time.

Mr. NUNN. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3608) was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, S. 2489, introduced by Senators WEICKER and DIXON, provides needed reform of the Small Business Act. This legislation would correct practices and procedures by the Federal Government that have created significant barriers to small businesses seeking to actively participate in the Federal procurement marketplace.

This measure is part of a larger, long-term effort to recognize the substantial economic effects of defense spending. Needed administrative reforms that allow more and smaller firms to compete for procurement contracts are an important step. Yet we still have much to do to improve the operation and our understanding of the effects of procurement policies, particularly when these policies enrich certain large firms and certain regions of the Nation at the expense of others.

Since 1976, I have published annual reports on the impact of the Federal budget on the economy of New York State. Without exception, despite widely varying fiscal policies of our last two Presidents, patterns in defense spending, and in particular procurement policies, have been the primary reason for large variations in the economic effects of the Federal budget on different regions of our Nation. We must recognize the degree to which defense spending exerts a powerful domestic economic effect on State and local economies, a point that was often overlooked by the Department of Defense—until now.

This past month, at my request, the Department of Defense published an initial report on the geographic distribution of defense spending. It is the first large-scale effort to determine the direct and indirect impacts of defense contracting on a State-by-State, industry-by-industry basis.

Although this report is an analytical first, it is flawed, at least in part, because the entire analysis was performed on the President's defense request of $313 billion for fiscal year 1985. Therefore, although the methods used in the effort are helpful, the estimates and projections contained in the report are $14 billion higher than the Senate-passed budget resolution for defense spending in fiscal year 1985 and $16 billion higher than the fiscal year 1985 CBO defense baseline for 5-percent real growth over fiscal year 1984.

Yet the Department of Defense has made a serious attempt in examining the way procurement policies may be uneven across States and across regions. In combination with the remedies specified in the Weicker-Dixon legislation for small businesses, we can look forward to improved markets and improved competition in our national procurement policies.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, this legislation greatly improves the ability of small businesses to bid on spare parts bought by the Defense Department, and thereby increase the potential source of supply of our Nation's defense.

However, it should be noted that this bill does not increase the amount of competition for defense contracts. As the saying goes, "You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make it drink." Similarly, the Congress can give the Defense Department the means for increasing competition, but it can't make DOD compete, given the current way of doing things.

If the Congress is ever to be serious about increasing competition for defense contracts, it will have to specifically instruct the Defense Department to compete by sealed bid, and use sanctions against the Department for any actions to the contrary. I have introduced such an approach in a bill, along with Senator PRYOR of Arkansas, which we have dubbed the "creeping capitalism bill." This bill, S. 1904, would increase the amount of sealed bid contracting by 5 percent per year until 70 percent of the total volume of DOD contracts are so bid. If DOD would fail to comply with the terms set forth in the bill, all noncompetitive DOD funds would be frozen.

Unfortunately, the problem of spare parts which we have uncovered, and have continued to uncover over the last 18 months, will continue unchecked. This is because while the Congress is tinkering around with the system, it ignores the incentive structure which is the real driver of high costs throughout Government.

Last year, for instance, the Air Force identified problems with spare parts pricing. Its solution, however, was to increase its budget by 50 percent. The net result was ever-increasing prices this year. And I would submit the same will occur again and again until the Congress finally gets serious and speaks the only language that DOD seems to understand: Money.

This problem of Congress looking at the system instead of the context of our problems is best summed up by a quote from Ivan Turgenev in a letter to Leo Tolstoy, which I would paraphrase:

> Said Turgenev, we seem to always chase after Systems, while losing grasp of Truth. Systems are like the tail of a lizard, and the lizard is like Truth. We grab the tail and it remains in our hands, while the lizard goes off and grows a new tail in a twinkling.

This seems to be the problem that pervades Congress. It is the responsibility of the Congress to do what is necessary to provide a check to the centralized bureaucracy that is DOD. The strength of our national defense requires it. But to provide such a check, we need a better knowledge of the bureaucracy, insights into how it functions, and what its incentives are.

We must be sufficiently critical, yet constructive. In the case of our national defense, it is becoming more and more evident that we are not reaping the benefits of competition, but instead suffering the abuses of its absence. It is my hope that the Congress will acknowledge that this bill does not cure the problem of spare parts overpricing, but that it instead provides us with a clear first step toward correction and understanding.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I rise today in support of legislation that is long overdue. I have been a farmer all my life but I have yet to see a hammer that is worth over $400, a piece of copper wire worth almost $7,000 or a common lightbulb worth over $40. If my lumberyard would have tried to charge me $400 for a hammer, you can bet I would have gone someplace else for my hammers.

Abuses are inevitable in a defense procurement system that spends over $20 billion annually on purchases of spare parts, with only 5 percent procured through open competition. Most of the remaining 95 percent is procured under sole-source methods and very little of that goes to small business. Without the efficiency and accountability inherent in a competitive environment, we can expect taxpayers to continue to pay excessive premiums for the tools and supplies our Government needs to operate.

A system that produces wrenches costing hundreds of dollars is a system with problems that we, as public servants, have a responsibility to rectify. In Government procurement, adequate competition has been lacking due to poor planning and unnecessary inpediments to entry of new competitors to the Federal marketplace, especially small business competitors.

S. 2489, the Small Business Competition Enhancement Act of 1984, is sound legislation that will substantially increase opportunities for the awarding of Federal procurement contracts to small businesses. S. 2489 incorporates requirements into the planning and design of a major systems or product contact that will make it easier for agencies to award on a competitive basis the spare and repair contracts that will be needed to maintain the system during its service life.

While small businesses can't realistically bid on aircraft procurement contracts, I am quite certain they can provide hammers for a lot less than $400.

This legislation takes meaningful steps to remove some of the most obvious and harmful impediments to small business participation in Government procurement. For example, prequalification requirements are one glaring obstacle to small business participation in Government procurement. Prequalification requirements are conditions that must be met by a business before its offer can even be considered by a procuring agency. Many of these prequalification requirements have effectively eliminated small business from the Federal procurement process.

Presently, many small businesses must meet prequalification requirements that no longer are justified or are unclear. S. 2489 eliminates any prequalification after it has been in effect for 5 years unless the procuring agency can still justify the requirement. Necessary prequalification requirements are usually to protect our national security.

The "Small Business Competition Enhancement Act" has been favorably reported by the Committee on Small Business, chaired by the very able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER]. The Senator from Texas [Mr. TOWER], and the Committee on Armed Services have addressed all national security considerations as they relate to defense contracts. All members of these committees, especially the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], should be commended for their diligence to make workable this very necessary reform of Government procurement policy.

In this time of excessive and wasteful Government spending, I am very happy the Senate is ready to consider this legislation that will give the taxpayers a better buy with their tax dollars.

I urge my colleagues to support S. 2489. This legislation will expand our Nation's small business participation in selling products and services to the Federal Government. Thank you.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, the Federal Government spends billions of dollars each year on the purchase of services from the private sector, yet small businesses, who could provide the same goods and services at competitive prices, are stifled by the number of Federal laws and agency practices which make it virtually impossible for them to effectively compete for Government contracts.

I am pleased that the Senate has turned to consideration of the Small Business Competition Enhancement Act of 1984—S. 2489—of which I am a cosponsor. This bill is intended to encourage competition for the spare parts, support equipment, and other services necessary to maintain major systems acquired by Federal agencies, and offers a specifically targeted and balanced legislative response to the most persistent obstacles to competition faced by small firms.

S. 2489 is, in effect, the revised version of an earlier piece of legislation, S. 1730, the Small Business Competition in Contracting Act, which I also cosponsored. While S. 1730 identified specific problems in the procurement process and addressed particular concerns of small businesses in that regard, the bill before us today offers a more detailed outline for the correction of those practices which hamper the ability of small companies to fairly compete for Government contracting opportunities.

The Small Business Competition Enhancement Act seeks to abolish the major stumbling blocks in the competition process in several ways, including: first, changing the "prequalification" requirements used by many agencies. The bill states that these requirements must not only be justified but also that the qualification standards be specified in advance; second, emphasis on the requirement that major systems contractors must sell technical data to the procuring agency in order to insure the competitive procurement of future spare parts necessary to maintain the system; and third, the expansion of the Small Business Procurement Center Representatives Program, and clarification of the representatives' authority and responsibility as advocates for competition.

Mr. President, it is appropriate for the Senate to focus attention on the special concerns of small businesses. The Small Business Competition Enhancement Act is one step in that direction. I urge my colleagues to act quickly toward passage of this vital measure.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, several months ago, when the now infamous military spare parts purchasing scandal hit the news, Americans were justifiably outraged over the waste of tax dollars those expenditures represented. There were calls for action against those who had made the overpriced purchases and against those who sold the Government those parts.

Of course, I support the prosecution of individuals who rob the taxpayers, but there was something more to this story than just isolated instances of theft or corruption. In hearings across the country, including one I held in Wisconsin, we discovered that the problem lay deeper than in the actions of a few individuals. The problem was the system itself.

Current procurement practices discourage competition, dilute accountability, and breed waste. Procurement officers punch up numbers on computers when ordering spare parts, not realizing that they may be paying hundreds of tax dollars for minor parts. Departments needing items right away say "hang the expense" and don't take time to shop around for the best values. One hand doesn't know what the other is doing, so that while a purchasing department buys parts, a disposal office is throwing away excess inventory of those same parts.

Our hearings and other investigations revealed that what is needed is a system that promotes competition for spare parts contracts, that encourages small businesses to participate in the process, and that puts procurement experts into the pipeline to identify possible sources of waste. And what we have before us today, the Small Business Competition Enhancement Act of 1984, is the embodiment of the solutions we developed.

I am proud to be a cosponsor of S. 2489, and I'm glad to see the Senate taking prompt action on the bill. As you know, Mr. President, the Senate Small Business Committee, on which I am honored to serve, has approved this measure. So has the Senate Armed Services Committee. In fact, major portions of this bill were attached to the Defense authorization bill that this body recently passed. With today's approval of the entire reform package, the Senate will help put in place a vast improvement of our spare parts purchasing system. It will also move us toward increased small business participation in Federal procurement.

I urge my colleagues to give S. 2489 their unreserved support, for the sake of an improved national defense as well as for the sake of our taxpayers.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this bill and I encourage my colleagues to support its passage. This bill was reported out of the Small Business Committee, of which I am a members by a unanimous vote.

This bill will changes some of the Federal Government's procurement practices, particularly in the area of defense procurement. These changes will make Federal procurement more efficient and save taxpayers money.

The Small Business Competition Enhancement Act will increase competition in the awarding of contracts, especially contracts for spare parts and support equipment needed to maintain major weapons systems.

According to the General Accounting Office, during each year for the last 3 years, approximately $15 to $20 billion worth of new spare parts contracts were awarded noncompetively primarily by the Department of Defense.

In the end, only about 6 percent of the Pentagon's contracts are awarded by strict competitive bidding. The absence of competition means higher costs and means many small businesses never have a chance to bid for a contract.

The General Accounting Office has concluded that a savings of 10 to 50 percent—$1.5 to $7.5 billion—could be achieved through competitive contracting.

This bill encourages the awarding of design and production contracts to contractors who include specific proposals in their bids to facilitate competitive procurement of spare parts.

This includes making parts that are common to many systems identical and building competition into the design phase of major systems.

Senate bill 2489 also tightens the use of "prequalification" requirements that often keep small businesses from bidding on contracts. Agencies must now justify their use under specific, prescribed standards.

Spare parts competition has been kept at a minimum largely because no one could gain access to the technical data needed to manufacture the parts. This bill recognizes that the taxpayer and Government have rights to this data as well as the contractor.

Prime contractors are provided financial disincentives to deter them from asserting proprietary rights and establishes procedures to ensure the Government's access to technical data necessary for competitive spare parts procurements.

This bill also establishes an advocate for competition through the expansion of the Small Business Administration's Procurement Breakout Centers.

I want to express my appreciation to the many groups who worked on the bill and for the spirit of compromise and cooperation. Positive criticism was largely responsible for many constructive changes.

Just a few of the groups who have endorsed this legislation include: Executive for National Security, National Federation of Independent Businesses, National Small Business Association, National Tooling and Machining Association, Small Business Legislative Council, Small Business United, and the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in support of this measure as amended, the Small Business Competition Enhancement Act of 1984. As an original cosponsor of S. 2489, I am extremely pleased to see that it has reached the floor for consideration by the full Senate and appears assured of passage.

I want to express my appreciation to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Small Business, the senior Senator from Connecticut, for his wise leadership, persistence, and hard work on this measure. Additionally, I want to commend other members of the Committee on Small Business for their significant contributions to this measure. Without this cooperative effort, we would not have the effective, comprehensive measure we see before us today.

This measure addresses many of the barriers to small business participation in Federal procurements. For example, it standardizes and limits prequalification requirements which have in the past been employed unfairly against small business. When I last spoke on S. 2489, I cited the B.H. Aircraft Co. case, a matter in which I was personally involved, in which the Air Force used their engineering qualified source process to block open competition. Once this barrier came down, the resulting contract award saved the U.S. taxpayer millions of dollars.

One of my major concerns has been excessive costs for spare parts for defense systems. This measure will require the Government to obtain technical data in all production contracts for major systems, so that technical data packages may be provided to foster subsequent competition for replenishment spare parts. Also, this bill requires procuring agencies to establish systems for managing this technical data, so it will be available when needed.

These reforms will have a significant impact on defense spare parts costs. Moreover, they will open the door to many small businesses who would like to compete for Federal contracts. This will produce a stronger defense establishment through more efficient utilization of defense resources, a stronger defense industrial base through wider business participation, and a healthier climate for small businesses through access to a major market which has, regrettably, too often been closed to them.

Mr. President, I am proud to be an original cosponsor of S. 2489, which has now been incorporated into H.R. 4209. I strongly urge my colleagues to vote for this bill. It contains many needed reforms to our Federal procurement process and fosters participation in this process by our small businesses, the most dynamic, creative, and cost-effective sector of our economy.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make such technical and clerical corrections in the bill as may be required.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 908, H.R. 4209.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4209) to amend section 15 of the Small Business Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will proceed to its immediate consideration.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all after the enacting clause be stricken and that the text of S. 2489, as amended, be inserted in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WEICKER. Have the yeas and nays been ordered on H.R. 4209, as amended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have been ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed as passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I would like to express my thanks and appreciation to the majority staff of the Small Business Committee and also the minority staff, who have worked for a full year on this matter.

Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, the rollcall will not take place until 5 o'clock. In anticipation of what we reasonably can expect to have occur then, I would like to express my personal appreciation to my distinguished colleague and warm friend, Senator LOWELL WEICKER, of Connecticut, chairman of the Committee on Small Business. I wish to join him in praising the work done on the bill, S. 2489, by the majority staff, especially Bill Montalto.

I also wish to extend my appreciation to Alan Chvotkin, minority chief counsel of the Senate Small Business Committee, for all of his excellent work on S. 2489. Alan worked many long hours, beginning in January 1983, with S. 1730, the Small Business Competition in Contracting Act of 1983, and then with its successor, S. 2489, the Small Business and Federal Procurement Competition Enhancement Act of 1984.

My thanks, also, to Charles C. Smith Jr., of my staff, who contributed greatly to the development of this legislation.

Both the majority and minority staffs of the Senate Armed Services Committee were of special assistance in the bill's preparation, and I express my appreciation to them.

I would also like to thank my good friends, the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. QUAYLE], and the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], members of the armed services task force on defense procurement matters, for their outstanding leadership, and to all those who worked so diligently and have made such important contributions to the passage of this legislation.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Illinois for his comments and I wish to point out that we brought Bill Montalto aboard the staff of the Small Business Committee with the thought that some day, we might have need of his expertise in the procurement area. That moment came sooner rather than later. Indeed, what we have today is, in large measure, the result of his efforts and his thoughts.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HECHT). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am about to propose an arrangement that I hope the Senate will agree to which will accommodate certain Senators who are necessarily absent today attending the funeral of another Member and for other reasons that appear desirable. Let me describe what I am going to do before I put the request.

First, Mr. President, I am going to ask for third reading of the House bill. After that, Mr. President, I am going to ask that the vote on the House bill occur at 5 o'clock and no further debate, motions or amendments be in order, with the usual language which accompanies that, and to provide that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Now, Mr. President, that is the substance of the request. In effect what we are going to do is finish everything on the SBA bill and provide for a final vote at 5 o'clock and nothing else can happen. That is what we are after.

Mr. President, have we had third reading on the House bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Third reading has not yet occurred.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask for third reading on H.R., 4209, if there is no further debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that no further debate, no further amendments, and no further motions be in order as to this measure. I further ask unanimous consent that the vote on final passage occur at 5 p.m. today; that paragraph 4 of rule XII be waived, and that a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill is adopted be considered as laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair. Now, Mr. President, once again a rollcall vote has been ordered on final passage of the small business bill, and it will occur at 5 p.m. today. Senators should take account of that arrangement.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, may I inquire of the minority leader now if it would be possible for us to proceed to the budget waiver of those sections of the Budget Act with respect to the consideration of the supplemental appropriations bill and then subsequently the supplemental appropriations bill itself at this point?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I believe that the chances of doing so are reasonably good. I suggest to the distinguished majority leader that he not put the request just now but around 3:30 p.m. when I can get back to him. A Senator will be present at that point who wants to be present.

Mr. BAKER. Very well. Mr. President, may I say that I hope we can do that, and I would expect to ask the Senate, if the budget waiver is agreed to, to turn to the consideration of the supplemental appropriations bill today, temporarily laying aside the unfinished business, which is the motion to waive the Budget Act in respect to the agriculture bill. But I would not expect the Senate will be in late today. I think that we would get opening statements on the supplemental out of the way and perhaps other formalities, but I would not expect us to go much further than that at this time.

Mr. CHILES. If we could have about 10 minutes, I might be able to engage in my little colloquy now and save that time until 3:30. I can wait until 3:30.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am willing to do that now. I am as willing to do it now as I will be at 3:30.

Mr. CHILES. I understand that. At the time the majority leader put the unanimous-consent request, I was going to say that I was not going to object but I was going to reserve the right and then ask the Senator if he could tell us his intentions as to the schedule. He has already said something about the supplemental. I have a little interest in the cloture vote that may come tomorrow, and I wonder if the majority leader might enlighten us as to his proposed schedule on that.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, the vote will occur tomorrow. I do not recall now whether we set a time certain for that vote. In any event, if we have not, the vote will occur an hour after we convene tomorrow, plus the time necessary to establish a quorum on cloture to limit debate on the motion to waive the provisions of the Budget Act with respect to the agriculture appropriations bill.

Is it my hope that tomorrow we will invoke cloture. But even if we do invoke cloture, it is the present intention of the leadership on this side—if we adopt the budget resolution—to go back to the supplemental appropriations bill. It is the hope of the leadership on this side that we can complete this week both the supplemental appropriations bill and the agriculture appropriations bill.

I think the Senator may be asking whether or not, if cloture is invoked, we would then try immediately to go to the agriculture appropriations bill, and my answer is no, I would not.

Mr. CHILES. I was interested in that. I am also interested in this: If the cloture vote comes in the a.m., will we have 1 hour of debate prior to that time?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I would be willing to make any arrangement, within reason, that the Senator from Florida and the minority leader would like. It is appropriate that there be at least an hour of debate before the cloture vote. I should like to do what we almost always do and find out what time for the cloture vote would be mutually convenient, to provide an hour of debate prior to that time, and divide the time equally between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Budget Committee.

Mr. CHILES. I thank the majority leader.

I will make one other comment. My understanding is that a conference has been called for tomorrow by the chairman of the conference, Mr. JONES, of the Budget Committee. I feel that we would not even need the cloture vote tomorrow if we simply were told to go to that conference and to come back with a result or stay there until we can come back with a budget resolution. I think we would save the Senate having the cloture vote tomorrow or any further cloture votes or debates on waiver of the budget resolution.

Mr. BAKER. The distinguished former chairman of the Budget Committee, the Senator from Florida, perhaps has not heard me tell this story——

Mr. CHILES. I have not had that opportunity.

Mr. BAKER. I have a daughter who is the apple of my eye and who is grown now. But when she was a child, she was sick at one time. This was back in the days when doctors used to make house calls.

Dr. Thompson showed up at our house, and my daughter was in bed with fever, and she was playing a little game.

The doctor, in his best bedside manner, said, "Cissy, can I play that game with you?"

She looked at him and said, "Only if I win."

Mr. President, I am afraid that is the situation with the Budget Committee. I, too, want a budget conference report. I have urged the chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, to do his dead level best to do that. But I hope there might be an element of real give and take in this matter and that we could get a conference report that was mutually acceptable. So far, that has not occurred.

It is my information that last year—and certainly the Senator from Florida is better versed in this than I am—we had a similar dilemma in the budget conference. But last year, instead of being on the defense number, it was on the domestic or nondefense number. That was finally reconciled or resolved by establishing not a single number in the budget resolution but a range of numbers, and the conference report was adopted in both Houses, and we operated under it. We still are, for that matter.

It is my information, as well, that this year the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee on the Republican side made a similar offer on this year's controversy—that is, the question of a defense number—and since we could not agree on a defense number, that we adopt instead the policy that was established last year of a range of numbers. But that has not been favorably received by the conferees so far, and I regret that. I think that is an eminently satisfactory way to resolve this issue, and I believe it would get a lot of underbrush out of the way and let us get on with the appropriations bills.

Mr. President, it is a matter of extraordinary regret to me that in these 3 weeks we have not been able to do what the leadership on this side announced we were going to do, and that was to focus on the appropriations bills and pass as many of them as possible.

I see the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator HATFIELD, on the floor, and I know that he shares with me the same regrets—that we have not been able to do that.

What is happening right now is that all appropriations bill are being held hostage to getting your way in the budget conference. I used to be a practicing lawyer and used to have an occasional case that involved what we called secondary boycott, and that is sort of what is happening to the poor, old appropriations bills. There is a secondary boycott running against the appropriations process, and it is, "If you don't do the budget resolution the way we want it, we won't go ahead with the appropriations bills."

Mr. President, I think that a good-faith offer has been made to establish a range of numbers. I think that a conference that would act on that in a favorable way would break this impasse, and we could get on. But it is late this week to do much about it, so I have relinquished the thought I once had that we could do seven appropriation bills this week. Instead, I will settle for two—the agriculture appropriations bill and the supplemental.

I should like to see this matter resolved; and in fairness and equity, I should like to see it resolved on the same basis we did it last year. I am a devotee of the budget process. I believe it does a great deal of good and that it should continue and that it will. But I do not believe that we ought to hold up these appropriation bills while we try to establish a secondary purpose, and that is to get a defense number in a budget conference before we take up the appropriation bills.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, to the majority leader I wish to say with all deference that I think maybe Cissy still wants to win the game.

The number that we are talking about is the difference between $13 billion in the defense manner, and the House of Representatives has already offered to split that number. I think there is a real difference between what we did last year and this year. Last year we were talking about a bloc of House Members who wanted to authorize some new programs that never have been authorized before. They wanted to spend some money for those new programs and they felt that they should not be blocked out by the Budget Act from being able to at least see if they could get those programs authorized.

We found ourselves in this dilemma. No Republicans like to vote for the budget resolution in the House of Representatives. So we sort of have to depend on all the Democrats to pass it. So if you ever got a block of them over there that are contrary to it, it makes it a little more difficult.

But we did not take all of the money they wanted for those new programs. We only took a portion of it. We fenced it off so it could not be used for anything else and we said if those programs were authorized, if they passed both the House of Representatives and the Senate, if the President allowed them to become law, then this money was available.

I think that is a little bit different from a defense number—$13 billion. We are not talking about a program that had not been authorized. It has all been authorized. It is all being spent.

It seems as if the Senator from Florida is concerned about if we are worried about what we spent last year and that is haunting us now, what kind of precedents are we going to set if we have a range of numbers that we can take the high number of the Senate on defense and the low number of the House of Representatives? Is there any reason to have a conference? Why do we not just simply have each one pass their bill in the future and then say the high and the low?

The whole purpose of the Budget Act is to try to put a restraint on spending, and the distinguished majority leader has said he is quite concerned, he wanted to schedule these seven bills, and they are being held up by this secondary boycott.

I would just say to our distinguished majority leader that secondary boycott just happens to be the law of the land. It just happens to be the law that says you shall have a budget resolution before you pass appropriations bills.

So if it is a secondary boycott for the Senator from Florida to be saying that we should follow the law, the only law that we have that restrains spending, the only law that is available to us to try to set a lid and a ceiling on it, then I plead guilty to leading the secondary boycott.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the only exception I will take to the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Florida is this.

I have enormous respect for the Senator from Florida and the Senator from New Mexico, the chairman, and ranking minority member of the committee, and the committee itself.

But I disagree with the notion that they are the only ones who restrain spending. They are certainly the ones who establish a budget and targets. But the Appropriations Committee does that. The authorizing committee does that. And the Senate does that. They are not the whole show.

Mr. President, on the question of these matters being authorized, one of the problems that the leadership on this side is concerned with and must deal with is that we do not have an authorization bill. We passed one in the Senate, passed one in the House of Representatives, but so far you have had an inconclusive conference and it seems to me that it would not be appropriate, given the fact the authorizing committees have not yet agreed on authorized numbers, to let the Budget Committee do it for them.

It seems to me that the Appropriations Committee should have a lick at this as well.

So unless we can find some device to reconcile this, I am not prepared to say that the Budget Committee should have absolute say over how that should be structured and designed.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I hate to take issue, but I think that is exactly what the whole thing of the Budget Act was about, that we had to have the resolution before the Appropriations Committee could spend the money, that there had to be the Senate and the House of Representatives, Congress, had to speak and say what the ceiling was going to be before, and I would say to the distinguished majority leader I think one of the reasons we do not have a solution in the authorizing committee is that we have not had a budget resolution. We do not have a meeting. We canceled the schedule of the meeting of the Defense Appropriations Committee. I think that is being held up because we do not have this budget number and given the fact that the Senate had a tie vote on the number of $291 billion for defense, I just have a hard time in seeing we are hung up now in the conference in talking about either coming to some agreement between $187 and $299 billion or the House's standing offer of $292 billion which is higher than we had a tie vote in the Senate for. It just seems like to me that should not be hanging us up.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, if the majority leader will yield, I wish to make just one brief observation.

Mr. President, we have seven appropriations bills and a supplemental appropriations bill that have been standing in line waiting to be acted upon. Members of the Appropriations Committee have worked diligently, have worked long hours, and the staff has worked way into the night in order to make these bills available.

Let me just take one single program to illustrate that we may be engaged in a very meaningful and erudite kind of debate and it may have very significant bearing on the procedures of the Senate and ranges of figures and all of the jurisdiction between this committee and that committee and the other committee, but in about 2 weeks the Food Stamp Program is going to be broke, and we have $700 million riding on the supplemental to feed those people who are dependent upon the food stamps of this country program.

Mr. President, for all of this delay, we can have any kind of reason and justification. I am not engaged in this debate up until now. But I just want to make sure that all the Members realize that we have an appropriations bill on agriculture on this floor that has been delayed. We could have amended that vehicle to put that $700 million in there for food stamps that will expire, and there are other programs that are important—I am just using this as one example—but, no, we cannot move that appropriations bill because we are going to adjourn on Friday. We have to go to conference. We have to come back from a conference and pass the conference report. Then our hope was the supplemental. We have it in the supplemental. I can imagine by the time we get in the supplemental and all the Central American issues and a lot of other controversial issues we will be right back at this square one where we are now.

I just believe that the people out there in this country who are dependent upon the food stamps could care less about our erudite, academic and very, very appropriate debates that are going on here about jurisdiction, ranges, figures, targets, conferences, and all that. They are going to say "Where is the food?"

And that is going to be a question that every Member of this Senate is going to have to answer.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, if I might just say, I hope my good friend from Oregon knows that I said at the beginning of my comments on the agricultural bill that I would not raise any objection to the supplemental, that I felt it had things that needed to pass, and at any time that anyone wanted to take up the supplemental I would consent to getting off our discussion on the agriculture bill and be able to move to that supplemental.

Mr. HATFIELD. May I respond that the Senator from Florida knows very well where he might be able to ease off on that particular point, there are enough controversial issues in that supplemental that are going to raise other voices on this floor perhaps seeking the same delays the Senator from Florida is seeking, not for the same reasons, but the result will be the same—no action.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, we can go on and on with this, and I acknowledge good faith on the part of all Members who have participated in the past and are participating now.

But I think the chairman of the Appropriations Committee puts his finger on it. The average person in this country, certainly those receiving food stamps, certainly the farmers in this country, and certainly goodness knows how many others who are affected by the appropriations bills for agriculture or the supplemental, could care less what goes on in the Senate about procedures. All they look at is the result and the fact of the matter is for 2 weeks now we have been hung up on a technicality.

That is a good technicality. It is one that we wrote into the law, but we also wrote into the law a provision for waiving that. We can waive the whole act. We can waive a section of the act in variations, in permutations, and in combinations that would stagger the mind of man. But it was to take advantage of situations such as this that waivers were provided for.

Mr. President, while I have a moment, could I inquire of the distinguished minority leader on another subject.

Mr. CHILES. Before you leave that, if I might have one more moment to address the technicality. We talk about technicalities, and what the average man is concerned about or not concerned about. What I find is that the average man in my State is concerned about interest, the debt, and the interest rate that he is having to pay. I do not think it is a technicality. It is not on my part. Maybe it is on somebody else's part. I am concerned that we have a $110 billion interest payment by the Federal Government now that the CBO figures now tell us will be $224 billion for the next 5 years at the rate we are going now. If we do not have some spending restraint, that interest rate eats up everything. I think that does affect the average man. It does in my State. It means whether we are going to have jobs or not. So that is the kind of technicality that the Senator from Florida is concerned about, and will continue to be concerned about until we get some resolution of the budget resolution.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, what I would like to do now, if we can, is see if we can proceed to the budget waiver on the supplemental, and then to lay down the supplemental appropriations bill itself. Could I inquire of the minority leader if he is prepared to do that at this time?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, Mr. President; provided that there will be no votes after 6 o'clock today.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am prepared to say that it is not the intention of the leadership to have any votes after 6 or 6:30. Six o'clock would be an outside estimate. As I indicated earlier, I do not anticipate that today will be a late day, that we will have opening statements perhaps, minor amendments taken care of, and other procedural aspects. But for fear that something might come up that has to be dealt with, I would prefer not to put an order down that we would not have the votes after 6. But I can assure the minority leader that it is my intention to run a normal schedule today.

Mr. BYRD. Would it be the intention of the distinguished majority leader to try to protect Senators who have primaries today? That was the reason I mentioned the 6 o'clock vote out of consideration for that situation.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, of course, I will. I indicated earlier that we had Members absent for, among other reasons, the Perkins funeral. I should have also pointed out that there are primaries today. That also requires the absence of certain Senators on both sides of the aisle. But I will certainly accommodate any reasonable request in that respect.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I take the majority leader at his word. I will assist him as best I can in avoiding any rollcall votes after 6 o'clock at the end of the day for the reasons that have been indicated. Therefore, there is no objection.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that section 303 and 311 of the Congressional Budget Act be waived with respect to consideration of the 1984 supplemental appropriations bill, H.R. 6040, as reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and any amendments thereto pursuant to section 904 of that act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

I especially thank the minority leader and the distinguished Senator from Florida who has made it possible for us to proceed on this basis at this time.

Mr. President, has the waiver been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question has been agreed to.

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1984

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I now ask the Chair to lay before the Senate H.R. 6040.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 6040) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

(The parts intended to be stricken are shown in boldface brackets and the parts intended to be inserted are shown in italic, as follows:)

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes, namely:

TITLE I

CHAPTER I

FEDERAL EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT AGENCY

EMERGENCY FOOD AND SHELTER PROGRAM

There is hereby appropriated $60,000,000 to the Federal Emergency Management Agency, to remain available until December 31, 1984, to carry out an emergency food and shelter program. Notwithstanding any other provision of this or any other Act, such amount shall be made available under the terms and conditions of the following paragraphs:

The Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall, as soon as practicable after enactment of this Act, constitute a national board for the purpose of determining how the program funds are to be distributed to individual localities. The national board shall consist of seven members. The United Way of America, the Salvation Army, the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., the National Conference of Catholic Charities, the Council of Jewish Federations, Inc., the American Red Cross, and the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall each designate a representative to sit on the national board. The representative of the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall chair the national board.

Each locality designated by the national board to receive funds shall constitute a local board for the purpose of determining how its funds will be distributed. The local board shall consist, to the extent practicable, of representatives of the same organizations as the national board except that the mayor or appropriate head of government will replace the Federal Emergency Management Agency member.

The Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall award a grant for $60,000,000 to the national board within thirty days after enactment of this Act for the purpose of providing emergency food and shelter to needy individuals through private voluntary organizations and through units of local government.

Eligible private voluntary organizations should be nonprofit, have a voluntary board, have an accounting system, and practice nondiscrimination.

Participation in the program should be based upon a private voluntary organization's or unit of local government's ability to deliver emergency food and shelter to needy individuals and such other factors as are determined by the local boards.

Total administrative costs shall not exceed 2 per centum of the total appropriation.

As authorized by the Charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Corporation shall process and distribute surplus food owned or to be purchased by the Corporation under the food distribution and emergency shelter program in cooperation with the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

[EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT PLANNING AND ASSISTANCE

(1) delete the words "no more than 15.25 acres, excluding roads" and insert in lieu thereof: "30 acres, excluding roads as described in the Memorandum of Understanding dated June, 1984 between the Alaska Area Native Health Service and the Department of Education of the State of Alaska. Such description shall be published in the Federal Register by the Secretary of the Interior".

(2) delete the first sentence in the second undesignated paragraph and insert in lieu thereof:

"No final conveyence of any title, interest, or right shall be made unless the State of Alaska has executed an agreement by October 1, 1984 to begin operating a Mount Edgecumbe boarding school facility no later than September 30, 1985, and does in fact open such a facility for school operations by September 30, 1985. To assist the State of Alaska in opening such a facility, and notwithstanding the provisions of title 31 U.S.C. 6308, the $22,000,000 appropriated under this heading for use by the State of Alaska in renovating the Mount Edgecumbe school shall be made immediately available, in full, to the State of Alaska upon the execution of the aforementioned agreement, but such funds shall only be expended for facilities to be located within the lands conveyed by this statute. A failure on the part of the State of Alaska to begin operating a Mount Edgecumbe boarding school facility no later than September 30, 1985 shall cause the interim conveyance made under this heading to terminate.".

(3) insert before the period at the end of the third sentence of the third undesignated paragraph the following: "if the State of Alaska opens a Mount Edgecumbe boarding school facility for school operations by September 30, 1985; if the State of Alaska does not open such a facility for school operations by September 30, 1985, then the interim conveyance terminates as of October 1, 1985, and all interest in the lands covered by the interim conveyence, together with all improvements thereon, revert to the United States".

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 301. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall remain available for obligation beyond the current fiscal year unless expressly so provided herein.

SEC. 302. Except where specifically increased or decreased elsewhere in this Act, the restrictions contained within appropriations, or provisions affecting appropriations or other funds, available during the fiscal year 1984, limiting the amount which may be expended for personal services, or for purposes involving personal services, or amounts which may be transferred between appropriations or authorizations available for or involving such services, are hereby increased to the extent necessary to meet increased pay costs authorized by or pursuant to law.

[SEC. 303. None of the funds made available to the United States Postal Service under this Act or any other Act may be used to restructure employee compensation practices as in effect under the most recently effective collective bargaining agreement under section 1206 of title 39, United States Code, except in accordance with the results of procedures set forth in section 1207 of such title.]

SEC. 303. The project for Bonneville Lock and Dam, Second Powerhouse, Washington and Oregon, is hereby modified to authorize the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, to acquire in the Steigerwald Lake Wetlands Area, Clark County, Washington, not more than 1,000 acres of land at an estimated cost of $8,500,000 for the fish and wildlife mitigation purposes associated with this project. The Secretary is further authorized to undertake initial development of such lands and convey without monetary consideration the lands to Department of Interior, United States Fish and Wildlife Service for operation and maintenance.

An additional amount of $8,500,000, to remain available until expended, is hereby appropriated for "Construction, general", Corps of Engineers—Civil, Department of the Army to carry out the provisions of this section.

SEC. 304. No funds appropriated by this or any other Act to the Federal Communications Commission may be used prior to June 30, 1985, to implement the Commission's decision adopted on July 26, 1984, in Docket GEN 83-1009 as it applies to television licenses. The term "implement" shall include but not be limited to processing, review, approval, or acquisition of any interest in or the transfer or assignment of television licenses.

This Act may be cited as the "Second Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1984".

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRIBLE). The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I believe the business before the Senate is the supplemental appropriations bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the second supplemental for fiscal year 1984, H.R. 6040, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, would provide slightly more than $6.8 billion in additional appropriations for the remainder of fiscal year 1984. That amount is approximately $900 million over the President's supplemental request, and more than $1.4 billion over the House-passed measure. The bill before the Senate cover matters within the jurisdiction of all 13 subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee, providing necessary pay and program supplementals for 12 departments, 30 agencies, the judicial branch, the legislative branch and the District of Columbia. It is a comprehensive piece of legislation.

The most controversial item in this bill is the recommendation of $565,289,000 for the President's Central America Democracy, Peace, and Development Initiative. That amount includes $367,989,000 for economic assistance and $197,300,000 in military aid. I oppose that aspect of this bill, and will join those who will seek to strike or reduce the amount provided. I will have more to say on that subject when that issue is joined.

I only regret once again that we always have to put the two programs together in bills like this, economic programs that are geared to help sustain and support life, and those programs which are designed to help destroy life.

Mr. President, I believe it is particulary important to remove the Central America aid from this bill because its presence makes enactment of this bill problematical, and we very much need to move this bill through the Senate expeditiously, and on to conference with the House. For one thing, we need to clear the Senate calendar. We now have seven fiscal year 1985 appropriations bills on the calendar, and we had best get moving on them if we are to avoid a massive continuing resolution in September. Second, and far more important, this bill provides $700 million in supplemental appropriations for food stamps. That appropriation must clear the Congress before the end of the week, or the Food Stamp Program will run out of funds while we are in recess. I do not believe food stamp recipients should be held hostage by a foreign aid package, and I intend to do all I can to avoid that consequence.

That concludes my opening remarks, Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that several summary tables listing the major items recommended in H.R. 6040 be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I yield the floor to the distinguished ranking member of the committee, whose expertise, wisdom, and great judgment have played a major part in the achievements of the Appropriations Committee record this year and in the last 3 years particularly as we have brought bills out of that committee, having performed functions originally assigned to the committee and revived once again, I believe, a very significant role for that committee, the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, Senator STENNIS.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Oregon for his very generous remarks, and thank him for his extraordinary service, too, in the capacity in which he serves as chairman of this committee and the protection that he has always provided for its prerogatives and valuable precedents.

Mr. President, I will not present additional remarks, in addition to those given by the chairman. I support the bill generally, and I hope that we can move right along with the amendments. I am sure everyone will want to cooperate. Everyone has a right to offer an amendment that complies with the rules.

Mr. President, I yield back to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, in order to bring the bill into a situation for considering amendments, at this time I ask unanimous-consent that the committee amendments be considered and agreed to en bloc, with the exception of the amendment appearing on page 26, lines 16 to 21, and the amendment appearing on page 42, lines 11 to 13, and that the bill as thus amended be considered original text for the purpose of further amendment, provided that no point of order would be waived thereby. I believe this has been cleared on both sides of the aisle, providing a vehicle for Senators to offer amendments.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, it has been cleared on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FIRST EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT, PAGE 26, LINE 16 TO LINE 21

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the bill is now open for amendment. The question arises, I believe, on the first excepted committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

The first excepted committee amendment is as follows:

On page 26, line 16, strike

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT PLANNING AND ASSISTANCE

For an additional amount for "Emergency management planning and assistance", $2,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1986: Provided, That this amount shall be for expenses under section 1362 of the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968, as amended (42 U.S.C. 4103, 4127)."

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this is the amendment that appears on page 26 which was excepted from the unanimous-consent agreement. I believe the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN] wishes to offer an amendment to this. Until he arrives, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I have been discussing with the distinguished chairman and the distinguished ranking member of the committee a situation which exists in regard to problems in the city of Tulsa. We had a devastating flood on Memorial Day weekend of 1984 in Tulsa, flash flooding in virtually every watershed in the city. Almost 10 inches of rain fell in a period of little over 24 hours. It is estimated there were 4,800 individual homes and properties flooded on that occasion. Damage was estimated in this one incident at $150 million, including public facilities of $8 million.

The President declared the area a disaster area in accordance with Public Law 93-288. A Federal disaster assistance center was opened. More than 5,000 applications for aid have been received so far. This area has a long history of flooding. Some of the structures have experienced flooding dating back to the 1950's, with some flooded as often as six times in just the past 10 years alone. This pattern of cyclical damage and repair has accounted for inordinately high expenditures, both of private and public funds, while residents continue to be subject to life-threatening danger from the flooding.

These damages have occurred despite a number of steps taken by the city of Tulsa over the last few years to control flooding. An ongoing study conducted by the Corps of Engineers has been considered by the Committee on Public Works in the Senate and is a matter that we will be acting on probably in September.

In 1970, Tulsa entered the National Flood Insurance Program and adopted floodplain management regulations. The city of Tulsa in the last 5 years has identified at least $46 million in Federal, State, and private funds spent for flood control actions. So we are talking about a tremendous amount of public as well as private funds that have been expended.

The solution in the long run is the construction of a flood detention structure which may cost in the neighborhood of $100 million and will take up to 10 years to complete.

But in the short run, it is necessary to break the cycle of flood and rebuild, flood and rebuild. The 1362 program was set up to be a swift procedure for buying homes in chronic flooding areas before the owners rebuild. The point is to avoid the reconstruction cost, including national flood insurance payments, SBA loans, Farmers Home Administration loans, among others, to the Federal Government. In 1976, after another major flood in Tulsa, the National Flood Insurance Program paid out $11,950,530 in claims. That is close to $12 million in 1976 dollars paid on 1,050 claims. Already this year since the Memorial Day flood there have been 30 claims filed with another $523,000 already expended.

It is my hope that we can reinstate the appropriation voted by the House which, in the committee report language, earmarked $1 million from the 1362 program for Tulsa. it is my understanding that in the initial discussions in the House by Congressman JONES, Congressman SYNAR, and others, there was a gentleman's agreement at least with FEMA that $2 million would ultimately be put into the 1362 account for use in Tulsa.

Mr. President, I say to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the distinguished ranking member, I have great confidence in the judgment of both of them. I think they know that I would not lightly seek to restore any funds which the committee had removed. I know we are all struggling for economy in Government, and certainly that is an effort made by both the leaders of our Appropriations Committee, for which I salute them. But I suggest that for the State of Oklahoma this flood has been a disaster on a magnitude of some of the great national disasters that we have heard about, Mount St. Helens and others, as far as the immediate impact on our State, with tremendous loss of life and the near loss of many other lives.

Mr. President, when you look at the record, the city of Tulsa is not struggling with a master plan. They are hoping to prevent the rebuilding of these homes in the flood plains, to be able to buy out some of these properties, and in the long run I am convinced it is going to save a lot of Federal dollars. I had actually prepared an amendment to try to make the figure $3 million, or to make it clear that the $2 million in the House was really all originally intended in informal discussions as the amount to be utilized for Tulsa.

I hope we can work something out with their particular piece of legislation to either keep the House language and express the hope to FEMA to utilize the $2 million in Tulsa or to perhaps accept an amendment to change the figure to $3 million and earmark $2 million for Tulsa.

I appreciate the understanding of the two leaders of the committee. I apologize for detaining them in floor action. I had not anticipated this coming up today, but it is extremely important to our State. My colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES] had planned to join with me in offering an amendment at this point as an expression of how we feel about it. We certainly hope that the Senate will go on record showing concern for the citizens in Tulsa and for coming up with a plan that will in the long run help us, I am sure, save a lot of Federal dollars in the future.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma has certainly appropriately raised a concern on behalf of his constituency. Let me make one correction of the record. The House provision was for $1 million for Tulsa and $1 million for the discretion of FEMA. But let me explain a little bit the situation in which we find ourselves.

For the last number of years, there has been the equivalent of 3-to-1 in terms of applications for dollar support from this program for particular disasters—floods, et cetera, which have hit those communities.

Therefore, the FEMA organization has to review this whole matter: How do you set a criteria for granting this money? How do you set priorities on communities?

Mr. President, they have been developing a criteria because, as I say, the applications have outrun the appropriations by a ratio of 3-to-1. I do not think the Senator from Oklahoma would agree that the legislative body should set the priority of one community as against another. We would all have our biases about the disasters which hit our own particular States. That would only be natural. But I think the Senator would have to agree it would be terribly unfair if, say, there had been communities harder hit and other communities had been in line for help longer for us to legislate some kind of a priority list over and above that which is in the process of being established by the administrative agency.

Now, it does not mean that we are less concerned about Tulsa or that we are more concerned about Tulsa or that we are less concerned about some disaster which has hit another State. But what I am trying to say basically is that the committee feels at this point it would have to resist the earmarking of any community to receive a priority in its claim for support from this program when there may be other communities which have been waiting for a longer time or have a more serious disaster.

Mr. President, part of the criteria is found in the report on page 40, and that is that the FEMA will evaluate applications for the program in fiscal year 1985 on the basis of the following: Cost effectiveness of purchasing the property in relation to flood insurance and disaster payments paid in the past and the potential future exposure to damages; the quality of a community's overall flood plain management program and support of flood loss reduction goals of the National Flood Insurance Program, and the adequacy of the community's reuse plan for the proposed project.

I think one would have to admit those are sound criteria which we are trying to put in place and thereby trying to make some fair evaluations not based on the political clout of one Senator's amendment to a bill and getting their community pushed ahead of other communities or outside of the criteria which has been applied to other communities.

That is the rationale behind the Senate committee's deletion of this earmarking for Tulsa in the context of all the other problems and all the other disasters with which FEMA is trying to deal.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield, I understand why the committee acted as it did. I understand the philosophy as to why the $2 million was deleted, which is a necessary $2 million, whether it be in Tulsa or elsewhere, particularly given the extent of the problem that occurred in Tulsa.

The distinguished chairman knows there is no one in this Chamber for whom I have greater respect. No one performs his duties more conscientiously than he does. In the past 6 years that I have been in the Senate, time and time again we have had emergencies of enormous proportion in local areas in various States. I do not believe I have ever on one single occasion voted to withhold funds where I thought a very unusual circumstances occurred. I think this is an unusual circumstance. I do not know how many floods of this magnitude have occurred in the United States—certainly they have not occurred this year—with the loss of life that was attendant with it. I feel obligated to press an amendment or acceptance of the House language with the $2 million. It was my understanding that FEMA was very sympathetic to this need. I appeal to the chairman, considering what he has said. I think it has great merit.

I am certainly not suggesting that this is a run-of-the-mill situation. If what happened in Tulsa had occurred in 25 other communities in the country, Mr. President, you would not find the Senator from Oklahoma saying just because it happened in my home State, it ought to be given priority over what happened elsewhere. I do not think that is the case in this situation. It is truly a disaster of tremendous magnitude.

I had an opportunity to see firsthand the results, and I know that the junior Senator from Oklahoma, who has joined us on the floor, has had that opportunity. He also has been at the center where they took the applications, more than 5,000 applications.

The city commission in Tulsa acted on this matter last week in terms of establishing a long-range plan, in the hope of preventing the rebuilding of homes in dangerous areas. It is going to create a tremendous cost locally and otherwise to follow that plan, but in the long run it is a sound plan for saving money.

I appeal to the chairman to consider this matter. It is my hope that, at the very least, we can allow the House language to stand, to try to make sure that we have adequate funds to take care of the Tulsa situation.

My colleague and I had an amendment to make it $3 million. The addition of $2 million was accomplished by action of the leadership of the House Oklahoma delegation.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BOREN. I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. I have two short questions.

I am familiar with these kinds of floods. When did this happen?

Mr. BOREN. I say to my colleague from Mississippi that this took place on Memorial Day weekend, this devastating flood.

Mr. STENNIS. This year?

Mr. BOREN. This year. Over the past decade and going back to 1950, we have had other incidents.

Mr. STENNIS. What is this money to be used for? This will not do much in construction.

Mr. BOREN. The city commission acted just last week to adopt a massive plan which would result in buying out all homeowners, rather than giving them money to rebuild in the same area. We actually have people sitting in their homes or in trailers in which the electricity has not been turned on. We need to get a program ongoing.

Mr. STENNIS. I do not want to delay the junior Senator from Oklahoma, so I will finish asking questions later.

Mr. BOREN. I think my colleague from Oklahoma wants to make a brief statement about this matter.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BOREN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I support this proposal, and I am a cosponsor of it with my good friend the senior Senator from Oklahoma. We are seeking additional FEMA funds for the purpose of buying homes in the city of Tulsa's floodplain. There have been floods over the past several years, and the Federal Government has given money to these communities located in the floodplain so that the homes could be restored, and then the floods would come again.

The master plan for Tulsa's recovery is a multimillion dollar plan, with the Federal Government putting up a small percentage of the money. They would buy out the homes in the floodplain, so that we would not catch ourselves in this cycle again and again.

Damages from the latest flood, the Memorial Day flood, are estimated to be in excess of $150 million. Over 12 inches rain fell in a little more than 6 hours, an enormous amount of rain in a short period of time, and it did an unbelievable amount of damage.

I visited a mobile home next to Mingo Creek which flooded out, and the mobile home was almost totally full of water. Fourteen people drowned in this flood on one night. So we are not talking about an insignificant storm. We are not talking about little flashfloods. It is an unusual circumstance.

We are now trying to forge a partnership in which the insurance companies, the State, and the city put up the bulk of the money and where the Federal Government would put in a small percentage to buy out all the homes in this flood area so that this disaster will not be repeated.

I join my colleague from Oklahoma, Senator BOREN, in urging the chairman of the Appropriations Committee to consider this matter favorably. I understand that FEMA has participated in these buyouts in the past. We are talking about an urgent supplemental, and this is an urgent case. FEMA's role is to assist people when there is an urgent disaster, and they have been of some assistance already. This would be in compliance with their mission and they can help people get out of this particular area.

So I hope that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee will show some generosity. This is a difficult time for the thousands of people who have been devastated. We are not looking for the Federal Government to come up with $150 million. We are trying to help some of the homeowners to be able to get out of that floodplain area, so we will not be going back to FEMA or any other Federal agency for years down the road to try and repair some homes that have been damaged.

I welcome my senior colleague's comments, and I hope the chairman of the committee will acquiesce in our request.

Mr. HATFIELD. Speaking of generosity, may I then assume that this would induce the Senator from Oklahoma to vote for final passage of the appropriation bill?

Mr. NICKLES. The Senator may well be correct.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, before the junior Senator arrived on the floor, I had explained the position of the subcommittee under the chairmanship of the Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN].

It is my understanding that there are some 20 communities that already have made application for assistance. By adopting this amendment, it is not a question of being generous or not being generous. The point is that you are advancing one community over a whole list of communities by legislative process. To me, this is not the appropriate way to make a judgment on who should and who should not receive aid.

Again, I indicated a figure before. We have had applications that have outdistanced our appropriations in this program of 3 to 1. Therefore, FEMA had to adopt some sort of criteria to make judgments and evaluations on how to grant money to assist these people.

If we were to appropriate at this time the amount of money of the current list, I believe the figure would be about $11 million which we would have to add over and above the $2 million the Senator from Oklahoma is asking for.

I cannot believe that the Senator would want to advance a community in his own constituency over those waiting, which have applied in the appropriate process and are waiting in line, because of perhaps political clout or whatever else may be attributed to his power of persuasion.

I want the Senator to know that the committee is most sympathetic and the issue will be in conference.

I wonder if the Senators from Oklahoma would be willing to temporarily lay this amendment aside until the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. GARN, arrives, who feels very strongly about this issue, and I am representing his view at this point as best I can. But if we could temporarily lay this aside and perhaps have some informal discussions with the chairman of the subcommittee, we might be able to work this out to the satisfaction of the Senators from Oklahoma.

We certainly want to be helpful any way we can be and, if that is agreeable, we could then move on to another amendment by unanimous consent to set this one aside and then take up the amendment waiting to be offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman will yield, I wish to join in that request. I think that is a sound thing to do under the circumstances to get at it better.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, the amendment has not yet been officially offered, and I would certainly be happy to honor the request of the distinguished chairman and hope we can work something out, so I relinquish the floor at this point.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senators from Oklahoma for their cooperation.

Mr. President, I believe I must now make a unanimous-consent request to lay aside both the pending amendments in order for the Senator from Nebraska to be in a position to offer his amendment and I so make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 3609

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Congress that the President should assure an adequate flow of affordable credit to farmers and should assure fair treatment to agricultural borrowers)

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senators ZORINSKY, JEPSEN, BOREN, PRYOR, and PRESSLER, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nebraska (Mr. EXON) (for himself, Mr. ZORINSKY, Mr. JEPSEN, Mr. BOREN, Mr. PRYOR, and Mr. PRESSLER), proposes an amendment numbered 3609.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. . (a) The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the competing credit demands by State and local governments, agriculture, business, and consumers, aggravated by massive Federal debt financing and increasing credit demands by foreign governments, continue to cause serious economic disruption in rural America;

(2) the United States has a vital interest in protecting the economic health of American farmers;

(3) the American farmer has been caught in an unprecedented credit squeeze;

(4) current monetary and fiscal policies have caused real interest rates to remain at two or three times historic levels of such rates;

(5) high real interest rates have dramatically increased the value of the dollar to the detriment of farmers who devote at least one out of three acres of land to production for export;

(6) the average value of an acre of farm land fell this year for the third year in a row, the longest sustained decline since the Great Depression;

(7) the total amount of debt owed by American farmers is $203,800,000,000;

(8) last year Brazil, Mexico, Argentina, and Venezuela held $260,000,000,000 in external debt and the interest payments on these loans alone totaled more than $20,000,000,000;

(9) the governments of Brazil, Mexico, Argentina, and Venezuela have been successful in securing postponements in debt and principal repayments, favorable renegotiations, new loan guarantees, and other special arrangements through private negotiations, assistance from the United States Government, and the International Monetary Fund; and

(10) American farmers have been unsuccessful in securing similar special treatment from private banks or the Federal Government.

(b) It is therefore the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the President, in cooperation with the Board of Government of the Federal Reserve System, should exercise appropriate authority to assure that an adequate flow of credit be available to American farmers at reasonable rates and that American farmers be treated no less favorably than foreign borrowers with comparable levels of risk, and

(2) the President, in cooperation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, should take noninflationary actions necessary to reduce interest rates which are currently at levels abnormally above the historic real cost of money.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, for clarification of the Members of the body and to save some time, I refer all to page 42 of the current Calendar of Business, order No. 1043, Senate Concurrent Resolution 130, offered by Mr. EXON and others, a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the President should assure an adequate flow of affordable credit to farmers and should assure fair treatment to agricultural borrowers.

Mr. President, this was placed on the calendar during the consideration of the debt ceiling bill on June 29 last. At that time I offered this and was asked by both the majority leader and the minority leader that in order to expedite matters on that particular day they would agree to put this directly on the calendar if I would not ask for a vote on the matter at that particular time. In order to provide assistance to the orderly moving of the affairs of the Senate, I agreed to that. Both of them agreed that they would assist me at an early date to bring this up for proper action by the Senate. I suggest this is the time and this is the place.

Mr. President, we are pleased that the Nation's gross national product grew at an unexpectedly strong rate, but the tower of the current recovery is built on a very shaky foundation.

The good news of the continuing recovery overshadows the serious situation in rural America. As I traveled across the great State of Nebraska, farmers and mainstreet business people told me that, to a large extent, the recovery has missed the agricultural sector of the economy.

The nominal value of farmland dropped for the third consecutive year and the real value of farmland dropped for the fourth consecutive year.

Recently, the value of the dollar hit a new record high against other major currencies, and analysts predict that the dollar will continue to strengthen in coming days.

The sad fact is that the crisis in agriculture is not of the farmer's making. The problems are the direct result of unsound national economic policy. I am convinced that, if only the Federal Government would control its immense appetite for credit, the value of the dollar would return to traditional levels, real interest rates would moderate and American farmers, as well as the American workers and business people, would all share in a sound and long-lasting recovery.

The recent string of record deficits have had an extremely adverse effect on rural America. As Federal borrowing competes with private borrowing, interest rates increase, and as interest rates increase, so does the value of the dollar. Needless to say, this chain reaction has especially hurt the American farmer.

Not only do expenses rise due to increased interest costs, but foreign markets are closed due to the overvalued dollar. In a sector that devotes one third of its capacity to export, a strong dollar is devastating.

Farmers are facing increasing difficulty in securing loans to get them through this extremely difficult period. Although Nebraska, like many rural States, enjoys a low rate of unemployment, it is not enjoying prosperity. The unemployment statistics mask a real crisis in rural America.

There have been record numbers of foreclosures and farm sales across the Midwest. The dockets of the Bankruptcy courts are filled with farm bankruptcies. This spring, many farmers went to their local bankers to renew their loans, only to be told that, this year, the bank just cannot renew.

There is a credit crisis in rural America. unfortunately, the general public does not know about it.

In contrast, the debt crisis among foreign borrowers receives daily attention in the media and from the administration.

The external debt of Brazil, Mexico, Argentina, and Venezuela is roughly equivalent to the total indebtedness of the American farmer. However, I have been puzzled at the diverse treatment the two situations receive.

When foreign borrowers are faced with a temporary inability to repay loans, the President requests an $8.4 billion increase in the funding for the international monetary fund to bail out the foreign borrowers.

Recently, when Argentina could not make its loan repayments, the administration lined up a massive loan guarantee scheme.

However, when the American farmer faces a temporary inability to repay his or her loan obligations, the administration railroads a bill through Congress to cut target price supports and reduce farmers' income.

Maybe farm credit problems receive little attention because farm bankers are small local banks, rather than the Chase Manhattan or Manufacturers Hanover Trust.

I wonder if the FDIC would give a rural bank the same tender loving care that it is currently giving the foreign debt-ridden Continental Illinois Bank. It is interesting to note that the FDIC's bailout plan for Continental Illinois proposes a buyoff and write-down of problem domestic loans, while foreign loans are left untouched. Under the proposed plan, Continental's $3 billion in questionable loans to Third World nations are carried at full value.

As another example, Bolivia has not made a debt repayment since March. This past May, it formally suspended its debt payments until bankers agree to restructure its loans. If I were a betting man, I would wager that Bolivia's request will be accommodated, just as the demands of Brazil and Argentina have been met in the past.

How can it be fair to push American farm families off of their land while foreign borrowers and their multinational lenders receive sweetheart deal after sweetheart deal from the Federal Government?

Mr. President, if given the chance, I am confident that the American farmer can weather this storm. The American farmer is a good risk. Our Nation is blessed with the globe's most fertile land, our agricultural sector is the world's most productive, and if the Federal Government can get its financial house in order, the agricultural trade opportunities in the world market are, indeed, bright.

I am not so confident of the creditworthiness of some of our largest foreign borrowers. Recently, 11 Latin American Nations banded together to form a borrowers cartel. The combined strength of this organization causes me to wonder whether the American lenders or their guarantors will see much their money. But I surely expect that, one way or another, Uncle Sam will be asked to pay up.

The irony is indeed great. Farmers, a good credit risk, are unable to secure sufficient credit, while large Latin American borrowers, a questionable credit risk, at best, are given more and more credit.

This resolution asks for equity. Our Nation's first obligation is to its own. The agricultural sector of our economy is subject to constant uncertainty due to the shifting sands of unstable Federal economic climate.

This resolution asks the President to endeavor to assured an adequate flow of credit to American farmers and to assure that farmers are treated no less favorably than foreign borrowers of comparable risk.

I hope that my colleagues see the fairness of this resolution and vote for its adoption.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. GARN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I will be very brief.

Over the years, as I have expressed, we are faced many times each year with a resolution to usually require the Federal Reserve to do something that they simply do not have the power to do. We also face a resolution, which is not the subject of this one, to restructure the Federal Reserve Board, take away its independence, and to require the President to have a chairman whose term is concurrent with his so we can politicize the Fed as if somehow just passing a resolution or restructing the Fed will solve the economic problems of this country.

I certainly do not doubt the sincerity of the Senator from Nebraska. Once again we are faced with a similar resolution. They always seem to come up on the floor, ignore the jurisdiction of the Banking Committee, and are usually placed on appropriations bills which I do not think they have any place but that is the common practice here—certainly more the rule than the exception. Once again to express the sense of the Congress, the President should assure an adequate flow of affordable credit to farmers, and should assure fair treatment to agricultural borrowers. I know of no way to do that unless Congress gets its act together. That is where the problem is. It is not with this President, nor any other President. It is not with this Federal Reserve Board, nor any other. It lies right here.

Maybe I would support this if it were a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that Congress do something about the irresponsible fiscal policy that has created a $1.5 trillion national debt, and interest in excess of $125 billion. That is where the farmers' problem is, and not anyplace else but here. We are always looking for scapegoats, and always looking for somebody else to blame but ourselves.

A President of the United States has never spent one dime not appropriated by Congress; not this President, not George Washington, not Abraham Lincoln, and not anybody else. We have lots of born-again converts to balance budgets on this floor on both sides of the aisle. There are not any liberals anymore. Every one of us are for balanced budgets. Even Fritz Mondale is for a balanced budget. He was not when he was here and voted. His voting record ought to be exposed to the American people to see how he really feels about spending.

But the point of it is the Constitution of the United States gives only Congress the ability to appropriate money. A President can recommend the budget. He can yell, scream, shout, threaten, veto, twist arms, but ultimately no President has ever spent a dime not appropriated by Congress.

So when you are borrowing $125 billion a year, and when you are financing $1.5 trillion national debt, that is why interest rates are high. I do not care what the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board does. I do not care. If he loosens money, interest rates will go up. If he tightens money, interest rates will go up. I do not care what this President or any other President recommends in the form of the budget. The ultimate action is what we do, and what we appropriate.

We have a supplemental appropriations bill before us with everybody advocating fiscal responsibility. Are there any amendments from any of my colleagues to reduce it? No. I was called over here for not this issue. There is an add-on to my budget. It is already $185 million over the President's request. But every amendment I know of is from somebody who wants to reduce the deficit. But they have an amendment that adds money to my portion of this bill. That happened in the regular HUD appropriations bill.

Are we going to vote like we talk, or are we just going to go out and say how we are all fiscal conservatives, and if we will just direct the President to assure an adequate flow of affordable credit? He cannot do that. If we made the Senator from Nebraska President today and accept this resolution, I do not know how he would do that unless he could get Congress to quit appropriating $200 billion a year more than we take in.

You cannot borrow more than 70 percent of the net domestic savings of this country and not drive up interest rates. It is no longer available for farmers, for farm equipment, or for seed. It is not available for consumer loans, nor automobile loans, nor mortgage loans because Government is taking it out of the private sector. The only reason we are even surviving is because of the strength of the dollar, and the inflow of outside capital. Otherwise, 70 percent would be such a drag on our economy that one would think of a 13- or 14-percent prime as giving money away.

I am getting a little bit tired—and my remarks are not directed to the Senator from Nebraska, but they are directed at the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives who simply will not face the fiscal issues; who simply will not vote like they talk. I would suggest the American people will examine those running for office this year rather carefully, regardless of which party they are in. This is not a partisan speech I am making. If they do not vote the way they talk, then get rid of them and give somebody else a chance. $200 billion deficits appropriated by the Congress is only given by authority of the Constitution instead of trying to lump this on a President, on a chairman of the Federal Reserve, or on resolutions that simply say "Let's have an adequate flow of capital." There will not be an adequate flow of capital for farmers or anybody else in this country at reasonable interest rates until this body and the House of Representatives start to vote like they talk.

I have talked longer than I intended to. I suppose this resolution will pass like most of them. I will not vote for it. What we ought to be doing to assure farmers an adequate flow of affordable capital is vote down every amendment to this supplemental appropriations bill that adds money to it. Better still, maybe we ought to have some amendments that will reduce it, or that will reduce every appropriations bill we are talking about. That is the way to guarantee farmers adequate capital at affordable rates—by Congress doing their job on these expenditure bills. It will not change until we do that, nor until we have the courage to vote the way we talk.

Mr. COCHRAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I was impressed when I returned to my State on Friday last to find the Secretary of Agriculture engaged in a so-called roundtable discussion with farm leaders, representatives of national farm organizations, the major commodities, representatives of the American Bankers Association, and the Independent Bankers Association. He had the Director of the Farmers Home Administration, the head of the Small Business Administration, and other private sector and Government officials together for the purpose of discussing this very problem that is highlighted by the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska.

He has brought to the attention of the Senate a very important concern. It is a concern that is widely shared here in the Senate, particularly by those of us who represent States engaged in agriculture, and that is almost every State in the Union, Mr. President.

The reason I mentioned the meeting that was occurring in my State, which I had the privilege of attending, is that it illustrates that this administration is also concerned about this problem and is seeking ways to solve the problem and help assure that farmers who are seeking credit to finance their farming operations have access to that credit and that that credit is at reasonable rates.

There were all kinds of suggestions made at this meeting in Mississippi, and I am sure there are specific suggestions that are floating around here in the Senate and in departments of the administration about the appropriate response that needs to be made by not only the Congress but the Federal Government to this very serious issue.

So I rise not to be critical in any way of the Senator for offering this amendment, but to say that I share in a very genuine way the concern that is expressed by him in offering this amendment, with the distinguished Senators who are cosponsors of it.

Mr. President, I do not know that the answer to the problem is contained within the amendment. It is an expression of concern. It is a resolution, in effect. It resolves that the Congress would like to see farmers have a more affordable source of credit.

We have several programs that are already being administered by the Farmers Home Administration. One is the operating loan program. There are insured loans, direct loans to farmers; there are guaranteed loans that reduce, in effect, the rate of interest that a farmer has to pay when the Government guarantees to the bank or to the other lender of credit that the Government will stand behind that loan and if the farmer defaults, if he does not make the payments, then the Federal Government will take over the loan.

We have just approved in the Appropriations Committee at our markup session earlier this week an amendment that would make available immediately some $650 million of guaranteed loan authority for farmers in the United States. This is a new guaranteed loan program.

I do not know whether that is enough. There was a suggestion that this ought to be a $1 billion new program, that there ought to be more money involved. But this is money that is being made available in the agriculture appropriations bill that is still not before the body because of the debate on the motion to waive the Budget Act.

The Appropriations Committee has instructed that the amendment be offered so that when the act is approved by Congress, the money will be available immediately. I think the Senate is entitled to know of this action by the Committee on Appropriations and the fact that it is another example of a specific action by our Congress to help improve the access of farmers to affordable credit.

When we get right down to the bottom of it, though, Mr. President, the thing the farmers need more than anything else is profit from the operation of their farm. No amount of lending at whatever rate of interest is going to restore profit to the farm.

We could legislate today a massive new lending program for American farmers at a 2- or a 4-percent rate of interest and require that those funds be used to finance a farming operation, and it would not guarantee profit to American agriculture. The farmer is going to have to realize that profit through higher prices that are paid to him at harvest or through greater volume, or a combination of volume and prices. That is the only way that there is going to be a healthy agriculture sector.

I am supporting whatever recommended change in our existing loan program the Senator can come up with that either has not been tried before or that we can implement that would not have an unnecessarily adverse effect on either the budget or credit markets.

If there are specific suggestions for change in the authorities of the Department of Agriculture or the Director of the Farmers Home Administration, then I think we ought to discuss them.

I recall at this roundtable meeting which I mentioned as I began my remarks that there were various suggestions made. The farm credit system representatives had suggestions of change, that there ought to be more Government involvement in lending. I do not know that that is the answer, or whether the Senator from Nebraska would suggest that that should be a part of this effort.

I do not know that we are going to solve the problem with this amendment to this appropriations bill, Mr. President, but I am hoping that we can find a way to solve the problem and I am here to state to the Senator that I am certainly willing to work in a constructive way to find the right answers to American agriculture's credit problems.

Earlier this year I offered a resolution calling on the President to appoint a task force on credit. I think the Senator from Nebraska was a cosponsor of that resolution, along with the Senator from North Dakota, and others. It was to try to focus national attention not only by the Government but the private sector on the difficulties that American farmers have because of the credit crunch they face. It is in response to that resolution and the support for it in the Congress that this series of roundtable meetings is being held by the Department of Agriculture and the agencies in the Federal Government that have some responsibility in this credit area.

I do not know what the intention of the Senator from Nebraska is, the author of the amendment. I know we are scheduled to have a vote at 5 o'clock under the previous order on another bill. I know there are others who want to discuss this further. The Senator from North Dakota is interested in my yielding to him. I will consider that. I do not know whether we are going to be able to conclude the arguments on this amendment, Mr. President, by 5 o'clock. That is the point I am making.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not yield the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. I wondered whether or not we could transact any business on this amendment prior to 5 o'clock.

I yield to the Senator from North Dakota for a question.

Mr. ANDREWS. We have an important amendment which has been accepted on both sides which I would like to get in before the 5 o'clock vote. My colleague on the Democratic side has agreed to a unanimous-consent request to do that.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am happy to yield to that request, Mr. President.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber while we consider this matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment, and the other amendments that have been temporarily set aside, be set aside temporarily so that I may offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. EXON. Reserving the right to object, and I do not object, I hope this will be with the understanding that upon the conclusion of the vote the Senate will return to the consideration of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ANDREWS. I would like to add that proper and reasonable request to my original request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3610

Mr. ANDREWS. I send the amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ANDREWS] proposes an amendment numbered 3610.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 42, line 21 strike the word "Provision" and insert in lieu thereof "Provisions".

On page 43, following line 9, insert the following:

"Section 306(b)(2) of the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act, Public Law 92-318 (20 U.S.C. 241ee(b)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) No payments shall be made under this title to any local educational agency for any fiscal year unless the State educational agency finds that the combined fiscal effort (as determined in accordance with regulations of the Secretary of Education) of that agency and the State with respect to the provision of free public education by that agency for the preceding fiscal year was not less than 90 per centum of such combined fiscal effort for that purpose for the second preceeding fiscal year. In addition, the Secretary may waive this requirement for exceptional circumstances for one year only.".

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, this amendment was an integral part of the Interior appropriations bill, which was reported. It has been cleared on both sides. This amendment amends the Indian Education Act, title IV, in order to correct a serious problem. The act, as it now reads, requires that the State and local educational agency maintain their per pupil expenditures as 100 percent of the previous year in order to receive title IV funding. The amendment that I offer simply puts the title IV maintenance of effort requirement on the same level as other Federal education act requirements, and will allow some leeway for the local public schools. The amendment will provide for a 1-year waiver, similar to that found in chapter 1 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act.

This amendment will not add any moneys to the supplemental bill, it will simply correct a wrong. If this amendment is not made, for 45 small, poor public schools, in nine States, will not receive the title IV funding this fall that they were counting on. The amendment will allow these schools to receive the moneys and continue their title IV programs.

The Select Committee on Indian Affairs reported a bill, which passed the Senate this spring, to reauthorize and amend title IV, but it looks like it is going to be held up in the House, due to H.R. 11, and the only vehicle available to prevent this grave problem, in time, is this bill. I appreciate the committee chairman's cooperation on this matter, and I urge my colleagues to join in support of this amendment.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the proposed amendment is identical to a provision contained in the fiscal year 1985 Interior appropriations bill as reported by the full committee. It would conform the maintenance of effort requirement of the Indian Education Act to the 90-percent level established for other federally aided education programs.

As the Indian Education Act is forward funded, the money for the 1984–85 school year was made available in the fiscal year 1984 Interior appropriations bill. It is appropriate that this amendment be included in the supplemental to ensure continued support to approximately 43 school districts around the Nation.

Mr. President, I have no objection to the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I have no objection, with the understanding that we can transfer it from one bill to another, as was discussed earlier.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3610) was agreed to.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

SMALL BUSINESS AND FEDERAL PROCUREMENT COMPETITION ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 1984

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 5 p.m. having arrived, the vote will now occur on the question whether H.R. 4209, as amended, shall pass.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order, there will now be a vote on the passage of H.R. 4209. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PERCY], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PERCY] would vote "yea."

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] and the Senator from Massachusets [Mr. TSONGAS] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 94, nays 0—as follows:

So the bill (H.R. 4209), as amended, was passed, as follows:

H.R. 4209

Resolved, That the bill from the House of Representatives (H.R. 4209) entitled "An Act to amend section 15 of the Small Business Act", do pass with the following amendments: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Small Business and Federal Procurement Competition Enhancement Act of 1984".

PURPOSES

SEC. 2. The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) eliminate Federal procurement procedures and practices which inhibit free and open competition for Government contracts, especially by small business competitors;

(2) use Federal contracting opportunities as a means to expand our Nation's industrial base in order to ensure adequate responsive capability of the economy to the increased demands of the defense and civilian agencies in times of national emergency;

(3) reduce the number of noncompetitive government contract awards; and

(4) foster opportunities for increased small business and small disadvantaged business participation in the competitive Federal procurement process.

PLANNING FOR FUTURE COMPETITION

SEC. 3. Section 15 of the Small Business Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(m)(1) To encourage the competitive acquisition of supplies and services to support and maintain a major system during its service life, the head of the Federal agency with responsibility for that system shall ensure that—

"(A) in any competitive solicitation for the award of any development contract for a major system, the following shall be included as evaluation factors, giving due consideration to the purposes for which the system is being procured and the technology to achieve the system's required capabilities:

"(i) proposals to incorporate in the design of the major system, components which are currently available within the supply system of the Federal agency responsible for the major system, available elsewhere in the national supply system, or commercially available from more than one source; and

"(ii) proposals to incorporate in the design of the major system, components that are likely to be required in substantial quantities during the system's service life and will permit future competitive acquisitions by the Government;

"(B) in any competitive solicitation for the award of any production contract for a major system, the following shall be included as evaluation factors:

"(i) proposals to identify components in the system that are likely to be required in substantial quantities during the system's service life and whether the technical data for such components will permit future competitive acquisitions by the Government; and

"(ii) proposals to identify technical data for sale or license to the Federal Government which the offeror, at its discretion, will identify and separately price so as to permit the Government to competitively acquire future requirements for such components; and

"(C) the evaluation factors specified in paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall be considered as negotiation objectives when an agency is making a noncompetitive award of a development contract or a production contract for a major system.

"(2) The provisions of paragraph (1)(B) may be waived if the contracting officer determines in writing that such provisions would not be applicable to such production contract, giving due consideration to the stability of the system's design, or otherwise would not be in the best interests of the Government in attaining the purposes for which the system is being procured, states the reasons therefor, and includes such determination and finding as part of the contract file."

ENCOURAGING NEW COMPETITORS TO BROADEN THE INDUSTRIAL BASE

SEC. 4. Section 15 of the Small Business Act is amended by adding at the end therefore the following new paragraph:

"(n)(1) Before establishing any prequalification requirement applicable to an offeror or its product which would be considered as an element of responsiveness to a solicitation, the Federal agency shall—

"(A) prepare a written justification stating the necessity for establishing the prequalification requirement and the reasons why free and open competition is not feasible;

"(B) specify in writing and make available upon request all standards which a prospective contractor, or its product, must satisfy in order to become qualified, such standards being limited to those least restrictive to meet the purposes necessitating the establishment of the prequalification requirement;

"(C) specify an estimate of the costs of testing and evaluation likely to be incurred by a prospective contractor for that contractor to become qualified;

"(D) ensure that (i) a prospective contractor is provided, upon request, a prompt opportunity to demonstrate its ability to meet the standards specified for qualification, utilizing qualified personnel and facilities of the agency or another agency obtained through interagency agreement, or other methods approved by the agency, and (ii) any testing and evaluation services provided under contract to the agency should be provided by a contractor who will not be expected to benefit from an absence of additional qualified sources and who shall be required to adhere to any restriction on technical data asserted by the prospective contractor seeking qualification; and

"(E) ensure that a prospective contractor seeking qualification is promptly informed as to whether qualification has been attained, or in the event qualification has not been attained, information sufficient to specifically inform the prospective contractor why qualification was not attained.

"(2) Before a Federal agency may enforce any existing prequalification requirement with respect to an offeror or its product, the Federal agency shall comply with the requirements of paragraph (1) of this subsection. A person denied the opportunity to demonstrate the ability to meet the standards specified for qualification pursuant to paragraph (1)(D) may not be denied the opportunity to submit and have considered an offer for a contract solely because the person (A) is not on a list of qualified bidders prescribed or maintained by the agency, or (B) in the case of a contract for the purchase of a product, does not have its product on a list of qualified products prescribed or maintained by the agency. A Federal agency need not delay a procurement action in order to provide a prospective contractor with an opportunity to demonstrate its ability to meet the standards specified for qualification.

"(3) In the event that the number of qualified sources or qualified products available to actively compete for anticipated future requirements is fewer than two actual manufacturers or the products of two actual manufacturers, respectively, the Federal agency shall—

"(A) periodically publish notice in the Commerce Business Daily soliciting additional sources or products to seek qualification; and

"(B) bear the cost of conducting the specified testing and evaluation, but excluding the costs associated with producing the item or establishing the production, quality control, or other system to be tested and evaluated, only for a small business concern or a product manufactured by a small business concern which has met the standards specified for qualification, and which could reasonably be expected to compete, except that the Federal agency shall bear such costs only if it determines that such additional qualified sources or products are likely to result in cost savings from increased competition for future requirements sufficient to amortize the costs incurred by the Federal agency.

The Federal agency may require a prospective contractor requesting testing and evaluation costs to certify as to its status as a small business concern, and, in good faith, rely thereon.

"(4) Within seven years after the establishment of any prequalification requirement pursuant to paragraph (1), or within seven years following an agency's enforcement of any existing prequalification requirement pursuant to paragraph (2), any such prequalification requirement shall be examined and revalidated in accordance with the requirements of paragraph (1) of this subsection (n).

"(5) Except in an emergency, whenever a Federal agency determines not to enforce an existing prequalification requirement for a solicitation, the agency may not enforce any such prequalification requirement unless the agency complies with the requirements of paragraph (1) of this subsection (n).".

REPORTING REQUIREMENT

SEC. 5. Not later than July 1, 1985, a report prepared under the direction of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy shall be submitted to the Congress on the desirability and feasibility of requiring the prime contractor for a major system to establish and maintain procedures to qualify competing sources for those components of the major system likely to be needed in substantial quantities during the system's service life.

ENHANCED PROCUREMENT NOTICES

SEC. 6. (a) Section 8(e) of the Small Business Act is amended—

(1) by inserting before the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (3)(A) a comma and "and includes, as appropriate, agency nomenclature, National Stock Number or other part number, all amplified by a brief description relating to the item's form, fit or function, physical dimensions, predominant material of manufacture, or similar information to assist a prospective contractor to make an informed business judgment as to whether a solicitation should be requested";

(2) by redesignating subparagraphs (B) and (C) of paragraph (3) as subparagraphs (C) and (E), respectively;

(3) by inserting after subparagraph (A) of paragraph (3) a new subparagraph (B) as follows:

"(B) a procurement history and forecast of requirements, to the extent available, including—

"(i) date of last award and price thereof, number of units and unit price, time for performance, and whether the last contract was awarded competitively;

"(ii) aggregate dollar value and number of units procured during the last two fiscal years; and

"(iii) number of additional requirements (expressed in the same unit term as the procurement history) estimated for procurement during the remainder of the current fiscal year and each of the two succeeding fiscal years;";

(4) by inserting after subparagraph (C) of paragraph (3), as redesignated, a new subparagraph (D) as follows:

"(D) notations as to whether—

"(i) the technical data required to respond to a solicitation will not be furnished as part of such solicitation, and identifying the governmental source, if any, from which the technical data may be obtained; and

"(ii) an offeror or its product must be prequalified in order to have its offer considered for award, and identifying the office from which the standards specified for prequalification may be obtained;";

(5) by inserting in paragraph (4), after "provisions of this paragraph were complied with," the following: "or unless the procurement is under the foreign military sales program and a foreign government has requested a sole source,";

(6) by redesignating paragraph (6) as paragraph (7) and inserting a new paragraph (6) as follows:

"(6) In order to further carry out the requirements of this subsection and section 223(a) of the Act of October 24, 1978 (Public Law 95-507, 15 U.S.C. 637b), each Federal agency shall—

"(A) publicly post in either full text or abstract format at the contracting office, or otherwise readily make available a compilation, of information relating to procurement actions in excess of $2,500 which would have been synopsized in the Commerce Business Daily if such procurement actions had equaled or exceeded the applicable dollar threshold for publication; and

"(B) make available to any small business concern, or to the authorized representative of such concern, the complete solicitation package for any on-going procurement action announced pursuant to this paragraph and permit the copying thereof: Provided, That a Federal agency may require the payment of a fee, not exceeding the actual cost of duplication."; and

(7) by inserting at the end of paragraph (7) (as redesignated by clause (6)) the following new clause:

"(C) the term 'procuring activity' means that organizational element of a Federal department actually responsible for the issuance of solicitations, the evaluation of offers, and the award of contracts.".

(b) Section 8(d)(1) of the Small Business Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "It is further the policy of the United States that small business concerns, and small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals, shall have the maximum practicable opportunity to participate in the performance of contracts and subcontracts for appropriate portions of subsystems, assemblies, components, and related services for major systems.".

(c) Section 8(d)(3)(A) of the Small Business Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "It is further the policy of the United States that small business concerns, and small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals, shall have the maximum practicable opportunity to participate in the performance of contracts and subcontracts for appropriate portions of subsystems, assemblies, components, and related services for major systems."

(d) Not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this section, the Comptroller General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress a report evaluating the implementation of the amendments made by subsections (b) and (c), and the extent to which such amendments have increased the opportunity of small business concerns and small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals to particpate in the performance of Government contracts and subcontracts.

TECHNICAL DATA MANAGEMENT TO FOSTER FUTURE COMPETITION

SEC. 7. Section 15 of the Small Business Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(o)(1)(A) An offeror submitting a proposal for a contract shall furnish information in the proposal identifying—

"(i) with respect to all items that will be delivered to the United States under the contract (other than items to which clause (ii) applies), those items for which technical data will not be provided to the United States; and

"(ii) with respect to technical data that will be delivered to the United States under the contract, any of such technical data that will be provided with restrictions on the Government's right to use such data for governmental purposes.

"(B) With respect to items that will be delivered to the United States under a contract described in subparagraph (A) with respect to which it would be impracticable to ascertain, at the time the contract is entered into, the technical data relating to such items that will not be provided to the United States with unlimited rights, the contract shall require that the contractor shall provide identifying information similar to that required to be furnished under subparagraph (A) at the time to be specified in the contract.

"(C) The head of a Federal agency shall ensure that the information furnished under subparagraph (A) is considered in selecting the contractor for the contract.

"(2) To foster competition for the acquisition of supplies and services to maintain a major system during its service life, the head of the Federal agency with responsibility for the system shall ensure that the initial and all subsequent production contracts for a major system, developed under Government contract, contain appropriate provisions related to technical data, including—

"(A) Specifying the technical data to be delivered under the contract, if any, including delivery schedules therefor;

"(B) establishing criteria for determining the acceptability of technical data to be delivered under the contract;

"(C) establishing separate payment lines for the technical data to be delivered under the contract, if any, and authorizing the withholding of payments for failure to make timely deliveries of acceptable data;

"(D) defining the respective rights of the Government and a contractor or subcontractor regarding any technical data to be delivered under the contract, including therein a definition of the term 'developed at private expense';

"(E) to the maximum practicable extent, identifying, in advance of its delivery, technical data which is to be delivered with restrictions on the Government's right to use such data for governmental purposes;

"(F) requiring the contractor and each subcontractor to be prepared to furnish, within 60 days after a written request directed to the party asserting a restriction, a written justification for any restriction to be asserted limiting the Government's right to use such data for governmental purposes, for as long as such restriction is asserted by the contractor or subcontractor;

"(G) prohibiting a contractor from requiring a subcontractor or the Government to pay a fee, royalty, or other charge for the subcontractor's use of any technical data in the performance of a contract to furnish a component directly to the Government, except that data protected by patent, licensing agreement or any preexisting agreement involving a subcontractor's performance under a commercial contract, if the same data was made available by the contractor to the subcontractor furnishing that component;

"(H) prohibiting the contractor from limiting, either directly or indirectly, a subcontractor from selling to the Government any component which the subcontractor had previously furnished to the contractor without restriction, except that the contractor may restrict a subcontrator from providing to the Government any component restricted by a preexisting agreement involving the subcontractor's performance for the contractor under its commercial contracts;

"(I) ascertaining and documenting the identity of the manufacturer of a component through the annotation of engineering drawings, the maintenance of lists, or otherwise;

"(J) requiring the contractor to revise any technical data delivered pursuant to the contract to reflect engineering design changes and to deliver such revised technical data to an agency within a specified time;

"(K) requiring the contractor to certify at the time the technical data is made available or delivered, that the technical data is complete, accurate, and adequate for the purpose for which the technical data is procured;

"(L) requiring the contractor to promptly correct any technical data found to be incomplete, inadequate, or deficient and promptly furnish complete, accurate, and adequate technical data to the agency; and

"(M) authorizing the head of the agency to withhold progress payments under a contract during any period that the contractor does not meet the requirements of the contract pertaining to the delivery of technical data.

The provisions specified in this subsection shall be implemented in the single system of Government-wide procurement regulations, as defined in section 4(4) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403(4)) and may be waived in accordance with such procurement regulations if the contracting officer determines in writing that any such provision should not be applicable to the production contract, or otherwise would not be in the best interests of the Government in attaining the purposes for which the system is being procured, stating the reasons therefor. Such determination shall be made part of the contract file.

"(3) Nothing in this subsection or subsection (m) of this section prohibits an agency from including—

"(A) in any competitive solicitation for the award of a contract, or

"(B) as a negotiation objective when the agency is making a noncompetitive award, a provision specifying in the contract the date after which the United States shall have the right to use or have used for any governmental purpose all technical data required to be delivered to the United States under contract.".

PLAN FOR MANAGEMENT OF TECHNICAL DATA

SEC. 8. (a) Within one year after the date of enactment of this Act, each Federal agency shall develop a plan for the management of technical data received under contracts for the development, production, modification, or maintenance of major systems within its jurisdiction. At a minimum, the management plan shall address procedures for—

(1) inventorying, indexing, storing, and updating items of technical data into a system;

(2) verifying contractor-imposed limitations on the Government's rights to make future use of the data in competitive acquisitions; and

(3) assuring that agency procurement officials and prospective contractors will have timely access to complete and current technical data for the competitive acquisition of supplies and services for the maintenance of the system during its service life.

(b) Within 5 years after the date of enactment of this Act, each Federal agency shall complete implementation of the management plan required by subsection (a), and include in the system the available technical data for each currently operational major system within its jurisdiction.

(c) Not later than eighteen months after the enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress a report evaluating the plans of selected Federal agencies for the management of technical data for major systems within their jurisdiction. The report shall include an evaluation of the plans of the Department of Defense, the Department of Energy and the Department of Transportation, and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

VALIDATING PROPRIETARY DATA RESTRICTIONS

SEC. 9. Section 15 of the Small Business Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(p)(1) To encourage the competitive acquisition of components needed to maintain a major system during its service life, a review of the validity of any restriction on the Government's right to use for governmental purposes technical data furnished under contract shall be initiated by the contracting officer, if the contracting officer, an agency advocate for competition, or the representative of the Administration assigned to the procurement center determines such a review is warranted and the contracting officer determines that compliance with the asserted restriction makes it impracticable to competitively procure the required component.

"(2) Upon the written demand of the contracting officer, the contractor or subcontractor, as appropriate, shall submit its justification for the asserted restriction on the Government's right to use such data for governmental purposes certifying to the current validity of the asserted restriction within—

"(A) 60 days, if the contract contains a provision that requires a contractor or subcontractor to be prepared to furnish a written justification for any restriction limiting the Government's right to use for governmental purposes technical data to be delivered under the contract, or

"(B) 180 days, if the contract does not contain such a provision, except that the contracting officer may extend such time limits for a reasonable period for good cause shown.

"(3) Upon a failure to submit any justification pursuant to the requirements of paragraph (2) of this subsection, the contracting officer shall, after giving notice to the party asserting the restriction, promptly cancel the restriction on the Government's right to use for governmental purposes technical data for which justification had been requested.

"(4) If after review of the justification submitted pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection, the contracting officer determines that the justification for the restriction on the Government's right to use the data for governmental purposes does not adequately support the asserted restriction on the technical data, the justification therefor shall be promptly subjected to technical review and audit.

"(5) If after reviewing the findings of the technical review and audit, it is determined that the restriction on the Government's right to use such data for governmental purposes warrants challenge, the contracting officer shall issue a final decision pertaining thereto which shall be subject to the provisions of the Contract Disputes Act (41 U.S.C. 601 et seq.).

"(6) If the Government's challenge to the restriction on the Government's right to use for governmental purposes technical data as certified pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection is sustained, upon final disposition—

"(A) the restriction on the Government's right to use that technical data for governmental purposes shall be cancelled; and

"(B) the contractor or subcontractor, as appropriate, shall be liable to the Government for the Government's cost of technically evaluating and auditing the asserted restriction, and the fees and other expenses, as defined in section 2412(d)(2)(A) of title 28, United States Code, incurred by the Government in challenging the asserted restriction, if the asserted restriction, as certified, is found not to be substantially justified, unless special circumstances would make such awards unjust.".

BREAKOUT PROCUREMENT CENTER REPRESENTATIVES

SEC. 10. Section 15 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(q)(1) The Administration shall assign to each major procurement center a breakout procurement center representative, with such assistance as may be appropriate. In carrying out the functions described in paragraph (2), such representative shall be an advocate for the breakout of components for competitive procurement whenever possible while maintaining the integrity of the system in which such components are used, and be an advocate for the competitive procurement of the supplies and services procured by the center. Any breakout procurement center representative appointed under this subsection shall be distinct from, and in addition to, any other procurement center representative who may be, from time to time, assigned by the Administration to a procurement center for the purpose of advocating increased small business participation.

"(2) In addition to carrying out the responsibilities assigned by the Administrator, a breakout procurement center representative is empowered to—

"(A) participate as a regular member of any provisioning conference, or similar evaluation session relating to maintaining a major system during its service life, during which determinations are made as to whether requirements are to be procured through other than free and open competition;

"(B) review, at any time, restrictions on competition previously imposed on requirements through acquisition method coding or similar procedures, and to request prompt reevaluation of such limitations on competition by agency personnel;

"(C) review restrictions on competition arising out of restrictions on the Government's rights in technical data and, when appropriate, recommend that the contracting officer initiate a review of the validity of such an asserted restriction;

"(D) obtain from any source, and make available to the appropriate procurement center personnel, unrestricted technical data necessary for the preparation of a competitive solicitation package for any item of supply or service previously procured noncompetitively due to the unavailability of such unrestricted data; and

"(E) have access to the unclassified procurement records and other data of the procurement center so as to facilitate effective discharge of the foregoing functions and to permit the preparation of complete and accurate reports to the Administration;

"(F) receive unsolicited value-engineering proposals, forwarding them with or without recommendation to procurement center personnel responsible for reviewing such proposals and who shall furnish the breakout procurement center representative with information regarding any action taken with respect to any such proposal; and

"(G) review the procurement practices of the center and make recommendations to the Administrator who shall, as appropriate, consult with the responsible agency procurement executive regarding the implementation thereof.

"(3)(A) Each Federal agency having one or more major procurement centers shall assign at least one technical advisor to each major procurement center to which the Administration has assigned a breakout procurement center representative.

"(B) Technical advisors assigned under this paragraph shall be—

"(i) full-time employees of such agency;

"(ii) colocated with the assigned breakout procurement center representative; and

"(iii) fully qualified, technically trained, and familiar with the supplies and services procured by the major procurement center.

"(C) The primary duty of a technical advisor assigned under this paragraph shall be to assist the breakout procurement center representative for the center to which such advisor is assigned in carrying out his functions.

"(4) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Administration such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection.".

PROHIBITION OF LIMITING DIRECT SALES BY SUBCONTRACTORS TO THE UNITED STATES

SEC. 11. Section 15 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(r) Each contract for the purchase of supplies or services made by a Federal agency shall provide that the contractor will not—

"(1) enter into any agreement with a subcontractor under the contract that has the effect of restricting sales by the subcontractor directly to the United States of any item or process (including computer software) like those made, or services like those furnished, by the subcontractor under the contract (or any follow-on production contract); or

"(2) otherwise act to restrict the ability of a subcontractor to make sales to the United States described in clause (1).".

CERTIFICATE OF COMPETENCY

SEC. 12. Section 8(b)(7) of the Small Business Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Notwithstanding the first sentence of this subsection, the Administration may not establish an exemption from referral or notification or refuse to accept a referral or notification from a Government procurement officer made pursuant to subparagraph (A) or (B) of this paragraph, but nothing in this paragraph shall require the processing of an application for certification if the small business concern to which the referral pertains declines to have the application processed. If a Government procurement officer proposes to deny a contractor's decision to use a small business concern as a subcontractor because of a lack of any element of responsibility provided for in subparagraphs (A) or (B) of this paragraph, such officer may not preclude the contractor from subcontracting to such small business concern without referring the matter for final disposition to the Administration.".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 13. Section 3 of the Small Business Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(j) For the purpose of this Act and section 8 of the Small Business and Federal Procurement Competition Enhancement Act of 1984, the term—

"(1) 'component' means any individual part, subassembly, assembly, or subsystem integral to a major system, which may be replaced during the service life of the system. The term includes spare part and replenishment spare part. The term does not include packaging or labeling associated with shipment or identification of a 'component';

"(2) 'major procurement center' means a procurement center that awarded contracts for components other than commercial items totaling at least $150,000,000 in the preceeding fiscal year;

"(3) 'major system' means a combination of elements that will function together to produce the capabilities required to fulfill a mission need. The elements may include hardware, equipment, software or any combination thereof, but excludes construction or other improvements to real property. A system shall be considered a 'major system' if (A) total expenditures for the system are estimated to exceed $750,000 (based on fiscal year 1980 constant dollars) or the dollar threshold for a 'major system' established by the agency pursuant to Office of Management and Budget (OMB) Circular A-109, entitled 'Major Systems Acquisitions', whichever is greater, or (B) the system is designated a 'major system' by the head of the agency responsible for the system;

"(4) 'technical data' means recorded information (regardless of the form or method of the recording) of a scientific or technical nature (including engineering data) relating to the property procured by an agency and used throughout the life cycle of the property for the purposes of performing management, engineering, maintenance, modification, test, and other functions relating to the property and to procure spares or additional spares of such property, and includes data resulting from work which was specified and directly funded as an element of performance of a contract from the United States, but does not include computer software, or financial, administrative, cost or pricing, management data, or other information incidental to contract administration. For purposes of commercial products, technical data shall be restricted to only that data necessary to fully operate and maintain the system during its service life.

"(k) For the purpose of subsections (m), (n), (o), (p), and (r) of section 15, the term 'Federal agency' does not include an agency which is subject to chapter 137 of title 10, United States Code.".

COMMERCIAL PRICING FOR SPARE PARTS

SEC. 14. (a) Section 15 of the Small Business Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(s)(1) Except in the case of an offer submitted with a written statement under paragraph (2) and except as provided in paragraph (3), a contract made by any agency for the purchase of spare or replacement parts offered for sale to the general public may not result in a cost to the United States that exceeds the lowest price at which such parts are made available by the contractor to commercial buyers.

"(2) A person who submits an offer to an agency for the supply of spare or replacement parts having commercial application shall certify that the offered price is its lowest commercial price for the items submitted, or shall submit with the offer a written statement specifying the difference between the lowest commercial price of the offeror for the parts and the price offered and providing a justification for that difference.

"(3) Paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply to a contract if the contracting officer determines that the use of the price otherwise required by paragraph (1) for such contract is not appropriate because of—

"(A) national security considerations; or

"(B) differences in quantitites, quality, delivery, or other items and conditions of the contract from commercial contract terms.".

(b) Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the single system of Government-wide procurement regulations (as defined in section 4 (4) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403 (4))) shall be revised to include provisions specifying the manner in which each executive agency (as defined in section 4 (1) of such Act (41 U.S.C. 403 (1))) may negotiate prices for supplies procured from a contractor which does not produce the supplies and does not add significant value to the total value of the supplies. The regulation shall include provisions reasonably limiting the amount of overhead costs which such a contractor may allocate to any item of supplies.

SEC. 15. Section 15 of the Small Business Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection.

"(t)(1)(A) Each Federal agency shall procure supplies in such quantity as (i) will result in the total cost and unit cost most advantageous to the United States, when practicable, and (ii) does not exceed the quantity reasonably expected to be required by the agency during a fiscal year or longer period for which an appropriation is available for the purpose of procuring such supplies.

"(B) The head of a Federal agency shall take subparagraph (A) into account in approving rates of obligation of appropriations.

"(2) Each solicitation for a supply contract shall include a clause requesting each contractor responding to the solicitation to state an opinion on whether the quantity of the supplies proposed to be procured is economically advantageous to the United States and, if applicable, to recommend two quantities which would be more economically advantageous to the United States. Each such recommendation shall include a quotation of the total price and the unit price for supplies procured in each recommended quantity.".

PUBLICATION OF PROPOSED REGULATIONS

SEC. 16. The Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 401 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. . Changes to the single system of Government-wide procurement regulations (as defined in section 4 (4) of the Office of Federal Procurment Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403 (4))), including supplemental regulations to agency acquisition regulations, may not take effect until the date thirty days after the date such regulations have been published in the Federal Register for public comment.".

PERSONNEL EVALUATIONS TO INCLUDE EMPHASES ON COMPETITION AND COST SAVINGS

SEC. 17. Section 15 of the Small Business Act if further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(u) The head of each Federal agency shall establish procedures to ensure that personnel appraisal systems of the agency give appropriate recognition to efforts to increase competition and achieve cost savings in areas relating to the contracts of the agency.".

PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE AND RELATED AGENCIES

SEC. 18. (a)(1) Chapter 137 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"§ 2317. Planning for future competition

"(a) To encourage the competitive acquisition of supplies and services to support and maintain a major system during its service life, the head of an agency with responsibility for that system shall ensure that—

"(1) in any competitive solicitation for the award of any development contract for a major system, the following shall be included as evaluation factors, giving due consideration to the purposes for which the system is being procured and the technology to achieve the system's required capabilities:

"(A) proposals to incorporate in the design of the major system, components that are currently available within the supply system of the Federal agency responsible for the major system, available elsewhere in the national supply system, or commercially available from more than one source; and

"(B) proposals to incorporate in the design of the major system, components that are likely to be required in substantial quantities during the system's service life and will permit future competitive acquisitions by the Government;

"(2) in any competitive solicitation for the award of any production contract for a major system, the following shall be included as evaluation factors:

"(A) proposals to identify components in the system that are likely to be required in substantial quantities during the system's service life and whether the technical data for such component will permit future competitive acquisitions by the Government; and

"(B) proposals to identify technical data for sale or license to the Federal Government which the offeror, at it discretion, will identify and separately price so as to permit the Government to competitive acquire future requirements for such components; and

"(3) the evaluation factors specified in paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall be considered as negotiation objectives when an agency is making a noncompetitive award of a development contract or a production contract for a major system.

"(b) The provisions of paragraph (2) of subsection (a) may be waived in whole or in part if the contracting officer determines in writing that such provisions should not be applicable to such production contract, giving due consideration to the stability of the system's design, or otherwise would not be in the best interests of the United States in attaining the purposes for which the system is being procured, states the reasons therefor, and includes such determination and finding as part of the contract file.

"§ 2318. Encouraging new competitors to broaden the industrial base

"(a) Before establishing any prequalification requirement applicable to an offeror or its product which would be considered as an element of responsiveness to a solicitation, the head of an agency shall—

"(1) prepare a written justification stating the necessity for establishing the prequalification requirement and the reasons why free and open competition is not feasible;

"(2) specify in writing and make a available upon request all standards which a prospective contractor, or its product, must satisfy in order to become qualified, such standards to be limited to those least restrictive to meet the purposes necessitating the establishment of the prequalification requirement;

"(3) specify an estimate of the costs of testing and evaluation likely to be incurred by a prospective contractor for that contractor to become qualified;

"(4) ensure that (A) a prospective contractor is provided, upon request, a prompt opportunity to demonstrate its ability to meet the standards specified for qualification, utilizing qualified personnel and facilities of the agency or another agency obtained through interagency agreement, or other methods approved by the agency, and (B) any testing and evaluation services provided under contract to the agency should be provided by a contractor who will not be expected to benefit from an absence of additional qualified sources and who shall be required to adhere to any restriction on technical data asserted by the prospective contractor seeking qualification; and

"(5) ensure that a prospective contractor seeking qualification is promptly informed as to whether qualification has been attained, or in the event qualification has not been attained, is promptly furnished specific information why qualification was not attained.

"(b) Before the head of an agency may enforce any existing prequalification requirement with respect to an offeror or its product, the agency shall comply with the requirements of subsection (a). A person denied the opportunity to demonstrate the ability to meet the standards specified for qualification pursuant to subsection (a)(4) may not be denied the opportunity to submit and have considered an offer for a contract to be made by the Department of Defense solely because the person (1) is not on a list of qualified bidders prescribed or maintained by the Department of Defense, or (2) in the case of a contract for the purchase of a product, does not have its product on a list of qualified products prescribed or maintained by the Department of Defense. The head of an agency need not delay procurement action in order to provide a prospective contractor with an opportunity to demonstrate its ability to meet the standards specified for qualification.

"(c) In the event that the number of qualified sources or qualified products available to actively compete for anticipated future requirements is fewer than two actual manufacturers or the products of two actual manufacturers, respectively, the head of an agency shall—

"(1) periodically publish notice in the Commerce Business Daily soliciting additional sources or products to seek qualification; and

"(2) bear the cost of conducting the specified testing and evaluation, but excluding the costs associated with producing the item or establishing the production, quality control, or other system to be tested and evaluated, only for a small business concern or a product manufactured by a small business concern which has met the standards specified for qualification, and which could reasonably be expected to compete, except that the head of an agency shall bear such costs only if it determines that such additional qualified sources or products are likely to result in cost savings from increased competition for future requirements sufficient to amortize the costs incurred by the agency.

The head of an agency may require a prospective contractor requesting testing and evaluation costs to certify as to its status as a small business concern, and, in good faith, rely thereon.

"(d) Within seven years after the establishment of any prequalification requirement under subsection (a), or within seven years following an agency's enforcement of any existing prequalification requirement pursuant to subsection (b), any such prequalification requirement shall be examined and revalidated in accordance with the requirements of subsection (a) of this section.

"(e) Except in an emergency, whenever the head of an agency determines not to enforce an existing prequalification requirement for a solicitation, the agency may not enforce any such prequalification requirement unless the agency complies with the requirements of subsection (a).

"§ 2319. Technical data management to foster future competition

"(a)(1) An offeror submitting a proposal for a contract shall furnish information in the proposal identifying—

"(A) with respect to all items that will be delivered to the United States under the contract (other than items to which paragraph (2) applies) those items for which technical data will not be provided to the United States; and

"(B) with respect to technical data that will be delivered to the United States under the contract, any of such technical data that will be provided with restrictions on the Government's right to use such data for governmental purposes.

"(2) With respect to items that will be delivered to the United States under a contract described in paragraph (1) with respect to which it would be impracticable to ascertain, at the time the contract is entered into, the technical data relating to such items that will not be provided to the United States with unlimited rights, the contract shall require that the contractor provide identifying information similar to that required to be furnished under paragraph (1) at a time to be specified in the contract.

"(3) The head of an agency shall ensure that the information furnished under paragraph (1) is considered in selecting the contractor for the contract.

"(b) To foster competition for the acquisition of supplies and services to maintain a major system during its service life, the head of the agency with responsibility for the system shall ensure that the initial and all subsequent production contracts for a major system, developed under Government contract, contain appropriate provisions related to technical data, including—

"(1) specifying the technical data to be delivered under the contract, if any, including delivery schedules therefor;

"(2) establishing criteria for determining the acceptability of technical data to be delivered under the contract;

"(3) establishing separate payment lines for the technical data to be delivered under the contract, if any, and authorizing the withholding of payments for failure to make timely deliveries of acceptable data;

"(4) defining the respective rights of the Government and a contractor or subcontractor regarding any technical data to be delivered under the contract, including therein a definition of the term 'developed at private expense';

"(5) to the maximum practicable extent, identifying, in advance of its delivery, technical data which is to be delivered with restrictions on the Government's right to use such data for governmental purposes;

"(6) requiring the contractor and each subcontractor to be prepared to furnish, within 60 days after a written request directed to the party asserting a restriction, a written justification for any restriction to be asserted limiting the Government's right to use such data for governmental purposes. for as long as such restriction is asserted by the contractor or subcontractor;

"(7) prohibiting a contractor from requiring a subcontractor or the Government to pay a fee, royalty, or other charge for the subcontractor's use of any technical data in the performance of a contract to furnish a component directly to the Government, except that data protected by patent, licensing agreement or any preexisting agreement involving a subcontractor's performance under a commercial contract, if the same data was made available by the contractor to the subcontractor furnishing that component;

"(8) prohibiting the contractor from limiting, either directly or indirectly, a subcontractor from selling to the Government any component which the subcontractor had previously furnished to the contractor without restriction, except that the contractor may restrict a subcontractor from providing to the Government any component restricted by a preexisting agreement involving the subcontractor's performance for the contractor under its commercial contracts;

"(9) ascertaining and documenting the identity of the manufacturer of a component through the annotation of engineering drawings, the maintenance of lists, or otherwise;

"(10) requiring the contractor to revise any technical data delivered pursuant to the contract to reflect engineering design changes and to deliver such revised technical data to an agency within a specified time;

"(11) requiring the contractor to certify, at the time the technical data is made available or delivered, that the technical data is complete, accurate, and adequate for the purpose for which the technical data is procured;

"(12) requiring the contractor to promptly correct any technical data found to be incomplete, inadequate, or deficient and promptly furnish complete, accurate, and adequate technical data to the agency; and

"(13) authorizing the head of the agency to withhold progress payments under a contract during any period that the contractor does not meet the requirements of the contract pertaining to the delivery of technical data.

The provisions specified in this subsection shall be implemented in the single system of Government-wide procurement regulations, as defined in section 4(4) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C 403(4)) and may be waived in accordance with such procurement regulations if the contracting officer determines in writing that any such provision should not be applicable to the production contract, or otherwise would not be in the best interests of the Government in attaining the purposes for which the system is being procured, stating the reasons therefor. Such determination shall be made part of the contract file.

"(c) Nothing in this section or section 2317 of this title prohibits an agency from including—

"(1) in any competitive solicitation for the award of a contract, or

"(2) as a negotiation objective when the agency is making a noncompetitive award, a provision specifying in the contract the date after which the United States shall have the right to use or have used for any governmental purpose all technical data required to be delivered to the United States under contract.

"§ 2320. Validating proprietary data restrictions

"(a) To encourage the competitive acquisition of components needed to maintain a major system during its service life, a review of the validity of any restriction on the Government's right to use for governmental purposes technical data furnished under contract shall be initiated by the contracting officer, if the contracting officer, an agency advocate for competition, or the representative of the Small Business Administration assigned to the procurement center determines such a review is warranted and the contracting officer determines that compliance with the asserted restriction makes it impracticable to competitively procure the required component.

"(b) Upon the written demand of the contracting officer, the contractor or subcontractor, as appropriate, shall submit its justification for the asserted restriction on the Government's right to use such data for governmental purposes certifying to the current validity of the asserted restriction within—

"(1) 60 days, if the contract contains a provision that requires a contractor or subcontractor to be prepared to furnish a written justification for any restriction limiting the Government's right to use for governmental purposes technical data to be delivered under the contract, or

"(2) 180 days, if the contract does not contain such a provision, except that the contracting officer may extend such time limits for a reasonable period for good cause shown.

"(c) Upon a failure to submit any justification pursuant to the requirements of subsection (b), the contracting officer shall, after giving notice to the party asserting the restriction, promptly cancel the restriction on the Government's right to use for governmental purposes technical data for which justification had been requested.

"(d) If after review of the Justification submitted pursuant to subsection (b), the contracting officer determines that the justification for the restriction on the Government's right to use the data for governmental purposes does not adequately support the asserted restriction on the technical data, the justification therefor shall be promptly subjected to technical review and audit.

"(e) If after reviewing the findings of the technical review and audit, it is determined that the restriction on the Government's right to use such data for governmental purposes warrants challenge, the contracting officer shall issue a final decision pertaining thereto which shall be subject to the provisions of the Contract Disputes Act (41 U.S.C. 601 et seq.).

"(f) If the Government's challenge to the restriction on the Government's right to use for governmental purposes technical data as certified pursuant to subsection (b) is sustained, upon final disposition—

"(1) the restriction on the Government's right to use that technical data for governmental purposes shall be cancelled; and

"(2) the contractor or subcontractor, as appropriate, shall be liable to the Government for the Government's cost of technically evaluating and auditing the asserted restriction, and the fees and other expenses, as defined in section 2412(d)(2)(A) of title 28, United States Code, incurred by the Government in challenging the asserted restriction, if the asserted restriction, as certified, is found not to be substantially justified, unless special circumstances would make such awards unjust.

"§ 2321. Commercial pricing for spare parts

"(a) Except in the case of an offer submitted with a written statement under subsection (b), and except as provided in subsection (c), a contract made by any agency referred to in section 2303(a) of this title for the purchase of spare or replacement parts offered for sale to the general public may not result in a cost to the United States that exceeds the lowest price at which such parts are made available by the contractor to commercial buyers.

"(b) A person who submits an offer to such an agency for the supply of spare or replacement parts having commercial application shall certify that the offered price is its lowest commercial price for the items submitted, or shall submit with the offer a written statement specifying the difference between the lowest commercial price of the offeror for the parts and the price offered and providing a justification for that difference.

"(c) Subsections (a) and (b) do not apply to a contract if the contracting officer determines that the use of the price otherwise required by subsection (a) for such contract is not appropriate because of—

"(1) national security considerations; or

"(2) differences in quantities, quality, delivery, or other terms and conditions of the contract from commercial contract terms.".

(2) The analysis of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"2317. Planning for future competition.
"2318. Encouraging new competitors to broaden the industrial base.
"2319. Technical data management to foster future competition.
"2320. Validating proprietary data restrictions.
"2321. Commercial pricing for spare parts.".

(b) Section 2302 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(4) 'Component' means any individual part subassembly, assembly, or subsystem integral to a major system, which may be replaced during the service life of the system. The term includes spare part and replenishment spare part. The term does not include packaging or labeling associated with shipment or identification of a 'component'.

"(5) 'Major procurement center' means a procurement center that awarded contracts for components other than commercial items totaling at least $150,000,000 in the preceding fiscal year.

"(6) 'Major system' means a combination of elements that will function together to produce the capabilities required to fulfill a mission need. The elements may include hardware, equipment, software or any combination thereof, but excludes construction or other improvements to real property. A system shall be considered a major system if (A) the Department of Defense is responsible for the system and the total expenditures for research, development, test and evaluation for the system are estimated to be more than $75,000,000 (based on fiscal year 1980 constant dollars) or the eventual total expenditure for procurement of more than $300,000,000 (based on fiscal year 1980 constant dollars); or (B) a civilian agency is responsible for the system and total expenditures for the system are estimated to exceed $750,000 (based on fiscal year 1980 constant dollars) or the dollar threshold for a 'major system' established by the agency pursuant to Office of Management and Budget (OMB) Circular A-109, entitled 'Major Systems Acquisitions', whichever is greater, or (C) the system is designated a 'major system' by the head of the agency responsible for the system.

"(7) 'Technical data' means recorded information (regardless of the form or method of the recording) of a scientific or technical nature (including engineering data) relating to the property procured by the head of an agency and used throughout the life cycle of the property for the purposes of performing management, engineering, maintenance, modification, test, and other functions relating to the property and to procure spares or additional spares of such property, and includes data resulting from work which was specified and directly funded as an element of performance of a contract from the United States, but does not include computer software, or financial, administrative, cost or pricing, management data, or other information incidental to contract administration. For purposes of commercial products, technical data shall be restricted to only that data necessary to fully operate and maintain the system during its service life.".

(c)(1) Chapter 141 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following section:

"§ 2402. Prohibition of contractors limiting subcontractor sales directly to the United States

"Each contract for the purchase of supplies or services made by the Department of Defense shall provide that the contractor will not—

"(1) enter into any agreement with a subcontractor under the contract that has the effect of restricting sales by the subcontractor directly to the United States of any item or process (including computer software) like those made, or services like those furnished, by the subcontractor under the contract (or any follow-on production contract); or

"(2) otherwise act to restrict the ability of a subcontractor to make sales to the United States described in clause (1).".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"2402. Prohibition of contractors limiting subcontractor sales directly to the United States.".

(d)(1) Chapter 137 of title 10, United States Code (as amended by subsection (a)(1)), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 2322. Encouragement of competition and cost savings

"The Secretary of Defense shall establish procedures to ensure that personnel appraisal systems of the Department of Defense give appropriate recognition to efforts to increase competition and achieve cost savings in areas relating to contracts covered by this chapter.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter (as amended by subsection (a)(2)) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"2322. Encouragement of competition and cost savings.".

(e) Section 2303 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Regulations prescribed under this chapter by the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of a military department may not take effect until thirty days after such regulations have been published in the Federal Register for public comment.".

(f)(1) Chapter 141 of title 10, United States Code (as amended by subsection (c)(1)), is further amended by inserting after section 2384 the following new section:

"§ 2384a. Supplies: economic order quantities

"(a)(1) An agency referred to in section 2303(a) of this title shall procure supplies in such quantity as (A) will result in the total cost and unit cost most advantageous to the United States, where practicable, and (B) does not exceed the quantity reasonably expected to be required by the agency during a fiscal year or longer period for which an appropriation is available for the purpose of procuring such supplies.

"(2) The Secretary of Defense shall take paragraph (1) into account in approving rates of obligation of appropriations under section 2204 of this title.

"(b) Each solicitation for a supply contract shall include a clause requesting each contractor responding to the solicitation to state an opinion on whether the quantity of the supplies proposed to be procured is economically advantageous to the United States and, if applicable, to recommend two quantities which would be more economically advantageous to the United States. Each such recommendation shall include a quotation of the total price and the unit price for supplies procured in each recommended quantity.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter (as amended by subsection (c)(2)) is further amended by inserting after the item relating to section 2384 the following new item:

"2384a. Supplies: economic order quantities.".

ADVOCATE FOR COMPETITION

SEC. 20. (a) Chapter 137 of title 10, United States Code, is further amended by inserting after section 2306 the following new section:

"§ 2306a. Office of the Competition Advocate General

"(a)(1) There is in the executive part of each agency referred to in section 2303(a) of this title an Office of the Competition Advocate General (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Office'). The head of the Office is the Competition Advocate General.

"(2) The head of a military department or the Coast Guard shall designate a commissioned officer of the armed forces who is serving on active duty in a grade not below colonel or, in the case of an officer in the Navy or the Coast Guard, serving in a grade not below captain, to be the Competition Advocate General of the agency. The head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration shall designate a civilian in a grade not below GS-16 to be the Competition Advocate General of the agency. The designation shall be for a term of two years. An officer of the armed forces while serving as the Competition Advocate General shall have the grade of major general or rear admiral, as appropriate, unless entitled to a higher grade under another provision of law.

"(3) The head of an agency shall provide the Competition Advocate General of the agency such staff or assistance as may be necessary to carry out the duties and responsibilities of the advocate for competition.

"(b)(1) The Office of the Competition Advocate General of an agency shall, under the direction of the head of the agency, promote competition in the procurement of property and services by the agency.

"(2) The Office of the Competition Advocate General of an agency shall, under the direction of the head of the agency—

"(A) review the purchasing and contracting activities of the agency;

"(B) identify and report to the head of the agency—

"(i) opportunities to achieve competition on the basis of price and other significant factors in the purchases and contracts of the executive agency;

"(ii) solicitations and proposed solicitations which include unnecessary detailed specifications or unnecessarily restrictive statements of need which may reduce competition in the procurement activities of the executive agency; and

"(iii) any other condition or action which has the effect of unnecessarily restricting competition in the procurement actions of the agency.

"(c)(1) The Competition Advocate General of an agency shall review each proposed noncompetitive procurement in the agency involving more than $100,000 before a solicitation for the procurement is issued and shall recommend to the procurement or program officer involved specific acquisition actions as appropriate.

"(2) An agency need not delay the issuance of a solicitation for a noncompetitive procurement for more than 10 working days in the event of a procurement of more than $100,000 but less than $10,000,000, or for more than 15 working days in the event of a procurement of $10,000,000 or more, for the purposes of permitting the Competition Advocate General to accomplish the review referred to in subsection (c)(1).

"(3) The agency may waive submission of a solicitation for a noncompetitive procurement to the Competition Advocate General if—

"(A) the solicitation deals with a highly classified program and the head of the agency, or his designee not below the level of an Assistant Secretary, determines that review by the Competition Advocate General is not consistent with the security requirements of such program; or

"(B) the head of the agency, or his designee not below the level of an Assistant Secretary, determines that the urgency of the procurement is of such an extreme nature that the procurements should not be delayed for review by the Competition Advocate General.

"(4) At least 15 days before a procurement or program officer takes or directs an action inconsistent with a recommendation made by a Competition Advocate General under pargraph (1), the officer shall submit a written justification for such action to the head of the procuring activity, and shall transmit a copy of the justification to the Competition Advocate General of the agency.

"(d)(1) Each head of an agency shall transmit annually to the Senate and the House of Representatives a report detailing any procurements made by the agency which were inconsistent with any recommendation made under subsection (c)(1). Such annual report shall include the annual report required by paragraph (2) to be made by the Competition Advocate General of the agency.

"(2) Each Competition Advocate General of an agency shall prepare and transmit to the head of the agency an annual report describing the activities of the Office under this section during the preceding year.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 2306 the following new item:

"2306a. Office of the Competition Advocate General.".

COMPUTER CAPABILITY IMPROVEMENT PLAN

SEC. 21. Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall transmit to the Congress a plan to substantially improve the Department of Defense computer capability to store and rapidly access data that is needed for the efficient procurement of spare parts. Such plan shall provide for a computer data base that includes price and procurement history, parts identification, sources of supply, and other relevant information. The plan shall specify a time frame for implementation and projected cost of implementation of the improvements.

MINIMUM TOUR OF DUTY FOR OFFICERS ASSIGNED TO CERTAIN DUTIES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

SEC. 22. (a) The tour of duty of an officer of the Armed Forces assigned as a program manager of a major defense acquisition program (as defined in section 139a(a) of title 10, United States Code) shall be (1) not less than four years, or (2) until completion of a major program milestone (as defined in regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense).

(b) The tour of duty of an officer of the Armed Forces assigned as the commander of the Army Materiel Development and Readiness Command, the Naval Materiel Command, the Air Force Systems Command, or the Air Force Logistics Command shall not be less than four years.

(c) The length of the tour of duty prescribed in subsection (a) or (b) may be waived in the case of any officer by the Secretary of the military department of which the officer is a member. Such authority may not be delegated.

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 19. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the amendments made by this Act shall take effect 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b)(1) The amendments made to section 8(d) of the Small Business Act by subsections (b) and (c) of section 6 of this Act shall take effect immediately upon enactment, and shall be included in all contracts required to contain the clauses contained in paragraph (3) of section 8(d) of the Small Business Act which are awarded on or after the date 180 days following the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) The amendments made to section 8(e) of the Small Business Act by section 6(a) of this Act shall apply to procurement actions initiated on or after the date 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(3) The amendments made by sections 5, 10, and 12 shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

Amend the title so as to read "an Act to amend the Small Business Act and title 10, United States Code, to enhance competition in Government procurement."

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. DIXON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read "A bill to amend the Small Business Act and title 10, United States Code, to enhance competition in Government procurement.".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 975 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I wish to take this opportunity to express my appreciation—and I am sure that of the entire Senate—to Senator WEICKER and Senator DIXON for expeditious handling of the bill and for producing, I believe, a unanimous vote.

It is an important piece of legislation, one that has been controversial and has been brought to the Senate in a form that every Member can support. I congratulate the two managers for work well done.

The Senate continued with the consideration of H.R. 6040.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I intend to consult with the managers and other Senators to see if there will be a vote on or in relation to this amendment.

It is not the intention of the leadership on this side to ask the Senate to remain in session later than 6 o'clock.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. I wonder if the leader could give us an indication of what tomorrow night might be in terms of finishing the supplemental appropriations bill. Could we expect a late session?

Mr. BAKER. May I in turn inquire of the chairman of the committee what his preference would be?

Mr. HATFIELD. My preference would be to press on to complete it, no matter how many hours it takes. I indicated earlier today that we have $700 million for food stamps in this bill. That program will expire in a couple of weeks. I feel very strongly that by the time we complete this matter tomorrow and go on to conference on Thursday and have a conference report back, in order to vote on Friday, we have to finish this bill tomorrow night or early Thursday morning.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, in view of that rather stern assessment of the situation by the chairman of the committee, I think I have no responsible alternative except to say that Senators should expect to work long tomorrow, perhaps late into the evening and—heaven forbid—maybe until even Thursday morning.

I yield now to the distinguished Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. I say to the majority leader that the question I had was asked by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, we will have a cloture vote tomorrow at 12 o'clock. If cloture is invoked, we will have to finish debate on the motion to waive the Budget Act.

As I announced earlier, it will not be the intention of the leadership then to go back to the agriculture bill, although it will be available, but, rather, to resume consideration of the supplemental appropriations bill.

We will be in session late tomorrow, well into the evening, and perhaps even into Thursday morning, if necessary, in order to try to complete this bill and go to conference with the House of Representatives.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. BUMPERS. Does that require a unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. BAKER. No, Mr. President; I am happy to say it does not. All I can hope for is tender mercy from all of my colleagues.

AMENDMENT NO. 3609

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I believe that the pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is amendment numbered 3609 to H.R. 6040 by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the amendment is being offered by the Senator from Nebraska. It would be my hope we can complete the action on that amendment this evening and I believe at this point I would have to make the assessment that there is likely to be a rollcall of some kind dealing with that amendment.

But I yield the floor for the Senator from Nebraska to pursue his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair and I thank the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

To expedite this matter I will say at this time maybe we can come to some kind of agreement with regard to time and a time certain for a vote. I simply explain to the Senate that when I offered this amendment that I am going to comment on quite briefly, I assumed that it would be unanimously accepted and was not intending to ask for a time-consuming rollcall vote. Since offering it, however, I tell the President that there has been an indication that it might not be unanimously accepted by some Senators on that side of the aisle. So I am prepared to go to a vote on this, not at my insistence but at theirs. So I would certainly say in order to accommodate everyone if we could have a time certain for debate a few minutes on each side, and then up-or-down rollcall vote, I would be happy to accommodate not only the Senate but the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I wish to suggest the absence of a quorum for the reason of having an opportunity to discuss the amendment with the sponsor of the amendment to see if we could work out something. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we temporarily lay aside the Exon amendment at this moment and the two committee amendments in order to provide an opportunity for the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON] to offer an amendment to be disposed of very quickly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from California is recognized.

LAND TRANSFER AT GOLDEN GATE NATIONAL RECREATION AREA

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I rise to discuss a provision in the pending measure, H.R. 6040, as reported from the Committee on Appropriations. At the conclusion of my remarks, I will make a point of order against a certain provision in the measure on the grounds that that provision constitutes legislation on an appropriations bill and is therefore in violation of rule 16 of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

The provision about which I am concerned relates to the transfer of a parcel of land at the Golden Gate National Recreation Area—known as the GGNRA—from the Department of the Interior to the Veterans' Administration so that that land—approximately 6 acres of recreational area—could be turned into a parking lot by the VA at the San Francisco VA Medical Center.

Mr. President, I am strongly opposed to such a transfer.

The San Francisco VA Medical Center is one of the finest VA facilities in the United States. Its location and close affiliation with the University of California at San Francisco School of Medicine equip it to recruit and retain an excellent and dedicated health-care staff that renders a high quality of care. But the operation of this facility is plagued day in and day out by an absolutely intolerable parking situation.

According to VA parking surveys, there currently exists at the medical center a deficit of 153 available parking spaces. This has created a massive problem both on the facility's grounds and, as a result of the parking overflow onto neighboring streets, in the surrounding facility. Anyone who has ever visited this facility can attest to the nightmare dimensions of the parking problem.

For over 4 years, I have been actively involved in attempting to work out a solution to this problem and to the twin dilemma of providing VA nursing home care beds that are badly needed to serve veterans in San Francisco in a manner that would be acceptable to all those concerned—the veterans' community, the neighbors, and environmental groups.

Last year, Mr. President, we believed that we had found that solution. After years of negotiations, the VA proposed the construction of a 120-bed nursing home care unit and the construction of a 2-level parking facility at the San Francisco VAMC. That solution—combined with the subsequent addition of a third and fourth level on the parking structure—would completely eliminate the parking problems at the facility.

However, it became apparent quite quickly that the solution would not be easily achieved. The House readily approved the funding for both the nursing home unit and the parking garage. In the Senate, however, the Committee on Appropriations, upon the recommendations of the Subcommittee on HUD-Independent Agencies chaired by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN], deleted that portion of the project's costs associated with the parking structure—$4 million. The distinguished chairman had concerns that the VA had not fully explored alternative solutions to the severe parking problem at the VAMC and specifically about the failure of the VA and the Department of the Interior to develop a mutually acceptable arrangement for additional VA parking on national park land adjacent to the medical center.

During Senate debate on the HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1984 on June 21, 1983, the Senator from Utah and I discussed this matter. I noted that, as the ranking minority member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I fully appreciated his concerns about spending VA medical construction funds on parking. However, the parking problems are so massive and persistent at the San Francisco VAMC that they threaten the medical center's future as a top-quality health-care facility. When I expressed my hope that a way could be found to restore the funding for the parking facility in conference on H.R. 3133, the distinguished chairman suggested the possibility that, if the funding were provided for the facility, the VA be directed not to proceed with working drawings before a fixed date by which the VA would be required to report to the Appropriations Committees on certain matters. These matters included efforts to reach agreement between the VA and the Department of the Interior on a long-term arrangement, and a discussion, if an agreement had not been reached, of whether it was still desirable to construct a nursing home unit at San Francisco.

Mr. President, as we all know, the chairman of the HUD-Independent Agencies Subcommittee keeps his word, and the procedure I have just outlined—that is, restoration of the funding coupled with a required report—was, indeed, the outcome of the conference.

On September 21, 1983, in compliance with the directions in the joint statement accompanying the conference report on the HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1984, the VA reported to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee on the results of its discussion with the Department of the Interior. In short, those discussions—although producing a temporary solution to the parking problem—were unsuccessful because the Department of the Interior land at GGNRA had been set aside pursuant to law for outdoor recreation and open space. On the basis of this report, the Senator from Utah wrote the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs on October 25, 1983, advising that the committee had approved the two-level parking structure designed to support a potential future expansion of an additional two levels.

Mr. President, while I would have preferred that the VA have been permitted to proceed with all four levels of the parking structure at that time, I was reassured by the committee's position that if it appeared that an expansion of the two-level structure was required, the VA should submit a request for additional funds for that purpose and that the committee would consider it through the regular budget process.

Subsequently, in February of this year, as part of its fiscal year 1985 budget request, the VA did submit a request for the third and fourth levels of the parking structure. However, this year both the House and Senate Appropriations Committees were so concerned by the process by which the VA made determinations and decisions in its construction program that rather than approve specific projects, the committees instructed the VA to submit to them by September 1, a new, revised listing of the projects that it proposes to begin in fiscal year 1985.

However, Mr. President, the funding for the third and fourth levels of the parking garage—$3 million—was deleted in the total major construction amount approved by the Senate Appropriations Committee and subsequently by the Senate and the Congress. Nevertheless, the joint statement accompanying the conference report on the fiscal year 1985 appropriations measure—House Report 98-867—indicates that these funds were deleted without prejudice and that, if the VA resubmits the project in its September 1 list, the Appropriations Committees will consider funding for this project expansion from fiscal year 1985 funds.

Now, Mr. President, in connection with the pending Second Supplemental Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1984, the parking structure faces a new challenge. As reported from the Senate committee, the pending measure contains a direction that a 6-acre parcel of land that is presently part of the GGNRA be transferred to the VA to be used for parking purposes. An identical provision contained in H.R. 6040 as reported from the House Appropriations Committee was deleted on a point of order on the House floor raised by the Congressman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING], who chairs the Public Lands and National Parks Subcommittee on the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Mr. President, this land transfer is not an acceptable alternative to the construction of a four-level parking structure. I say this for a number of reasons.

First, although it is true that the transfer of the land from GGNRA to the VA would provide a minimal resolution of the parking problem for the VA, the transfer does not resolve the problem generally since it is adamantly opposed by the environmentalists and those in the community who use the GGNRA facilities. In this connection, I ask unanimous consent that a August 6 letter from the Sierra Club, the National Parks and Conservation Association, the Wilderness Society, the National Recreation and Park Association, the Friends of the Earth, and the National Audubon Society, all opposed to this transfer, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 6, 1984.

DEAR SENATOR: This week, the Senate will be considering H.R. 6040, a supplemental appropriations bill for FY 1984. Included in that legislation is an unnecessary and unwise provision transferring approximately six acres of land from Golden Gate National Recreation Area to the Veterans Administration to allow construction of a parking lot.

The transfer is being proposed so that the land can be used for a parking lot, thus eliminating the need to build a parking garage on another parcel administered by the Veterans Administration. The proposed parking garage, although more expensive, is preferable to a parking lot in several respects. It is closer to the hospital and a proposed nursing home, would provide better security and would be more convenient for the veterans.

The City of San Francisco's comprehensive plan designates this land for public open space and recreational use. In addition, the parking garage alternative is supported by neighborhood residents, the California Coastal Commission and local and national conservation organizations.

The proposed parking lot would have a very definite negative impact on Golden Gate National Recreation Area (GGNRA). It would ruin the park values of the contiguous parkland which is of historical significance. The land transfer would set a disastrous precedent at GGNRA. In addition, this parcel of land has special significance since it was once saved from being used to house a federal records center and was one of the first tracts preserved for inclusion in GGNRA.

We know of no case where land protected as part of the National Park System has been transferred for use as a parking lot. Congress should not set a precedent by approving this transfer. This land has been part of Golden Gate National Recreation Area because it is important parkland, and should remain part of GGNRA.

We strongly urge you to support Senator Cranston's motion to remove the provision transferring the land to the Veterans Administration.

Sincerely,

RUSS SHAY,
Sierra Club.
RONALD TIPTON,
The Wilderness Society.
DAVID CONRAD,
Friends of the Earth.
WILLIAM LIENESCH,
National Parks and Conservation Assn.
BARRY TINDALL,
National Recreation and Park Assn.
CHARLENE DOUGHERTY,
National Audubon Society.

Mr. CRANSTON. Second, the use of this land for parking is inconsistent with the city and the county of San Francisco's comprehensive plan which recommends that the area be maintained as "public open space * * * for continued recreational use and that natural features" be preserved. It is also inconsistent with the recommendations of the California Coastal Commission that "further expansion of the veterans hospital should be limited to the existing facility area." Again, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a July 30 letter from the California Coastal Commission to Congressman SEIBERLING, noting that it is "unlikely the commission would concur with a consistency determination for the transfer of parklands particularly when those lands would be converted to a parking lot," be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CALIFORNIA COASTAL COMMISSION,
San Francisco, CA, July 30, 1984.

Subject: Transfer of Golden Gate National Recreation Area Lands to Fort Miley Veterans Administration Hospital, San Francisco.

Representative JOHN SEIBERLING,
Chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Lands and National Parks, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE SEIBERLING: It has come to our attention that legislation has received preliminary approval in the House of Representatives, that would allow transferal of six acres of Golden Gate National Recreation Lands to the Veterans Administration Hospital, San Francisco.

From the information we have received the purpose of the transfer would be to provide parking for a proposed 120 bed nursing home for the Hospital. Please be advised of the following information:

In November of 1981, the Veterans Administration submitted a consistency determination pursuant to the Federal Coastal Management Act for construction of a 120 bed nursing home care unit and a two level parking structure for approximately 160 automobiles. The matter was heard before the Coastal Commission in February 1982. The Commission did not concur with the consistency determination for the following reasons:

(1) Veterans Administration failed to adequately demonstrate that funding was available to construct a parking facility of adequate size to serve the rest home;

(2) Potential adverse impacts and degradation of the Golden Gate National Recreation area, particularly with regarding to public access, and visual resources;

(3) Concern over the geology of the site. The hospital is adjacent to an active landslide;

(4) Traffic and parking impact on the adjacent residential neighborhood; and

(5) Strong opposition from the City of San Francisco and numerous neighborhood citizen organizations including the people for a Golden Gate National Recreation Area.

Construction of the nursing care home and the garage cannot proceed without the preparation of a consistency determination with the California Coastal Management Program and concurrence by the California Coastal Commission. We are still awaiting the preparation of such a document at this time. Likewise the transfer of Golden Gate National Recreation Area Lands to the Veterans Administration cannot proceed without preparation as a consistency determination by the appropriate federal agency evaluating the impacts of such a transfer on the California Coastal Management Program. Furthermore it is unlikely the Commission would concur with a consistency determination for the transfer of parklands particularly when those lands would be converted to a parking lot for a medical center expansion.

We would urge the appropriate agencies to immediately prepare a consistency determination for any contemplated transfer of park lands before legislation proceeds any further.

Our staff is available to answer any questions and would welcome communicating with all of the parties involved.

Very truly yours,

EDWARD F. BIELSKI,
Coastal Analyst, North Central District (San Francisco, Marin, and Sonoma Counties).

Mr. CRANSTON. Third, Mr. President, development of this parcel of land as a parking area is less than an optimum solution to the parking dilemma. The land is not readily accessible to the facility. It is up the side of a hill and remote from the center for the hospital's staff, patients, and visitors. It's conceivable that the only people who would park on this property would be those who had already cruised the VAMC grounds and the surrounding city streets for a space.

Security is also a problem that would exist with this option. And, although construction of surface parking would be less expensive than the construction of parking structure, it would not be cost-free; the land would have to be cleared, graded, paved, lighted, maintained, and, presumably, guarded. Those items are not no-cost ones.

And to those of my colleagues, Mr. President, who believe that $7 million is a steep price tag for a four-story parking garage, let me state that I concur fully. However, last September, when the VA came to the Appropriations Committee and asked permission to proceed with the entire four level structure—noting that there was the potential that the bids received could come in within the available $4 million—the Appropriations Committee rejected this approach. Indeed, the VA itself asserted that the "construction of all four levels as one project, rather than two separate projects, would be more cost-effective * * *." However, that is not the approach that the VA has been permitted to take.

Fourth, with regard to the fact, that the VA is already using part of the GGNRA land for parking at the present time, I stress that the only reason that has been permitted is on the understanding that it is solely a temporary situation. The results of the VA's negotiation with the Interior Department last year provided that the "National Park Service will issue a temporary permit to the VA for the use of the GGNRA lands to park approximately 220 cars for a term sufficient only to cover construction" of the nursing home and parking garage. The only reason why this has been acceptable to those who care about the disposition of the parklands is that it is temporary. Surely, the adamant opposition to the permanent transfer of the lands is evidence of that.

Finally, Mr. President, perhaps the most compelling and logical argument against proceeding in the pending measure to provide for the transfer of the land is that the distinguished chairman of the Public Lands Subcommittee in the House, Mr. SEIBERLING, has made a commitment to hold legislative hearings on the land transfer in September. These hearings would provide a forum, before the committee of jurisdiction, for all those involved to discuss the issue and for the Congress to consider all of the consequences. Surely, the destruction of 6 acres of parkland should not be permitted without a full deliberative process.

Mr. President, as I indicated at the outset of my remarks, I now make a point of order against the language on page 29, line 24, through page 30, line 20, of the committee amendment on the grounds that it constitutes legislation on an appropriations bill in violation of rule 16 of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I have discussed this matter with the Senator from California, as a matter of fact, both Senators from California, and I do not intend to contest the point of order.

I only explain that this parking facility has been a continuing dispute within the VA.

I have opposed the proposition of money for an additional two stories to the parking garage on the basis that there are much higher priorities for patient needs at other hospitals around the country.

Yet, when I asked the VA for a priority listing of their most important projects, they come up with this one first last year and I asked them why, and they said, because it did not get funded the year before.

I simply again was trying to work out a means for providing the additional parking, but I have no feelings about it one way or another, and the Senator makes a point that is in my opinion valid. This is legislation on an appropriations bill. So I do not disagree or contest what will be the ruling of the Chair, but simply do announce that I continue to oppose and will do whatever I can to oppose money for the additional two stories on the existing facility.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator from Utah. May I ask him one question. I concur, of course, with his viewpoint that $7 million is a pretty steep price to pay for that facility. Last September the VA came to subcommittee so ably chaired by the Senator from Utah and suggested they might well be able to do the entire four level garage for that $4 million that had been appropriated for fiscal year 1984, not upping the price to $7 million.

I would like to explore whether we might not permit the VA to go out to bid at the $4 million price and see if that is possible. That would be a way to resolve the problem, spending only the $4 million that the Senator's committee and the Congress approved a year ago and not going up to $7 million.

Mr. GARN. The Senator is now getting into an area that goes far beyond the issue of the parking garage at San Francisco and that is the deplorable state of the priority list from the Veterans' Administration. Since I have been chairman of the subcommittee I have been trying very hard to get a priority listing of the most urgent projects for patients need for veterans' health care around this country and I have yet to receive that list.

So, in this year's appropriation bill, we only appropriated a total. We did not earmark for any facilities and I have turned down all sorts of Senators from high need areas like Florida, where they have a very fast growing veteran population there, in an attempt and I would hope that the Senator from California who is a member of the authorizing commitee would be helpful in telling the VA that we would like priority listing of these projects so we can move ahead.

So I am not willing to go ahead for parking garage or hospital or anything anyplace until I can force the VA to come up with a priority listing.

Mr. CRANSTON. The Senator from California totally agrees: First, on the priorities in general; and second, on the specific matter in terms of the VA listing the additional two levels as its top construction priority for fiscal year 1985. Indeed, Senator SIMPSON, the chairman of our committee, on which I serve as the ranking minority member, and I have already stressed to the VA—and done so repeatedly—our concerns about VA construction priorities. We look forward to working with the Appropriations Subcommittee on the September 1 priority list that the VA will be submitting, to which I referred in my earlier remarks.

Let me return for a moment to my question to the Senator from Utah. Four million dollars has already been appropriated for the parking structure. I am not talking about any new appropriation that would have provided for that facility. What I would like to do is see if we cannot have the VA go out to bid, and see if—as an alternative bid proposal—whole four level facility could be built for that money that has already been appropriated. If the bid comes in higher, then the VA obviously would not proceed at that point with a four level facility.

Mr. GARN. I would be happy to discuss it further with the Senator from California, but not to the make a commitment at this time.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator very, very much.

I thank the Senator from Oregon as well as the Senators from Nebraska and Oklahoma for allowing me to conclude this matter at this time.

Mr. HATFIELD. I am happy to accommodate the Senator from California.

Mr. President, at this time, I believe the Senator from Nebraska has a compromise, or a resolution to this amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 3609

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, in order to expedite matters, we have worked out extremely minor phraseology changes which I propose to the amendment that is currently lying on the desk. I make specific reference to line 14, immediately after the number "4", strike the word "current" and on the same line after the word "have", insert the word "substantially" so that line 14 would read "(4) Monetary and fiscal policies have substantially caused". And the only other minor change is on line 16, page 2, at the end of line 16, after the word "in" insert the words "obtaining as favorable" and strike——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Would the Senator start over again on that?

Mr. EXON. On line 16, after the word "in" on the end of line 16, insert three words after "in": "obtaining as favorable" and on line 17, strike the words "securing similar". Therefore, lines 16, 17, and 18 will read as corrected beginning on line 16. "(10) American farmers have been unsuccessful in obtaining as favorable special treatment from private banks or the Federal Government."

Mr. President, those are the corrections that have been agreed to. I would like to make a few remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is modified in accordance with the corrections of the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment (No. 3609), as modified, follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. . (a) The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the competing credit demand by State and local governments, agriculture, business, and consumers, aggravated by massive Federal debt financing and increasing credit demands by foreign governments, continue to cause serious economic disruption in rural America;

(2) the United States has a vital interest in protecting the economic health of American farmers;

(3) the American farmer had been caught in an unprecedented credit squeeze;

(4) monetary and fiscal policies have substantially caused real interest rates to remain at two or three times historic levels of such rates;

(5) high real interest rates have dramatically increased the value of the dollar to the detriment of farmers who devote at least one out of three acres of land to production for export;

(6) the average value of an acre of farm land fell this year for the third year in a row, the longest sustained decline since the Great Depression;

(7) the total amount of debt owed by American farmers is $203,800,000,002;

(8) last year Brazil, Mexico, Argentina, and Venezuela held $260,000,000,000 in external debt and the interest payments on these loans alone totaled more than $20,000,000,000;

(9) the governments of Brazil, Mexico, Argentina, and Venezuela have been successful in securing postponements in debt and principal repayments, favorable renegotiations, new loan guarantees, and other special arrangements through private negotiations, assistance from the United States Government, and the International Monetary Fund; and

(10) American farmers have been unsuccessful in obtaining as favorable special treatment from private banks or the Federal Government.

(b) It is therefore the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the President, in cooperation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, should exercise appropriate authority to assure that an adequate flow of credit be available to American farmers at reasonable rates and that American farmers be treated no less favorably than foreign borrowers with comparable levels of risk, and

(2) the President, in cooperation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, should take noninflationary actions necessary to reduce interest rates which are currently at levels abnormally above the historical real cost of money.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I ask that Senator HUDDLESTON be added as a cosponsor to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I suspect that we are probably ready to pass this amendment after some negotiation. I want to correct a possible misunderstanding that might have occurred. The amendment was not drafted in any way in a partisan manner by this Senator. I felt that some of my colleagues might have thought that was my intent because of remarks on the floor. I assure them that was not the case. But I think I have the duty to correct a statement or two that was made that I do not necessarily agree with.

I do not agree, for example, that the President of the United States has nothing whatsoever to do with the budget of the United States. Certainly, when I was Governor of my State for 8 long years, I had something to do with the level of expenditures of that State. I certainly had something to do with the budget of that State. In fact, I submitted a balanced budget for 8 straight years, not only because I wanted to, but because it was required by the Constitution of the State of Nebraska—the latter, I suspect, being the driving figure as far as both the Governor and the legislature were concerned. Therefore, it is certainly not all the President's fault, nor is it all the fault of the Congress that we cannot seem to come to some kind of an agreement to balance the Federal budget. A step in the right direction, I would suggest again, would be what I had to do as Governor and what the President of the United States should do as our President—send us over a balanced budget. I think there is no reason to keep it a secret.

I also know that the Congress is not the only one that initiates spending requests. I believe it was the President, and not the Congress, who decided that we needed $8.4 billion more in the International Monetary Fund. I believe it was the President who provided the leadership that he takes credit for time and time again for instituting the significant increase in the defense budget. Therefore, it is not any one individual or institution's fault. We all share in this to some degree or another.

As one of the Members on the other side of the aisle said to me in conversation during the rollcall vote, I specifically was not making reference to you with regard to those who do not want to bring about some measure of control over the deficit. I think it is well-documented, Mr. President, that this Senator joined others in some really strong measures to bite the bullet in trying to resolve this matter before us.

So I say with the minor amendments and minor word changes that I am prepared to vote on the amendment, as amended, if that is agreeable to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. COCHRAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am happy to recommend that the Senate agree to this amendment. I appreciate very much the distinguished Senator from Nebraska making modifications that he has made in the amendment and making it more acceptable. The point in this is to clarify the fact that it is not just monetary and fiscal policies of this administration which have put the farmer in America in such a tight squeeze with respect to availability or the cost of credit. The problems have been building over a long period of time, and are due to a wide range of unfortunate circumstances. There have been of course policies which have contributed to the farmers' dilemma now. But worldwide economic conditions, policies of previous administrations, embargoes of other administrations, and other conditions have put the farmer in the bad situation he finds himself in today.

So I think with the change, the intent, and the meaning that has been made by the Senator of this resolution is certainly acceptable.

One other point that needs to be made, Mr. President; that is, the Farmers Home Administration specifically has done a great deal to stretch out, reamortize, and renegotiate loans to try to keep farmers from being foreclosed or pushed into liquidation. There have been some farmers who have been unable to be resurrected by any of these efforts, but less than 2 percent of the loans of Farmers Home Administration have been foreclosed.

So there have been efforts made, and there will continue to be efforts made. We should insist that there be efforts made to keep those farmers in business who have a change of working their way out of this burden of debt under which they are now trying to operate.

Again, let me congratulate the distinguished Senator, and I recommend that the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Nebraska for working this matter out.

Both sides of the aisle are willing to accept the amendment. I have checked with Senator STENNIS and he has indicated his willingness to accept it.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, there are two things that I want to say first. Senator FORD has asked to be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I will not take the time of the Senate this evening to get into the Farmers Home Administration. I appreciate the remarks which have been made in support of the amendment by my friend and colleague from Mississippi. I found him reasonable. He has been helpful on many, many farm matters.

I am fearful, though, that the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Nebraska do not necessarily see eye to eye on the efficiency of the Farmers Home Administration today.

Our office is being absolutely deluged with concerns by farmers who do not have their requests properly or promptly handled by the Farmers Home Administration. I think it is safe to say that they simply do not have enough people out there to handle the deluge of work that is hitting them today. I think we need to keep a careful eye on that particular Administration to see how well they are responding, realistically, to the threat of farmers falling like flies.

I notice a statistic was quoted by the Senator from Mississippi with regard to how many farmers have been put out of business. I can only say that sometimes statistics do not tell the whole truth. I do not know the situation in Mississippi. I do know the situation in Nebraska today. All too often I find that some of the statistics that are advanced by the Farmers Home Administration do not get to the heart of the problem.

Let me just say this, Mr. President, that the heart of this resolution that I hope we are about to agree to is simply this:

The President, in cooperation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, should exercise appropriate authority to assure that an adequate flow of credit be available to the American farmer at reasonable rates and that the American farmers be treated no less favorably than foreign borrowers with comparable levels and risk.

That is the heart and soul. There was no change made in that during our negotiations.

I am prepared to vote.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I would like to take the opportunity to express some concerns I have while this distinguished body considers the agricultural appropriations for fiscal year 1985. My worries were brought to the forefront just last week when I attended the National Future Farmers of America State President's Congressional Luncheon. I anticipated a pleasurable afternoon with the Future Farmers and leaders of tomorrow, whereby the euphoria and optimism of youth would temporarily draw me away from the problems and realities of the farming sector that exists not only in Kentucky, but the Nation as well.

However, Mr. Chairman, I was disheartened to discover that the pessimism that plagues our farmers is affecting our youth, our farmers of tomorrow. The cream of the crop, the leaders of the Future Farmers of America were expressing their own fears, their own doubts of what the future, if any, farming holds for them. The one bright side I thought existed to the darkness hovering over our farming industry was thinking that tomorrow's farmers might have a better environment in which to practice their trade. Yet, after having lunch with this group, I realized that the policies we set forth now are having an impact on the next generation of farmers, farmers who are in their youth today. Training of tomorrow's farmers can only be accomplished on the farm. Learning how to nurture the soil is an art that is passed down from generation to generation. No class, no textbook, can teach someone when newcut hay is ready for baling, or when the freshly plowed soil is just right for working.

The farmers of tomorrow quite simply are not growing up in an environment that will adequately entice them to enter a profession that is as trouble bound as farming is today.

I could not blame a young man or woman for not wanting to become a farmer. The last 4 years have seen the real prices paid to farmers for their commodities decline by 21 percent, real interest rates paid by farmers have increased dramatically, accounting for almost 11 percent of all farm operating expenses, forcing real farm income to its lowest point since 1933, while debt owed by U.S. farmers has swelled to $215 billion, creating a situation whereby farm foreclosures and forced sales have nearly tripled.

I bring out these points in an attempt to place in perspective what damage is taking place in the farming sector. The farming economy is not only driving today's farmers out of business, but eroding the base of tomorrow's farmers; eroding the confidence and pride that historically attracted the brightest young men and women to a profession that has resulted in technology and advancement of 1 farmer feeding an additional 78 people. The production and capabilities of our farmers is the sole reason an average U.S. family spends 12 percent of its income for food, compared to 22 percent in Japan, 24 percent in West Germany, and over 60 percent in China. The ability to maintain such a comparative advantage in food spending is jeopardized by an eroding farm sector, and more important, by the disappearing confidence in the business that is necessary to attract tomorrow's farmers. I have no figures to accurately determine how many young men and women have turned away from farming as a viable career choice, but to lose one potential farmer from a shrinking supply of young possibilities is too many, and I dare say that we can ill-afford to continue to have a declining morale in the farming sector, a morale that can only be uplifted through a more profitable environment.

Mr. JEPSEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. JEPSEN. Mr. President, as an original cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 130, I would like to speak in support of Senator EXON's amendment to the appropriation's bill which addresses this same concern.

Many of us in this room have spoken time and again in recent years on the crisis in the farm sector, particularly in the area of agricultural credit.

It is unfortunate that the credit crisis in rural Amercia receives less attention from the media and others than the debt problems of foreign borrowers.

This is a question of fairness and equity—fairness and equity for our farmers.

And this is one Senator who knows that his farmers will take priority over foreign nation's.

This past Monday, I chaired a Joint Economic Committee hearing to discuss the continued credit problems in the farm sector with Paul Volcker, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

It was enligntening to hear Mr. Volcker's optimistic outlook on the unprecedented gains the economy has made in 1983 and 1984. Mr. Volcker brought the good news shared by members of the Federal Open Market Committee that economic growth would continue well through 1985.

In addition the Chairman indicated a renewed commitment to a monetary stability that will maintain progress toward stable prices without unduly hampering the complete recovery of the economy.

However, in meetings and discussions with Iowans across the State, and with those visiting in my Washington office, it is still very clear that the thrust of the recovery has not materialized fully in the State of Iowa. And, that is for one principal reason.

Iowa's economy is heavily dependent upon a robust agricultural sector, and, the farmers of America are still suffering.

It is high time that we afford the same concern and fair treatment to the agricultural community that has been afforded to the credit problems of developing countries.

The attention by the media and others seems to me to be sorely misdirected. And it is no wonder that our farmers continually and persistently ask of us: Why do you care more for foreign nations and foreign credit problems, provide foreign countries with more money than you do and care for us?

Regenerating a strong farm economy will do more for our overall national economy. It will stimulate a renewed confidence in our international agricultural markets, and generate the creation of new markets. I am encouraged by Mr. Volcker's endorsement of procedures that provide leeway for banks to restructure troubled agricultural loans.

This policy will go a long way toward preserving the American farmer—the most productive farmer in the world.

This amendment further serves to make that endorsement a commitment on the part of the Congress that we intend to work together, aggressively, to ensure the economic well-being of agriculture in America.

From me, this is a commitment and faith in the people of Iowa, a commitment and faith in Iowa's No. 1 industry—agriculture—and a commitment and a strong belief in the future of Iowa for Iowans and Americans.

I commend the Senator from Nebraska for his efforts in this regard. I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objections, it is so ordered.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment. I ask unanimous consent that I be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3609), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

FIRST EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I call up the first excepted committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

On page 26, line 16, strike:

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT PLANNING AND ASSISTANCE

For an additional amount for "Emergency management planning and assistance", $2,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1986: Provided, That this amount shall be for expenses under section 1362 of the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968, as amended (42 U.S.C. 4103, 4127).

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the vote on the first excepted committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first excepted committee amendment.

The first excepted committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the first excepted committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I believe we have two more amendments to be considered tonight.

Mr. BAKER. Does the chairman have much further business to be done tonight?

Mr. HATFIELD. We will have one or two that will not require a rollcall.

Mr. BAKER. I am prepared to ask the Senate to stay a brief time to take care of those, but I will announce that there will be no more RECORD votes tonight. After these one or two amendments that the Chair has referred to have been disposed of, it will be the intention of the leadership to have a brief period for the transaction of routine morning business. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the pending committee amendment. The Senator from Wisconsin is prepared to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3613

(Purpose: To add $7 million for the International Disaster Assistance account for emergency transportation associated with disaster efforts in Africa)

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN], for himself, Mr. HUDDLESTON, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. EAGLETON, and Mr. COCHRAN, proposes an amendment numbered 3613.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 68, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following:

INTERNATIONAL DISASTER ASSISTANCE

For an additional amount for "International disaster assistance", $7,000,000: Provided, That this sum shall be available only for emergency inland transportation associated with food relief efforts in Africa.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I am offering this amendment on behalf of myself, Senator HUDDLESTON, Senator HATFIELD, Senator INOUYE, Senator DECONCINI, Senator EAGLETON, and Senator COCHRAN.

When the Foreign Operations Appropriations Subcommittee originally considered the supplemental in late June, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] suggested that we provide $25 million for emergency transportation costs associated with drought relief in Africa. At that time Senator DECONCINI agreed not to press his amendment so that we could determine if, in fact, these funds were required. When the supplemental was considered in full committee, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. HUDDLESTON] likewise suggested that we provide $25 million for emergency transportation assistance. Between the subcommittee consideration and full committee action, staff from the Appropriations Committee visited several areas affected by the drought, and had again pressed administration officials as to the need for this type of assistance. Very frankly, we have not received to this day hard facts about this need, although several private voluntary organizations indicate that such funds could be used in fiscal year 1985. Of course, we will be providing additional funding in fiscal year 1985, and since this is a fiscal year 1984 supplemental, we are suggesting that $7 million be provided which, together with nearly $8 million already provided through reprogrammings and transfers, we believe, will more than meet the needs between now and the beginning of fiscal year 1985.

Mr. President, I am convinced, based on staff investigations and numerous contacts with the administration that this amount of money, together with the reprogrammings and transfers, is more than enough to take care of this need.

● Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator KASTEN, Senator HATFIELD, Senator INOUYE, Senator EAGLETON and Senator COCHRAN in sponsoring this amendment to provide funds for transporting emergency food aid to Africa. The additional funding is necessary to ensure that the flow of food assistance to inhabitants of drought-affected areas of Africa is not interrupted.

There is a severe and widespread famine in Africa that is threatening the lives of millions of people. The evidence of the human tragedy caused by this famine is well documented. In recognition of the severe famine in many parts of Africa, Congress has provided $150 million of food assistance for Africa through legislation passed earlier this year. Ninety million dollars was authorized in the low-income energy assistance supplemental appropriations and $60 million was provided in the urgent supplemental appropriation for the Department of Agriculture.

The scope and severity of the African drought has placed a strain on transportation and distribution systems of affected countries that hinder the ability of these systems to deliver food aid in a timely fashion unless adequate amounts of foreign assistance are available. Any interruption of the transportation of relief supplies in drought-affected countries may cost lives because of acute hunger.

We must take all feasible steps, including the provision of this appropriation of $7 million, to assure the timely delivery of food and other relief supplies to the people of countries that are in dire need of immediate assistance because of the severe drought in Africa.

This appropriation supplements administration actions to transfer more than $7 million of unobligated funds from other accounts available to the Agency for International Development to meet this urgent need for transportation assistance. Also, I note that approximately $25 million will be available for such needs in the regular appropriation bill for this purpose for fiscal year 1985.

It is difficult to determine at this time the specific amount of money needed for assistance in African emergency relief programs. However, there are many indications that additional funding is urgently needed for the coming months and into the next fiscal year. I believe that the Senate stands ready to provide needed assistance for such needs as they are identified.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that certain communications from private voluntary agencies involved in African relief efforts be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CATHOLIC RELIEF SERVICES,
U.S. CATHOLIC CONFERENCE,
Washington, DC, August 3, 1984.

Hon. WALTER D. HUDDLESTON,
Dirksen Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HUDDLESTON: Following on my letter of yesterday registering this Agency's support for Congressional approval of 25 million dollars for non-food aid in Africa, let me add our best estimates on where the need for these funds is greatest. I refer to countries where CRS is currently carrying out programs:

Kenya, $2.2 million; Tanzania, $1.9 million; Djibouti, $500,000; Zimbabwe, $300,000; Ethiopia, $3.5 million; Upper Volta, $400,000; Mauritania, $950,000; Mozambique, $1 million; Sudan, $200,000; Ghana, $200,000; Chad, $300,000.

With the exception of Ghana and Chad where the monies would be trained on water and forestry programs, in all other cases the funds are needed to move large quantities of food already committed and for the purchase of necessities such as agricultural seeds and medicines. In most cases CRS has already submitted requests to the Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance at AID.

We appreciate the opportunity to submit this information to you.

Sincerely,

ROBERT J. MCCLOSKEY,
Senior Vice President for External Affairs.

BREAD FOR THE WORLD—A CHRISTIAN CITIZENS MOVEMENT IN THE USA

$25 MILLION FOR DISASTER ASSISTANCE URGENTLY NEEDED

SUMMARY.—The House Appropriations committee will soon mark up the FY 1984 regular supplemental. Due to the extreme and urgent unmet needs of African famine victims, it is imperative that the full committee accept the recommendations of its subcommittee on Foreign Operations to include $25 million in emergency funding for transportation and other non-food disaster assistance.

Neglect of urgent needs.—Despite repeated appeals by the U.N. and drought-stricken countries, much of Africa's need for transportation, medical, shelter, agricultural and livestock assistance has been ignored by the donor community. Despite the arrival of food aid, millions of people are still subject to extreme suffering.

In some cases, ports are congested due to shortages in trucks, spare parts, fuel, workers and supervisors. Thousands of children are dying or permanently maimed due to disease caused by the drought; medicines are not available to stop the suffering. In some of the most seriously affected areas, some people have resorted to eating seeds due to insufficient food supplies. Seed shortages are therefore likely to cause continued food shortages in the year ahead. Also fertilizers are needed to insure the most productive yield as possible. Livestock are also perishing in tremendous numbers due, in part, to the lack of vaccinations available. As a result, plowing and harvesting fields becomes increasingly difficult.

Level of need.—It is extremely difficult to quantify precisely the needs of each country. The U.N. Food and Agricultural Organization (FAO), in January, appealed for about $100 million to meet some of these needs. This appeal did not include the cost of medical supplies or the full cost of transportation of food aid which would significantly increase the FAO figure. The donor response to these requirements has been tragically inadequate.

The U.S. response.—Thus far the U.S. has been extremely negligent in responding to these needs, particularly for desperately needed transportation and logistical support. The U.S. traditionally, has provided at least one-third of all worldwide disaster assistance. However the U.S. response to Africa's non-food disaster needs identified above has been less than $8 million (8% of the FAO figure).

The U.S. International Disaster Assistance account ($25 million annually) used to respond to worldwide disasters, is extremely insufficient even if used for Africa alone. The fund has been virtually depleted for several months with four months still remaining in the fiscal year. As a result, the U.S. is limited in its ability or willingness to respond. Urgent requests have been ignored or responded to with great sluggishness. Evidence also indicates that U.S. missions in Africa may be hesitant to request greater and more adequate levels of food and non-food assistance due to the financial limitations. Without doubt, it is imperative that Congress and more specifically, the House Appropriations committee respond to approving the full $25 million as quickly as possible.

CARE,
PROGRAM LIAISON OFFICE,
Washington, DC, August 7, 1984.

Mr. PETER MCPHERSON,
Administrator, Aid

Reference urgent food needs for drought effected african countries: We intend to submit requests for logistical transportation funding for the following countries within next two weeks:

Chad, $500,000;
Ghana, $750,000;
Kenya, $2,600,000;
Mauritania, $1,500,000;
Mali, $1,300,000;
Mozambique, $1,500,000;

Appreciate your continuing support in mitigating immediate worst consequences of drought.

PHIL JOHNSTON,
Executive Director, CARE.●

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment. This amendment has been cleared by the distinguished ranking member of the subcommittee, Senator INOUYE, a cosponsor, and I believe we have support from both sides of the aisle.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this amendment has the support of the Senator from Mississippi and the floor manager of the bill. I move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3613) was agreed to.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, we want to dispose of one more amendment which will be offered by the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS]. I suggest the absence of a quorum until he arrives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EVANS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3614

(Purpose: To provide an additional $10 million for pay and allowances of Navy military personnel, and reduce a funding transfer from retired pay, defense, by $10 million)

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a technical amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] proposes an amendment numbered 3614.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 87, line 5, strike "$234,630,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$244,630,000";

On page 87, line 6, strike "$40,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000,000".

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, this amendment is necessary to correct a possible shortfall in military retirement funding. The Defense Department provided the Committee on Appropriations an offset for military pay requirements based upon transferring $40 million from the defense retired pay appropriation. The committee recommended including this transfer and reducing the request for new appropriation. Subsequently, an evaluation by the Defense Department, based upon recent execution data, shows that funds available for the transfer are now only $30 million. This amendment will allow a transfer of $30 million and increase the appropriation for the Navy military personnel appropriation by $10 million to offset the decreased transfer.

I view this as a technical amendment to correct an error made in the committee. I ask the chairman if he can accept it on that basis.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, speaking on behalf of both managers of the bill, the Senator from Mississippi and myself, this has been reviewed. The Senator from Alaska is correct and the managers are willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I might say I have used new jargon here, "execution data." The report that came to me was based on "flash obligations." I shall have to define those one of these days, but I do believe it is a technical amendment.

The matter has been cleared, I might say, with the Members on the Democratic side.

Mr. HATFIELD. The Senator is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3614) was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I intend to vote against this supplemental appropriations bill, which totals $8.7 billion in appropriations for 1984. This is $915 million over the President's request—nearly a billion dollars more than he asked for. And this bill is $1.6 billion over the House bill.

Where are we over the President's request? Let me count the ways:

Agriculture, up $85.5 million; Food and Drug Administration, up $14.8 million; Department of Commerce, up $23.4 million; Department of Justice, up $9.3 million; Corps of Engineers, up $16.5 million; EPA, up $54 million; Federal Emergency Management Agency, up $60 million; NASA, up $13 million; NSF, up $1.5 million; Interior, up $71.2 million; HHS, up $67.7 million; Education, up $397 million; multilateral economic assistance, up $16.3 million; AID, up $70 million; bilateral economic assistance, up $63 million.

Of course, Mr. President, this does not count the Central American democracy, peace and development initiative which totals $368 million for economic assistance and $197 million for military assistance. Consider that name. How could anyone be opposed to democracy, peace and development? It sounds better than foreign aid does it not? It is amazing how a change in name gives a program a new respectibility. Remember the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act? Now there was another good name. Or the Deficit Reduction Act? Or distinguishing between new taxes and revenue enhancement?

So now we have democracy, peace and development, which is just another phrase for good old fashioned military and economic foreign aid.

Mr. President, a supplemental appropriations bill is supposed to be used for items that could not have been envisioned at the time or the regular appropriations bills. It is supposed to be reserved for emergency items, unanticipated events and for programs which incurred costs that were unexpected such as floods, and other natural calamities.

Instead, we find in this bill, the initiation of a number of public works projects—initation, Mr. President, a beginning—a breach renournishment study at Indian River County, FL; a saltwater intrusion study in South Carolina; design and harbor site selection at Shotgun Cove, AK; a water supply study for the Savannah River basin in South Carolina; engineering design on the Wyoming Valley local protection project in Pennsylvania; construction of the Willow Creek Dam reaction facilities in Oregon; planning and engineering on the Portsmouth Harbor in New Hampshire; acquisition of the Steigerwald Lake wetland area in Washington State; protection of lakeshore road in Manistee County, MI.

Now, many of these may be worthy projects that should be supported by the Congress. Some of them may have aspects of being an emergency or unanticipated expense. But certainly not all of them. And many of them could wait the normal process of review during the next fiscal year.

In the Interior chapter of this bill, we find funding of $1.7 million to construct a replacement warehouse for firefighting in Fairbanks, AK. There is a $4.5 million add-on for Navajo irrigation expenses, which was subject to devastating criticism by the chairman of Subcommittee on Interior of the Senate Appropriations Committee yet, somehow ended up in this bill.

There is an appropriation of $7.8 million to pay for construction of an operations and research vessel for Alaska. There is an amount totaling $2.5 million for an unidentified research facility in Gainesville, FL.

And, of course, there is the $447 million increase over budget for the strategic petroleum reserve at a time when the Department of Energy, according to the committee report, "is reexamining the requirements for SPR distribution capabilities and selection of cost-effective measures for improving the physical accessibility of the market to SPR oil."

Mr. President, I recognize that supplement bills have traditionally been a vehicle for public works projects coming in the back door and other appropriations which might not survive the test of hearings during a regular process. But even though tradition is being served here today, the external conditions have changed.

Have we forgotten about the deficit? Is business as usual more powerful than the need to reduce that deficit? Are election year politics more compelling than our rhetoric about budget balancing? The answer is, quite obviously, "Yes."

More Military Assistance to El Salvador Is Overkill

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I anticipate that there will be an effort to eliminate the $116 million in additional military assistance to El Salvador that is contained in this supplemental appropriation. I will support that effort.

I oppose this new appropriation—not because I am against President Duarte, which I am not—not because I am against the Government of El Salvador, which I am not—not because I am against all military assistance to the armed forces of El Salvador, which I am not. I am against sending another $116 million in guns, bullets, and materials to El Salvador because, in the truest sense of the word, it is now a matter of overkill, at least for fiscal year 1984.

If the Senate appropriates this money, it will bring the amount of military assistance supplied by the people of the United States to the Government of El Salvador to a total of $234.5 million for fiscal year 1984. This represents an increase of 199 percent over fiscal year 1983 levels.

The supporters of this supplemental appropriation contend that this vote will be a test of our commitment to President Duarte, that if we do not appropriate this additional military assistance to El Salvador, it will undermine President Duarte and his new government. I disagree with that analysis.

I met and talked with President Duarte during his first trip to Washington, DC. Like many other members of the Congress, I too was impressed with President Duarte's personal courage, with his commitment to democracy, and with his dreams for El Salvador and for his people. I wish him well, and I wish his government well. I think we should help him accomplish his objectives.

But there are questions still pending, and the people of the United States are entitled to some answers to those questions:

Will the persons responsible for the murder of the two American labor advisers ever be brought to justice?

Will the murderers of Bishop Romero ever be identified, will they be arrested, will they ever be brought to justice?

Will the two officers responsible for the massacre of 74 Salvadoran civilians at Las Hojas ever be brought to trial? Any further delay in this matter is beyond understanding.

Is the Government of El Salvador willing to enter into a dialog with the insurgents in an effort to bring a cease-fire to the war-ravaged people of El Salvador, or are we supporting a government whose only objective is military victory—no matter what the price may be in lives or human rights?

Does this unending supply of military equipment from the United States to El Salvador really bring with it the promise of an early end to the violence?

Have we really exhausted the avenues of peaceful negotiation and diplomacy, or is it really necessary—for the people of El Salvador to achieve peace—to have more guns, more bullets, more soldiers and more killing?

These are questions of policy, but there are also important questions of financial prudence. Why are we so profligate in our sending of military equipment to the generals of El Salvador when, at the same time, we are so stingy in supporting the needs of our own people?

When we began this fiscal year, we were told that the administration would seek $86 million in military assistance for the Government of El Salvador. We have now appropriated more than $125.8 million in military assistance for that country. And now the administration is asking us to appropriate another $116 million—presumably to be spent between now and the end of September.

I do not believe that the Government of El Salvador has the need for an additional $116 million in assistance between now and the end of next month. And I am aware of no evidence that suggests the existence of any such need.

I do not believe that the Government of El Salvador can actually use $116 million in additional military assistance between now and the end of next month. And I am aware of no evidence that suggests that the armed forces of El Salvador can absorb or wisely use this kind of assistance in this short space of time.

This is not a test vote of any kind. We have already appropriated over $125 million in military assistance to El Salvador. This is a question of prudence as much as it is one of policy.

I believe that this appropriation is both imprudent and impolitic and I urge my colleagues to vote against any additional military assistance to El Salvador.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business during which Senators may speak for not to exceed 5 minutes each, the time to expire at 6:30 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The Committee on Labor and Human Resources was discharged from the further consideration of the following bill, which was placed on the calendar:

H.R. 4164. A bill to amend the Vocational Education Act of 1963 to strengthen and expand the economic base of the Nation, develop human resources, reduce structural unemployment, increase productivity, and strengthen the Nation's defense capabilities by assisting the States to expand, improve, and update high-quality programs of vocational-technical education, and for other purposes.

The Committee on Veterans' Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the following bill, which was placed on the calendar:

H.R. 5618. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, to revise and improve Veterans' Administration health programs, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

The Secretary reported that on today, August 7, 1984, he had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bill and joint resolution:

S. 268. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain certain facilities at Hoover Dam, and for other purposes; and

S.J. Res. 272. Joint resolution recognizing the anniversaries of the Warsaw uprising and the Polish resistance to invasion of Poland during World War II.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. BAKER (for Mr. MCCLURE), from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute and an amendment to the title:

H.R. 1437. A bill entitled: "The California Wilderness Act of 1983" (Rept. No. 98-582).

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. TOWER, from the Committee on Armed Services:

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, from the Committee on Armed Services, I report favorably the following nominations: In the Air Force there are 309 appointments to the grade of major (list begins with Robert W. Allen), in the Air Force there are 3,277 appointments to the grade of major (list begins with David W. Abati), and in the Army there are 261 appointments to the grade of major and below (list begins with Rodger M. Bowman). Since these names have already appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and to save the expense of printing again, I ask unanimous consent that they be ordered to lie on the Secretary's desk for information of any Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The nominations ordered to lie on the Secretary's desk were printed in the RECORD of July 27, 1984, at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

By Mr. DOLE, from the Committee on Finance:

Charles D. Baker, of Massachusetts, to be Under Secretary of Health and Human Services.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. HATCH (for himself, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. QUAYLE, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. DENTON and Mrs. HAWKINS):

S. 2910. A bill to clarify the application of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

By Mr. ARMSTRONG:

S. 2911. A bill to regulate the transfer of funds for humanitarian purposes to nationals of the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam; to the Committee of Foreign Relations.

By Mr. GORTON:

S. 2912. A bill to amend the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 and the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, to provide that Federal expenditures shall not exceed Federal revenues, except in time of war or economic necessity declared by the Congress; to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs, jointly, pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977 with instructions that if one Committee reports, the other Committee has thirty days of continuous session to report or be discharged.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself and Mr. D'AMATO):

S. 2913. A bill to amend the Tax Reform Act of 1984 to clarify that a credit union is not to be treated as an instrumentality of the United States for purposes of determining exemptions from the tax-exempt leasing rules; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself and Mr. WILSON):

S.J. Res. 341. Joint resolution designating August 28, 1984, as a national day of recognition of Father Junipero Serra; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. STAFFORD:

S. Res. 429. Resolution authorizing the printing of the report entitled, "Highway Bridge Replacement and Rehabilitation Program, Fifth Annual report to Congress" as a Senate document; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

By Mrs. HAWKINS:

S. Con. Res. 133. Concurrent resolution to express the sense of the Congress that television stations should publicize kidnapped children cases; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. HATCH (for himself, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. QUAYLE, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. DENTON, and Mrs. HAWKINS):

S. 2910. A bill to clarify the application fo title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

GROVE CITY REVERSAL ACT

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, along with several of my colleagues on the Senate Labor Committee, I am introducing legislation today—the "Grove City Reversal Act"—which would overturn the Supreme Court's recent decision in Grove City against Bell. In this decision, the Court interpreted title IX relating to equal opportunity in education in a "program specific" rather than an "institutional" manner. The present legislation would reverse this decision and establish "institutional" coverage in the context of title IX.

At the same time that this measure would reverse the Court's decision, it would do so in a far more narrow manner than the so-called "Civil Rights Act of 1984" proposed by Senator KENNEDY. It is patterned after more narrow legislation introduced following the Court's decision by Senator PACKWOOD (S. 2363) and Senator STEVENS (S. 2412). It would not amend, and would leave unaffected, such other civil rights statutes as title VI, section 504, and the Age Discrimination Act.

I am also submitting two amendments to the present measure that I intend to offer at the appropriate time. The first amendment would expand the present religious exemption in title IX to protect all religiously oriented institutions whose tenets conflict with the dictates of title IX—not merely those which are "controlled" by a religious organization as is presently the case. The second amendment would exclude from title IX coverage a small handful of independent institutions whose only connection with the Federal Government is that they have students in attendance who receive GI benefits or ADS Pell grants. In order to be entitled to the exclusion, such schools would also have not to have been deprived of their tax-exempt status on the basis of discriminatory conduct and not to have been inviolation of any other civil rights provision of law for a minimum period of 5 years.

Mr. President, the present bill would effectively address the issues raised in the Grove City decision while avoiding the substantial problems of overbreadth posed by alternative proposals. I would encourage my colleagues to join me on this measure.

By Mr. ARMSTRONG:

S. 2911. A bill to regulate the transfer of funds for humanitarian purposes to nationals of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

HUMANITARIAN REMITTANCES

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I am today introducing a bill to regulate the transfer of funds for humanitarian purposes to individuals in the Socialist Republic of Vietnam.

Our present foreign assets control regulations permit, under general license, the transfer of $300 per quarter to individuals in Vietnam. Our Government gave this permission because we believed that most recipients had direct or indirect connections with the U.S. Government or the deposed Government of South Vietnam. We also suspect that limitations placed on people with pro-American backgrounds by the present Vietnamese regime are making it extremely difficult for them to maintain even minimal standards of living under the current economic conditions in Vietnam.

Thus our intention has been to permit people to send money to their families in the Socialist Republic of Vietnam on humanitarian grounds. Representatives of the Department of State, testifying before Congress in 1981, told us:

> The tradition of Americans to assist relatives, friends and others in distress in other countries whatever the state of relations between this country and the foreign country is long standing. It should only be curtailed or terminated in the most extreme circumstances.

But good intentions, as we all know, pave a well-traveled road often leading in directions we might not otherwise take. In 1982, I began to receive information from Vietnamese refugees in the United States which pointed to the possible existence of a systematic program of economic exploitation directed against them by the Socialist Republic of Vietnam. I was told that the Vietnamese Government is taking advantage of the opportunity afforded by our foreign assets control regulations to pressure Vietnamese in the United States into directing payments abroad under a variety of pretexts. I was told that a circumstance of extreme character existed and strong action was therefore required.

In response to appeals for assistance from several quarters of the Vietnamese community in this country, on March 10, 1983, I introduced S. 747 which, briefly stated, would have prohibited any person from exporting from the United States any currency, directly or indirectly, to any person in Vietnam. The legislative vehicle provided by S. 747 permitted the conduct of hearings into alleged abuses of our humanitarian remittances policies, which were held before the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions of the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, June 20, 1984.

From testimony presented at this hearing by Vietnamese refugees, law enforcement officers and others, and through subsequent detailed investigation of this matter, I learned that the problem is far more complex than originally anticipated. I also came to feel that total prohibition against currency transfer is not an appropriate response.

The witnesses and investigators I have listened to explained to me that there is evidence the Socialist Republic of Vietnam has compiled a comprehensive listing of all individuals still in Vietnam who are in a position to receive money from relatives living abroad. I was told these individuals may be organized into small, easily monitored groups and at periodic intervals group members are encouraged to write their relatives and request sums of money. I learned just what form this encouragement can take when one witness testified his 9-year-old daughter, gravely ill with rheumatic fever, was denied medical treatment until his wife first cabled him for money. The little girl died 4 days later before the money arrived.

I learned that in response to such coerced appeals for assistance, Vietnamese in the United States take U.S. currency to banks or, more commonly, to clandestinely operated currency transfer points. Witnesses explained that banks offer an unfavorable rate of exchange, take a long time, and that family members in Vietnam rarely receive all of the money which is sent. Clandestine transfer points, on the other hand, flourish on their presumed ability to move the money involved quickly, at a higher rate of exchange, with no controls by the United States.

Mr. President, it is on the question of underground currency transfers that I am prompted to introduce my bill. I believe that Vietnamese people in the United States need to have some means of transfering a reasonable level of funds for humanitarian purposes to family members in Vietnam, without enriching a regime they hate and under circumstances which protect them against becoming insidiously involved in shadowy underground practices designed solely to bolster the Socialist Republic of Vietnam's insatiable need for a substantial hard currency reserve.

We also need to guard against the building of a presumably Communist-influenced clandestine currency transfer network which is unregulated, invites exploitation by criminal elements, and which presents our law enforcement agencies with a complicated web of deception and intrigue. We cannot permit the Socialist Republic of Vietnam to reach out the long arm of coercion and, taking advantage of our humanitarian policies, pick the pockets of law-abiding refugees who have flocked to our shores for those freedoms our democracy guarantees. We cannot permit millions of dollars to leave this country on an annual basis to uncertain destinations somewhere in Southeast Asia; money which is likely to be used to finance the military adventurism of a bellicose regime.

Evidence indicates that day after day, in cities all across this country where there are significant concentrations of Southeast Asian people, Vietnamese refugees take their money to storefronts and back rooms, entrusting their family's welfare to unlicensed, unregulated, unwatched currency transfer operators who not only skim off a substantial percentage of the funds but may also be acting in the interests of a hostile foreign power.

Not far from this Chamber, a small group of dedicated local and Federal law enforcement officers are presently working on one of the few cases of this nature ever to come to prosecution. Evidence taken clearly indicates that just one such minor operation can account for as much as a quarter million dollars per year. In U.S. cities with significantly larger Southeast Asian populations there are cases under investigation that may involve collection of as much as a quarter million dollars per month from Vietnamese refugees.

Law enforcement officers tell me that investigations into such matters are being forestalled through lack of appropriate legislation and a clear-cut assignment of enforcement responsibility. For example, it can be argued that this problem should be the responsibility of the Office of Foreign Assets Control. Without wishing to embarass the capable officers of that body let me point out that a 1980 General Accounting Office evaluation disclosed, Office of Foreign Assets Control is a passive and modestly funded Treasury unit which relies heavily on the private sector to comply with its regulations. This unit's enforcement section consists of exactly three officers who are expected to cover the entire United States. Vietnamese currency transfers involve a population of over 400,000 and 27 different States. Turning to the U.S. Customs Service for another example, we note that this agency is involved with major drug enforcement operations and other priorities and has yet to devote significant resources to the matter of Vietnamese currency transfers.

Passively waiting for voluntary compliance with vaguely interpreted regulations is not an adequate response, nor should we burden an already burdened Federal agency with enforcement problems it cannot solve. A far more appropriate measure for the Federal Government is to create incentives which, by their very existence, will drive the underground currency centers out of business and gain, for the first time since the dark days of April 1975, a measure of leverage in Southeast Asia which can be judiciously applied to vouch-safe the human rights of Hanoi's real victims, the defenseless people of South Vietnam.

Mr. President, when I speak of leverage I do not mean to usurp or upset our foreign policy direction with respect to the Socialist Republic of Vietnam nor do I contemplate any act of a hostile character. I merely suggest that we demonstrate a commitment to humanitarian assistance for the people of that nation and then permit that nation's leadership to show the world the nature of its own morality.

My bill proposes that there be established in the Treasury of the United States the Vietnam Humanitarian Remittances Fund, consisting solely of moneys paid in by Vietnamese refugees who wish to send such sums to their relatives abroad.

Upon application the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue notes drawn on amounts held in the fund which are payable to designated individual recipients in Vietnam. No note thus issued may be redeemed out of the Treasury unless it is accompanied by a declaration signed by both the recipient and a responsible official of the State Bank of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam which attests to the amount of funds actually received by the designated recipient; that the recipient has actual use of all of the funds which were sent; that no duress was employed in soliciting the funds or in obtaining the recipient's signature, and the lack of any special taxation or denial of human rights imposed on the recipient in connection with the redemption of the note.

Except as thus provided, my bill proposes that any actual or constructive, direct or indirect currency transfer to Vietnam be unlawful, and suggests that it be the sense of Congress that the President of the United States seek to negotiate in good faith with the Socialist Republic of Vietnam for random monitoring of our humanitarian remittances program by a United States or multilateral team of inspectors in Vietnam, and thereby prove before the world the lack of any duress.

My bill proposes that in the event inspection teams report a pattern or practice of abuse of the procedures thus established for the sending of humanitarian remittances to Vietnam, all such remittances will be curtailed.

I urge all my colleagues to study the suggestions embodied in this bill with care. I urge my colleagues to afford this bill their earnest support and, as representatives of the family of man, alleviate the sufferings endured by the families of Vietnam, both in our own United States and in a darkening distant land.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill, a section-by-section analysis, and other supporting material be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2911

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. (a) That there is established in the Treasury of the United States the Viet-Nam Humanitarian Remittances Fund (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Fund"), which shall consist of amounts received under subsection (b).

(b) Any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States may transfer up to $300 during any 30-day period to an individual national of the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam if he or she makes payment to the Fund in like amount, together with a written request for transfer of such payment by the Secretary of the Treasury to the designated national of the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam. Any such request shall be in such form as the Secretary shall prescribe and shall specify—

(1) the name and address of the intended recipient;

(2) the name and address of the sender;

(3) the relationship, if any, between the sender and the recipient; and

(4) the total amount being sent.

(c)(1) Within a reasonable time after receipt of a written request described in subsection (b), the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue notes to the individual designated in such written request and drawn on amounts held in the Fund and redeemable only by the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam in favor of the designated recipient. The Secretary of the Treasury may not issue such a note to the Government of the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam, the State Bank of the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam, or any other instrumentality of such Government.

(2) No note issued pursuant to this subsection may be redeemed out of the Treasury of the United States unless such note is accompanied by a declaration in a form satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, signed by the designated recipient and the appropriate officer of the State Bank of the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam or other financial institution of the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam, which attests to—

(A) the amount of funds actually received by the designated recipient;

(B) that the designated recipient has actual use of all of the funds which were sent;

(C) the lack of any duress in obtaining the signature of the designated recipient on the declaration; and

(D) the lack of any special taxation or denial of human rights imposed on the designated recipient in connection with the redemption of the note by the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam.

(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

SEC. 2. Except as provided in this Act, whoever, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, transfers, either actually or constructively, or directly or indirectly, or solicits or accepts or attempts any such transfer of any currency or other cash item or any precious metal or stone to the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam or any instrumentality or national or agent thereof, shall be punishable by imprisonment for not to exceed five years, or a fine of not to exceed $50,000, or both.

SEC. 3. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that the President should seek to enter into an agreement in good faith with the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam—

(1) to provide for random monitoring by a United States or multilateral team of inspectors in Viet-Nam of the procedures used by the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam in connection with the signing of declarations described by this Act; and

(2) to establish time limits for the purpose of expediting the transfer of funds in accordance with this Act.

(b)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall prepare and transmit to the Congress a quarterly report setting forth the findings of any inspection team under subsection (a)(1) within 30 days after such team has concluded its inspection.

(2) The provisions of the first section of this Act shall terminate not more than 3 days after the receipt of any report described in paragraph (1) indicating a pattern or practice of abuse of the procedures relating to the transfer of funds by the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam.

SEC. 4. (a) For purposes of title VII of the International Claims Settlement Act of 1949, the term "property of a national of the United States" shall be deemed to include currency or other cash items sent or attempted to be sent by any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to a national of the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam.

(b) As used in this Act, the term "other cash item" means any check, note, draft, bond, or other negotiable or nonnegotiable instrument, or any electronic communication used to transfer money.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS ARMSTRONG VIETNAM HUMANITARIAN REMITTANCES FUND BILL

Section 1 of the bill establishes in the Treasury of the United States the "Viet-Nam Humanitarian Remittances Fund" which consists of amounts received from Vietnamese refugees in the United States who wish to send such amounts to their relatives in Viet-Nam.

Subsection (b) permits the transfer of up to $300 per month to Viet-Nam through the Fund, on written application to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Subsection (c) provides that the Secretary of the Treasury issues notes on the Fund only to designated individual recipients in Viet-Nam, not to the Vietnamese government or the State Bank.

Subsection (c) paragraph (2) provides that no note may be redeemed out of the Fund unless it is accompanied by a declaration signed by both the intended recipient and a SRVN bank official attesting that the recipient actually received the money and has full use of same, that no duress was employed against the recipient, and that the recipient is not being specially taxed or denied basic human rights.

Subsection (d) permits the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe necessary regulations to carry out the Act.

Section 2 of the bill makes it illegal to transfer money to Viet-Nam by any means, inclusive of underground means, except as provided in Section 1. A 5 year/$50,000 fine is prescribed for violations.

Section 3 of the bill states the sense of Congress that the President negotiate with the SRVN to permit monitoring of the remittances process and signed declarations, in Viet-Nam, by the U.S. or multilateral inspection team, and to establish time limits for the transfer process.

Subsection (b) directs the Secretary of the Treasury to make quarterly reports to Congress on the findings of inspection teams within 30 days after such teams conclude their inspections.

Subsection (b) paragraph (2) provides that the permissions embodied in Section 1 terminate within 3 days after Congress receives a report indicating abuse of the transfer program by the SRVN, and no money be permitted to be transferred to Viet-Nam.

Section 4 amends Title VII of the International Claims Settlement Act of 1949 to permit Vietnamese refugees in the United States to file claims against the SRVN with the International Claims Settlement Commission in those cases where their relatives do not or have not received money which was sent from the United States; payment in the case of successfully adjudicated claims to be made from blocked SRVN assets.

Subsection (b) defines the term "other cash item" as used in the Act to include any check, note, draft, bond, negotiable or nonnegotiable instrument and electronic communications used to transfer money.

THE VIETNAMESE VETERAN'S ASSOCIATION, INC.,
Hayward, CA, July 21, 1984.

Senator WILLIAM L. ARMSTRONG,
Hart Building, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR ARMSTRONG: Thank you for writing to me and asking for my opinion on your proposed Vietnamese Currency Transfer Legislation.

As I mentioned to you in a letter written last year, the Government of the Communist of Viet Nam must be stopped in their exploitation of the Vietnamese Refugees and their relatives that are still living in the S.R.V.N.

I have carefully studied your new proposed legislation to this very grave situation. I concur with your ideas and I would like to convey to you our appreciation to the compassion as well as your humanitarian efforts to help the Vietnamese people.

Enclosed are two copies of a prestigious Vietnamese Weekly, published in San Jose, California; #129 and #130; that covered the hearing of the US Senate on June 20, 1984, concerning your bill #S. 747.

I can assure to you that your proposed legislation will receive a warm acceptance by the Vietnamese Community, and you can count on the full support from the Vietnamese Veterans Association and its chapter around the world.

Sincerely yours,

TRAN NGOC NHUAN,
Chairman of the VVA.

THE VIETNAMESE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDSHIP AND MUTUAL ASSISTANCE OF THE SAN FRANCISCO BAY AREA,
San Francisco, CA, June 29, 1984.

Senator WILLIAM ARMSTRONG,
U.S. Congress, Hart Senate Office Building, Room 528, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: The Vietnamese Association of Friendship & Mutual Assistance of the SF Bay Area hereby express its appreciation and full support of your position taken in regard to the economic pressure exerted by the Vietnamese Communist authorities on Vietnamese citizens having relatives in the United States, Canada, Europe and elsewhere.

For several years, it has been a known fact among overseas Vietnamese communities that monies transferred to Vietnam to help our relatives in dire need, are actually an undeniable boost to the poor economy of communist Vietnam. Knowing too well the hardship and misery that our compatriots have to endure under Hanoi totalitarian regime, overseas Vietnamese cannot turn a deaf ear to their relatives' appeals and have had to keep on sending monies to their loved ones. The current situation has presented a very difficult and touchy dilemma to many Vietnamese in this country: by helping their unfortunate relatives, they are at the same time consciously helping the tyrannical regime from whom they have fled; by sending money to Vietnam, they are directly strengthening the hand of their Communist enemy and help them perpetuate their power over the Vietnamese people.

It is a paradox that has agonized so many of us Vietnamese, yet because of the fear of retribution against their loved ones in Vietnam, no one in the communities has publicly spoken out until recently. Your expressed concern and intentions to do something to correct this exploitative situation are deeply appreciated.

Senator, please do not let up your efforts to help the helpless Vietnamese victims. Filled with shame and guilt, we have nothing to offer you but our support and backing in your noble endeavors. We wish you the best for your success.

Sincerely,

LE NGOC LINH, Chairman.

ARLINGTON, VA, July 16, 1984.

Hon. WILLIAM L. ARMSTRONG,
Senator, Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR ARMSTRONG: Thank you for your letter dated June 29, 1984 regarding your efforts as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs to stem the flow of illegal transfers of currency between the United States of America and the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam.

We deeply appreciate your kind initiative to share relevant information on the activities of the Committee and your staff consultant on a matter of great interest to more than half a million Vietnamese living in this country. As you know, all of them had escaped from the Communist invaders, leaving behind all their real estates and properties and, worse of all, their close and distant relatives under the Communist dictatorship. Their problem is well defined in your letter: "How to send money to family members in Vietnam without enriching the Hanoi Government and without utilizing underground currency transfer points here in the United States".

As publisher and Managing Editor of one of major Vietnamese anti-Communist Magazines serving the Overseas readership, I have given wide coverage of Operations "Victor" and will not fail to keep our readers informed of subsequent developments on this subject. In this sense, I am appreciative of whatever information through your channel to enable our Magazine to give our input and contribution in conjunction with your efforts and in keeping with the interest of the U.S. Government to sanitize this problem.

With regard to the document attached to your letter, we fully concur with the main purpose of the proposed legislation. As for the details of the proposal in question, they will ultimately require the opinion of the Legal Advisors and General Counsel of the Department of Justice, Department of State and the Department of the Treasury of the United States. The self-exiled Vietnamese whose commitment to destroy the current Communist regime in Vietnam is irreversible, are fully confident that their lawful interests would be protected by the American Government and dedicated politicians like you and your eminent colleagues.

Please accept, Senator Armstrong, the assurances of my highest consideration.

NGUYEN THANH HOANG.

SAN FRANCISCO, CA, June 25, 1984.

Hon. WILLIAM ARMSTRONG,
U.S. Senator,
Washington, DC.

SIR: We, the undersigned, a group of Vietnamese refugees residing in San Francisco and San Jose, California, have the honour to present to you the following petition:

Whereas, ever since South Vietnam was abandoned to the Communists in April 1975 and the Vietnamese people subjugated under the ruthless domination of the Hanoi rulers,

Whereas, while the people of Vietnam have been living a miserable life, toiling at hard labor but can barely feed themselves, the Hanoi rulers have embarked on a war of aggression against Cambodia to pursue their policy of expansionism over Indochina,

Whereas, after the Communist takeover, over one million of the "liberated" people of Vietnam, including those from the North, have fled the Communist "paradise" and scattered all over the world, taking with them the much needed skills and technical know-how to efficiently run the country, thereby worsening Vietnam's economy, already beset with corruption, incompetence, low productivity, and heavily burdened by the war in Cambodia,

Whereas, in the face of these huge and mounting economic problems, the Communist rulers have made it a policy to fully exploit Vietnamese living overseas, particularly those in the United States, by exerting pressure on their relatives still in Vietnam, to request for ever increasing sums for transfer to Vietnam,

Whereas, while millions of valuable U.S. dollars and other foreign exchange have been channeled officially to the coffers of Vietnam's Bank of Foreign Trade every week, an ever higher volume of dollars and foreign currencies have also passed through a number of underground Vietnamese Communist fronts set up in this country,

Whereas, through this shameless exploitation of overseas Vietnamese, the Hanoi rulers stand to gain three ways: (1) the acquisition of much needed foreign exchange without having to export anything; (2) the ridiculously low rate of exchange against their pitiful Dong, which has no significant value in international markets, and (3) the withholding of part of the transferred amounts from senders' relatives in Vietnam.

Whereas, because of these enormous benefits it has been Hanoi's policy to play on the strongly emotional family ties of Vietnamese living overseas.

Whereas, we are most gratified to learn of your interest and determination to expose the economic blackmail of Communist Vietnam against its own people, and, through the Congress, propose corrective action to stop this exploitation and restrict the dollar drain,

Therefore, we fully support your action and urge you, in the name of justice and humanity, to consider the various factors involved and make fair and just proposals to protect Vietnamese residents in this country. Please accept our deep gratitude.

Made in San Francisco, June 25, 1984.

SAN JOSE, CA.

Senator WILLIAM L. ARMSTRONG,
Room 528, Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SIR: I and my family heard about a bill that prohibit any person from the U.S.A. to send the money to Vietnam from you. We have discussed that with my friends who were the Vietnamese refugees, and we agreed that we strongly support you for that bill. That was an excellent idea, we cannot help our enemy to have money to use that against us and to invade Cambodia and Laos. The money we sent to Communist government just help them to build up their army to stir the trouble in Indochinese. We must stop that.

To my understanding most of Indochinese refugees now are on welfare. They did not use that money to adjust their new life. They sent the money home for relatives. They did not care to build up their life in their new home and independently. So they just depend on welfare. If we stop them sending money home, they can use that money to help themselves here. They can improve their ability and off from welfare. We can use that money to help new refugees.

My friends, my family strongly support your bill.

We must stop to help our ememy.

Very respectfully yours,

———.

A STUDY OF VIETNAMESE INVOLVEMENT IN CLANDESTINE INTERNATIONAL CURRENCY TRANSFERS

(By William L. Cassidy)

INTRODUCTION

From the period commencing May, 1983 through February, 1984 I served as a consultant with the U.S. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service Office of Investigations, where it was my task to participate in the creation and subsequent operations of an investigation into Vietnamese organized crime and currency transfers informally known as Project VICTOR. During the course of this investigation I invested approximately 2,000 hours of active involvement in travel, informant handling and street-level collection work, operating in the Vietnamese communities in Arlington, Virginia; New Orleans, Louisiana; Houston, Texas; Los Angeles, California; Westminster, California; San Jose, California and San Francisco, California.

The following remarks are with reference to the varieties of clandestine international currency transactions I observed to originate within the community of Vietnamese refugees in the United States. In particular, I will discuss the relationship such transactions have to a postulated economic penetration of the United States by the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam.

BACKGROUND OF VIETNAMESE MIGRATION

Immediately following the fall of South Viet-Nam on April 30, 1975, the United States received several thousand Vietnamese evacuees under conditions of extreme emergency, utilizing administrative procedures of the most transient possible character. A number of these evacuees were persons, often accompanied by many dependents, who had served either the United States Government or the Government of Viet-Nam in a wide variety of official and quasi-official capacities, both military and civilian. Others were persons of social and financing standing, such as educators, journalists, entertainers or prominent businessmen, who exercised their influence to secure safe passage. Still others were the sort of opportunists and questionable individuals who inevitably find their way through the midst of wartime confusion.

In the nine years since 1975, numbers of Vietnamese and other Southeast Asians in the United States have steadily increased. First-wave evacuees have been joined by tens of thousands of escapees fleeing the political intolerance that now afflicts Indochina. This involuntary migration process has provided the United States with a complete cross-section of Southeast Asian culture and society, ranging all the way from members of the Western-educated Vietnamese, Laotian and Cambodian urban elite to members of over a half-dozen nomadic highland tribes and other ethnic minorities. U.S. Department of State estimates place total Indochinese immigration to the United States at 640,798 in the period April 30, 1975 through April 30, 1983. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Office of Refugee Resettlement adjusts the total Indochinese figure to 637,567, to account for secondary migration. Of this number, the Department of State estimates that 424,313 are Vietnamese.

Southeast Asian refugees in the United States, of which ethnic Vietnamese, Chinese-Vietnamese and Vietnamese-Americans comprise the largest number, are concentrated primarily in twenty-seven states, seven of which account for more than fifty percent of the total refugee population. Citing Office of Refugee Resettlement estimates current as of the close of FY1982, these seven states are California, with 225,500; Texas, with 50,700; Washington, with 29,900; Pennsylvania, with 23,200; Illinois, with 21,700; Minnesota, with 21,200; and Virginia, with 19,600.

GENERAL ECONOMIC CONSEQUENCES

As we are concerned with certain economic phenomena attendant to Vietnamese resettlement, we begin by noting the generally expected economic consequences of international migration. The textbook view of this subject tells us that in the initial stages of migration, income will be remitted home on a regular basis to dependents and relatives, including sums which enable further emigration. As whole families are united abroad, these remittances are expected to decline to the level appropriate to assist relatives beyond the immediate family. When a generation passes, they are expected to gradually disappear. With particular reference to the capabilities of late twentieth-century immigrants who direct remittances to communist countries, standard economic theory also advances the thesis that social pressures to be quickly assimilated to the American standard of living will greatly reduce the capacity to send money abroad.

These points and the scenario they evoke represent conventional wisdom on the subject. Unfortunately this can be only superficially applied to Vietnamese migration. Conventional wisdom fails to account for the techniques of economic blackmail and covert economic warfare, as currently practiced by the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam.

VIETNAMESE FAMILIAL OBLIGATIONS

We must acknowledge the special circumstances of the Vietnamese people, both culturally and politically, before we attempt the universal application of conventional economic theory. First and foremost, we must remember that Vietnamese are political refugees in the most extreme sense and their migration is thus involuntary. Vietnamese in the United States are not here in response to ordinary cycles of international labor movement nor are they here in response to the pull of economic opportunity. Indeed, one surmises that the vast majority of Vietnamese would rather not be here at all. The Vietnamese themselves like to point out that despite numerous epochs of social upheaval in their history the current wave of emigration is without precedent. Under the Japanese occupation in 1944-45, for example, a widespread rice famine claimed well over a million lives yet failed to spark any appreciable international population movement.

We must also consider the tramatic nature of the Vietnamese exodus. People who leave Viet-Nam by boat are acutely aware of the grave dangers posed by Thai piracy and environmental conditions in the South China Sea. Those who cross Cambodia are all too familiar with the threat of hostile military operations. To lessen the impact of such perils families are forced to fragment. Only the fit and hardy attempt these journeys, leaving behind wives and children, sisters and brothers, the elderly and disabled. Often a family's entire fortune will be pledged to the bribes and provisions necessary to assist one family member's escape. Those who are successful and reach the United States have not done so for selfish reasons. On the contrary, they have acted from the most moving and noblest of human motives in a desperate attempt to save their loved ones and their heritage.

Americans who have no direct experience with Vietnamese people, or those who have only academic experience with forces that mold the average person's character will find it difficult indeed to properly appreciate the intensely powerful obligation every Vietnamese feels toward his or her family.

Doctors who work in the refugee community will tell you of the high incidence of psychiatric disorders among Vietnamese, brought about by prolonged separation from loved ones and knowledge of the conditions their families are experiencing. Suicide and anorexia are common. I have personally witnessed people who, following receipt of a letter from family members in Viet-Nam, find themselves physically unable to eat for several days and literally collapse in emotion at the sight of food. They know all too well that Viet-Nam is slowly starving to death, and the guilty helplessness they feel becomes unbearable.

Vietnamese send money home because it is spiritually necessary for them to do so. Vietnamese send money home because of the force of social imperative born of a 3,000 year-old tradition of the family as a divine principle. Vietnamese send money home in order to live comfortably within themselves. Tacit acknowledgement of these forces or vague reference to philosophical ideals of filial piety do not do justice. There is no Social Security in Viet-Nam, no hospitalization insurance, no public welfare agency, no homes for the aged, no effective lending institutions, no free enterprise and all the economic and political philosophy of Marx and Lenin has done is scientifically bleed the country white.

In Viet-Nam today, more than at any other time in history, the family is the source of all material succor. If your children or parents become ill or infirm; if they experience financial deprivation; if they cannot afford to pay thirty dollars for the single kilo of rice that cost three dollars before North Viet-Nam's hungry plague reached the once-fertile paddies of the Mekong Delta, then your children or parents will slowly wither and die if you fail to fulfill your obligation to support them.

We cannot emphasize too strongly the significant role Vietnamese familial obligations play in the matter of currency transfers. Again and again we will be compelled to return to this for it lies at the very heart of our problem, both in the exploitation of this factor by the economic policies of the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam and in any discussion of enforcement problems created by proposed legislation. Vietnamese will send money home whether it is illegal for them to do so or not. Neither law nor time will diminish this necessity.

SRVN INVOLVEMENT

Setting aside human motives, one may with ample justification claim that the majority of both legal and illegal currency transfers to Viet-Nam are colored by long and short-term internal economic policy objectives of the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam and to a lesser extent perhaps, external economic policy objectives of the sort commonly associated with economic warfare or counter-economic warfare operations.

When assessing SRVN involvement in currency transfers, our basic working assumption is that Viet-Nam is interested in the acquisition of United States dollars in order to bolster its foreign currency reserve. The best available figures we have, which come from an International Monetary Fund team that visited Viet-Nam in April, 1983, indicate that SRVN's published foreign currency reserves are around U.S. $16,000,000. This of course is an extremely low figure and if correct serves to lend credence to the claim that Viet-Nam is in dire need of foreign funds.

Additional evidence is available to us in the form of public statements by SRVN officials and articles in the Vietnamese party press. I call your attention to an article by communist journalist Ngo Cong Duc which appeared in the Saigon newspaper Tin Sang on February 17, 1981. This article is entitled, "Concerning the Question of Finding and Exploiting Foreign Exchange," and the following extracts may be safely presumed to reflect official thinking in the subject:

"First of all we must set forth a correct policy direction so as to exhaust the foreign exchange capabilities of overseas Vietnamese.

"In the activities aimed at exploiting . . . the overseas Vietnamese, there are two major issues, one of which is that we must have a clearcut and rational policy and another is that we must have an efficient exploitation organization.

"We will have . . . to think of ways to counter the quarantine imposed by American banks so as to leave open a few situations where the recipients in Vietnam cannot normally receive their money from abroad.

"Family members of overseas Vietnamese who have received foreign money can be given a kind of foreign exchange certificate book somewhat similar to a savings account book, or they may be issued a kind of foreign exchange checks. . . ."

These statements, which are certainly remarkable for their frankness, also display a prophetic quality. In the months following their publication policy direction was in fact set forth which has as its stated aim the exhaustion of the foreign exchange capabilities of overseas Vietnamese. An efficient exploitation organization did come into being. More than a few methods were discovered to counter existing American regulations and a system of book controls was instituted to monitor money and merchandise received by families in Viet-Nam.

SRVN INTERNAL REGULATIONS

On August 31, 1982 SRVN's Council of Ministers issued decision number 151/HDBT, which offered the following as its basic premise:

"Article 1: The state welcomes and encourages Vietnamese residing in countries outside the socialist system . . . to send money to help build the country. Families . . . that have relatives residing in foreign countries may receive money and goods from them. The receiving of money and goods must comply with the regulations of the state."

"Article 7: This decision only applies to families who have relatives that are permanent residents in foreign countries. The persons referred to . . . do not include cadres, manual workers or civil servants of the state who have sent to foreign countries. . . . Separate regulations will be promulgated concerning these persons."

This language leaves little doubt as to whom the decision is directed and what it is intended to accomplish. Decision number 151/HDBT did not include the full text of any regulations, which at the time were still under development. The text of 151-HDBT itself promised that, ". . . a circular providing detailed instructions concerning the implementation will be issued," giving responsibility for the development of such specifics to the State Bank, the Ministry of Foreign Trade, the Ministry of Finance, the Ministry of the Interior and the "concerned functional sectors."

Based on information which became available during the course of Project VICTOR, it appears that SRVN officials spent the period from approximately August, 1982 to April, 1983 gradually sensitizing the population to accept new monetary policies and in developing an efficient exploitation organization founded on a comprehensive listing of families with relatives residing abroad. This system of exploitation was refined during the period April to June 1983 and now operates on a highly successful basis.

In the Spring of 1983, Saigon's party paper Cong Nhan Giai Phong published a long question-and-answer type article which describes the exploitation mechanism in detail. According to this article:

"Beginning in 1 April 1983, after receiving the permits issued by the Municipal People's Committee and the list of names of the families permitted to regularly receive money sent by relatives who are permanent residents of foreign countries, the Municipal Bank will transfer the money received by families who have a permit issued by the People's Committee to the precinct or district bank at their place of residence as recorded on their permit. The precinct or district bank will send out notices asking families . . . to pick up the passbook that they will need to receive their money."

The article also states that when a person appears to collect his or her passbook, a payment of fifty Vietnamese dong will be required. Specific transfer regulations provide that a conversion fee of 1.5 percent will be assessed on each transfer and that the bank will only pay 6,000 Vietnamese dong per person within the family per quarter year. An overall limit of 50,000 Vietnamese dong per quarter per family is established and a provision is made for a one-time emergency payment of 10,000 Vietnamese dong in the case of illness, death or other special circumstances.

Excess funds received from abroad will be transferred to a savings account and the account holder will be paid a nominal interest rate. In the case of significant sums, the account holder is also permitted to transfer his or her excess funds to the Foreign Trade Bank where interest will be earned in foreign currency and paid in Vietnamese currency.

SRVN EXPLOITATION ACTIVITY

Exhibit I illustrates the conceptual framework of SRVN exploitation operations, as formally instituted on May 16, 1983. Referring to Exhibit I, note that acting on the orders of the Vietnamese Politburo, the responsible Politburo member asks the City People's Committee to employ District and Ward-level Security Offices to locate and identify individuals who are in a position to receive remittances from relatives living in the United States. Security Deputies, or cadre, at the block or cluster level organize such individuals into small, easily monitored groups.

The system of controls we have described thus far appears on the surface to be a socialist state's normal means of managing the influx of foreign capital. If we in the United States have learned anything by our long experience with Viet-Nam, I hope we have learned that appearances are always deceptive where Hanoi is concerned. Examined in depth, the system here described forms the foundation for a planned program of economic blackmail reminiscent of that practiced against overseas Germans who had families in Nazi Germany.

During the conduct of Project VICTOR we developed indications-type intelligence which told us that at periodic intervals, individuals in cluster-level groups in Viet-Nam are being ordered to contact their relatives in the United States and request sums of money under a variety of circumstances, both legitimate and contrived, such as illness in the family, increased taxes, or increased living expenses. We also have information that individuals are being subjected to arrest or forced resettlement to the so-called New Economic Zones, there be released only upon receipt of substantial sums from abroad. Their property is confiscated by the state, so that when they return to their usual area of residence they are again compelled to call upon overseas relatives for futher support.

In certain areas of the country, this practice appears to be controlled by a quota system, in which cadre are exhorted to produce specific sums from the families under their control and a system of incentives seems to be in place which rewards cadre for generating sums greater than the established quotas. There is a clearly observed cyclic quality to this practice. Intelligence available to us as of August, 1983 indicates that requests were originally intended to concentrate at six month intervals. Current intelligence indicates that requests have been stepped up to three months intervals.

In a typical case, relatives in the United States are being asked to send a minimum transfer of $1,000 to $2,000, in contrast to a previously observed minimum of $200 to $300 ten months ago. In several instances, our intelligence indicates the names of specific intermediaries for the transfers are now being supplied by individuals in Viet-Nam. We have also seen an increasing incidence of relatives in the United States being asked to "settle accounts," ostensibly incurred through debts raised in Viet-Nam by the receipt of foreign money from unspecific sources.

In response to these orchestrated requests, individuals in the United States take their money either to banks or to underground collection centers. I note parenthetically that banking institutions which we have observed to enjoy favor in this regard are Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, Wells Fargo Bank, Royal Bank of Canada, United American Bank, Delta Savings and Loan and the Bank of America.

Bank transfers, which are obligated under Foreign Assets Control Regulations, are routed through Canada, France and Asia to the Viet-Nam Foreign Trade Bank. Underground collection centers or intermediaries are of course unregulated. These centers, which can be either individuals operating independently or front organizations, route the money they collect through couriers or SRVN-supported commercial or criminal enterprises. According to the sources developed by Project VICTOR, underground collectors may be paid as much as 12 to 25 percent for their services, which money is then used to finance criminal activities or the expansion of business fronts. We have considerable evidence that several SRVN-dominated enterprises have been afforded legitimate cover as parcel forwarding or import-export concerns, and as such enjoy licensing by the U.S. Department of Commerce. These firms apparently route their currency shipments through similar firms in Canada, France and Asia, after which shipments are sent directly to Viet-Nam.

It should be noted for the purposes of clarification that not all underground shipments are controlled by SRVN government authority. We do observe that when SRVN security officers locate individual operations conducting uncontrolled transfers, as in the case of transfers conducted by wealthy merchants or families or corrupt officials, the persons responsible are subjected to arrest and reeducation. Following such enforcement activity transfer operations are again commenced under government supervision.

THE FACTOR OF ECONOMIC PENETRATION

In the early 1950s, a brilliant Chinese economist from Stanford University named Yuan-li Wu published a work entitled Economic Warfare, which despite the passage of time remains more or less standard in the field.* In his work, the author described the tactic of economic penetration, and offered a few conclusions which bear close attention.

Professor Wu viewed economic penetration as a phenomenon of covert economic warfare, defining the phenomenon as all those measures which either sought to increase the dependency of a target nation's economy on one's own nation or by design acted to undermine a target nation's economy. Although he envisioned most economic penetration operations as involving countries at comparable stages of development, or the penetration of a less developed country by a highly developed country, he did acknowledge that less developed countries could have recourse to penetration activities aimed at boosting foreign exchange, noting, "Governments of countries that have nationals resident overseas may resort to blackmailing to augment supplies of exchange."[1]

Professor Wu concluded that the value of such activity was limited by the target nation's awareness, stating:

"Unlike the measures of open warfare and economic pressure . . . there are other methods that are effective only as long as their real purpose is disguised. Once their intent is bared, they cease to be of any value to their perpetrator, inasmuch as they can be easily dealt with even if their effect cannot be nullified immediately. They are the methods of covert economic warfare. . . ."[2]

I submit that the exploitation of overseas Vietnamese by the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam represents at the very least a de facto economic penetration of the United States by a hostile foreign power, the effects of which can only be nullified by our acceptance that a problem of significant proportion exists and must be remedied at once.

IMPACT ON THE UNITED STATES

One of the first questions we might fruitfully ask concerning Vietnamese currency transfers revolves around how much money leaves the United States on an annual basis. There are no simple answers to this question. The Office of Foreign Assets Control, through Sec. 500.565 of the Foreign Assets Control Regulations allows the transfer of not more than $300 in any consecutive three month period to any one payee in Viet-Nam, or $1,200 per year. An additional one-time transfer of $750 is permitted for the purpose of enabling the payee to emigrate from Viet-Nam.

In order to extrapolate an estimate of total possible annual regulated transfers based on the $1,200 per year figure permitted by Foreign Assets Control Regulations, we first establish a set of assumptions based on the Department of State's estimate of 424,313 Vietnamese in the United States.

The Office of Refugee Resettlement advises that the age distribution of Indochinese adults in the United States remains stable over a multi-year period at 49 percent with 23 to 25 percent unemployment. Balancing these percentages against an estimated total of 424,313 persons, we may conservatively arrive at an assumed income-producing workforce of 150,000. We further assume for the sake of analysis that of this total, only 50 percent will actively participate in sending money abroad. Employing these assumptions, we learn that 75,000 Vietnamese each sending $1,200 per year can account for $90,000,000 in possible regulated transfers on an annual basis to the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam.

Our working assumption of $90,000,000 per year or $7,500,000 per month is criticized by members of the refugee community for being far too conservative. Citing government information obtained from reliable sources in Saigon, current as of June, 1983, emigre investigative journalist Nguyen Thanh Hoang reports that during mid-1982, an average of 1,000 people per day received funds from abroad through the State Bank of Saigon. Of this estimated average, approximately 70 percent received $100 per transaction, 10 percent received $300, 10 percent received $500, and 10 percent received $1,000 or more. Employing these figures we arrive at an average daily transfer of some $6,500,000 during the period surveyed which estimate is of course inclusive of sums sent from countries other than the United States.

To bring yet another set of estimates into play, we may refer to the November, 1982 issue of the Vietnamese Communist Party periodical Nhan Dan, which claims that 183,000 families regularly receive assistance from abroad. Using the minimum transfer of $1,200 per family, we obtain an estimated total of $219,000,000 per year or $18,300,000 per month.

Our three estimates represent the spectrum of thought concerning the magnitude of possible legal transfers. These of course do not provide for clandestine transactions, transfer amounts greater than $1,200, or a number of other variables.

Lacking the sort of hard evidence necessary for precision in such matters, we are forced to rely almost solely on indications-type intelligence to develop a set of informed suppositions. Based on my experience in this area with Project VICTOR, I will tentatively estimate that approximately $18,000,000 leaves the United States monthly for Viet-Nam. Of this $18,000,000 I estimate that approximately $9,000,000 per month is transferred by clandestine methods and the remainder by banks, trusting that one may appreciate the difficulty in quantifying with desired precision what is essentially a secret activity.

CATEGORIES OF ACTIVITY

Knowing how much money leaves the United States does not tell us how such money is actually handled by the underground. When I began to study ethnic Vietnamese, Chinese-Vietnamese and Vietnamese-American involvement in clandestine international currency transfers, I found it useful to categorize such activity in terms of motivation. Three basic categories of motivation were observed: political, criminal and humanitarian. I found that there is an apparently high degree of interrelationship between each of these categories and touching on any one often led me by association to the others.

POLITICAL MOTIVATION

Generally speaking, politically motivated transactions are of two varieties. The first of these are transactions initiated by persons acting in the interests of the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam, one manifestation of which we have just discussed. The second variety is the transaction initiated by persons with interests inimical to those of the SRVN, such as the transfers dominated by Vietnamese resistance or guerrilla groups.

Any assessment of the nature and extent of such politically motivated clandestine transfers and indeed, all other categories mentioned, begs the several questions of what sources of money are available, how these monies are obtained, in response to what stimuli are they sent, by what means and at what order of magnitude.

When we examine the resistance groups, we find that they generate money by several different means for the ostensible purpose of supporting the resistance effort in Viet-Nam. Among the means employed are the establishment of commercial enterprises with subsequent impressment of earned income; by direct solicitation of the emigre community; by indirect solicitation, through sponsorship of theatrical benefits or the sale of goods or services, and by establishment of nonprofit public benefit organizations with subsequent exploitation of the tax exempt status to gather large donations.

I have heard claims that Vietnamese resistance groups in the United States are also involved in the establishment of criminal enterprises, but upon close examination I find this allegation difficult to support. I do find a possible incidence of penetration and exploitation of the resistance vehicle by SRVN sympathizers, who seek to discredit or disrupt legitimate resistance activities. I also find the criminal fringe occasionally engages in extortion activity under cover of legitimate fundraising. The large, organized resistance groups in this country take pains to protect themselves against these practices and regularly warn their membership and potential donors against falling prey to such schemes.

It is virtually impossible to learn the magnitude of resistance-oriented transfers by any economic investigative technique of which I am aware. This area of inquiry is rife with speculation and unsubstantiated rumor. One such rumor holds that a financial institution in Westminster, California named Delta Savings and Loan was launched almost exclusively with funds generated by resistance groups and serves as the main financial conduit for Admiral Hoang Co Minh's National United Front for the Liberation of Viet-Nam, together with its allied organizations the Viet-Nam Liberation Front and the National Support Movement for Resistance in Viet-Nam.

CRIMINAL MOTIVATION

Turning to the difficult subject of criminally motivated transactions, we find these to be of four basic varieties. The first of these are transfers attributable to specific, individual criminal enterprises, inclusive of most individual family efforts, where the clandestine international transaction is incidental to other activities.

The second variety is encountered in traditional, organized criminal enterprises where the clandestine international transaction is incidental to activities inclusive of narcotics trafficking; trafficking in other forms of contraband; prostitution; gambling; money laundering operations; exploitation of refugees and alien smuggling; insurance fraud, and extortion.

The third variety encompasses those transactions conducted for the specific purpose of importing or exporting large amounts of currency, inclusive of operations designed to transfer funds placed in safehavens during the fall of Viet-Nam

The fourth variety is encountered in the gray area of politically-linked criminal activity, such as transfers incidental to resistance-oriented Neutrality Act violations undertaken by parties not directly involved with organized resistance groups, or transfers in support of presumed SRVN criminal fronts. While we are on this subject, I must relay a strong message which I received from a substantial number of the more credible and reliable Project VICTOR informants. Time and again these individuals, some of whom had extensive intelligence experience in their own country, warned me to consider the impact of money which does not leave the United States but remains to finance SRVN-managed subversive activity. These warnings came from principled former intelligence officers who learned the character of their enemy's financial undertakings through the bitterest sort of first-hand experience.

HUMANITARIAN MOTIVATION

Moving to our final category, transactions motivated by humanitarian concerns, we find that these are extremely diverse and due to their highly individual character are thus difficult to quantify. In general, we may divide these into two main categories. The first of these involve family transfers of the sort commonly exploited by the SRVN government. The second are those attributable to institutional efforts on the part of quasi-official voluntary agencies and relief organizations.

A significant sub-category of the first sort which we have not yet discussed relates to the incidence of bribery and corruption which attends the exodus of Vietnamese from Viet-Nam. Faced with delays of up to three or more years in the Orderly Departure Program, which I know from personal experience to be the greatest invitation to abuse of authority ever devised by two governments, many Vietnamese have elected to bribe SRVN and other officials to achieve expedited processing. Such bribes range from a low of $500 to $25,000 or more.

Humanitarian concerns continue to be exploited both by the political elements we have already discussed and more recently, by organized crime, leading us to one or more potentially interesting alleged linkages with the Chinese Triads. We have some trace information that national relief agencies exist, sponsored by organized criminal elements, various political factions and the like, all of which offer to provide assistance in delicate family matters in return for money or services. We have also occasionally heard of an American presence in this area.

METHODOLOGY

Individuals and organizations engaged in clandestine international currency transactions appear to employ seven primary methods which I will summarize for you as follows:

1. Use of the mails. Individuals have placed United States currency in the mails for direct shipment to Viet-Nam. This practice has been largely discontinued due to an extensive program of mail inspection carried out by Vietnamese Customs and allied elements of the Cong An Bao Ve Chinh Tri, or B2(II), SRVN's so-called Political Protection Police, a ubiquitous paramilitary-type intelligence and internal security force with wide internal and external responsibilities.

2. A family exchange system. Individuals who wish to send money to Viet-Nam are solicited by or seek out other individuals who have solvent family members still in Viet-Nam. A transaction is made in the United States, in U.S. dollars, and two coded telegrams or other forms of written communication are dispatched to each party to the transaction, informing the solvent individual and the intended recipient that a given amount is involved. The intended recipient takes his or her telegram to the solvent individual, the telegrams are matched, and the solvent individual pays the recipient in gold or SRVN currency, at blackmarket rates. We note that the current blackmarket rate floats around 100 Vietnamese dong to the dollar, whereas the official exchange rate is 60 dong to the dollar.

This family exchange scheme has the advantage that when the solvent individual eventually escapes Viet-Nam, a major portion of his capital is intact in the United States and he thus leaves nothing behind. This scheme is favored by SRVN officials bent on defection and the merchant classes. Once tacitly encouraged by SRVN policies, this scheme has been vigorously suppressed since Tet 1983, excepting those cases where it operates under SRVN control.

3. Wire transfers. Common garden-variety wire transfers of the type encountered in most sophisticated money-laundering operations have been employed, usually in relation to transactions undertaken by individuals. We have yet to see a strongly overt SRVN presence in this area.

4. Couriers. Personal couriers are employed to move currency in and out of the United States, going to and coming from Asia.

5. Gold smuggling. Gold, often in the form of 24K chains and bracelets is smuggled into Viet-Nam in corrugated cardboard containers, items of clothing and various other objects, and out of Viet-Nam by concealment in body cavities or clothing. Movement into Viet-Nam has been discouraged by package searches by Vietnamese Customs. Movement out of Viet-Nam has been discouraged by Thai piracy.

6. National relief agencies. National relief agencies are established with overseas offices, chiefly in Singapore, Taiwan and Thailand. Gold is solicited by escape net operators inside Viet-Nam and smuggled out of Viet-Nam by sea, third-country nationals or corrupt party officials. This gold is converted to currency and the currency is deposited in the relief agency's bank recorded as an anonymous donation.

7. Bulk currency export. Package forwarders in the United States sent U.S. curency in bulk to Saigon, usually through Canada, France and Asia. This method appears to be dominated by SRVN operatives in Canada and the United States.

The problems under examination are not simple problems and there are no simple answers to the many questions we have raised. Indeed, the only simplicity we can find is our simple, moral duty to protect the Vietnamese people in the United States from exploitation originating both within their community and abroad. We do not need guilt over our role in their modern history to motivate us. We do not need to cultivate an atmosphere of alarm over the imagined dangers posed by foreign peoples in our midst. We only need to listen. Listen first to what the Vietnamese themselves might tell us, and then listen to our own hearts in order that we may do what we know is right.●

By Mr. GORTON:

S. 2912. A bill to amend the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 and the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, to provide that Federal expenditures shall not exceed Federal revenues, except in time of war or economic necessity declared by the Congress; pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, referred jointly to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

BALANCED FEDERAL BUDGET

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, the bill I am introducing today is a measure to require, not by constitutional amendment but by statute, that Congress balance the Federal budget annually.

There are many in the Senate who would like to see additional discipline made a part of the congressional budget process, but who are not in favor of amending the Constitution to accomplish this. I am among this group. The opposition to a constitutional amendment arises from several sources. Perhaps most fundamental of these is the simple concern that the Constitution of the United States is intended to embody only the most basic and enduring statements of principle, and should avoid dealing with policy debates which are highly specific to a particular time. Matters requiring detailed or technical drafting are almost always better left out of the Constitution. And, prior to amending the Constitution, we should ensure not only that the policy at stake is one amendable to a simple expression of permanent national policy, but also that all alternative methods of reaching this goal have been exhausted.

Many have doubts that the annual balancing of Federal revenues and outlays should, in fact, be our policy. But even if there were no doubt on this score, still it is clear that we have not exhausted alternative approaches. Consequently, consideration of a constitutional amendment is, at this time, at least, premature. By its nature the Constitution is difficult to amend. If we enshrine bad policy into our Constitution, we may have to live with it for a long, long time.

A statutory, as opposed to constitutional, approach to a balanced budget avoids at least some of these problems. Unlike a constitutional amendment, a statute is more easily modified, should we discover that its operation is not as we had intended. And statutes are more appropriate than the Constitution for the technical and fairly detailed language that such a proposal requires. It is for these reasons that I am today introducing this bill.

I know that these arguments do not address every concern about the balanced budget proposal. Questions still remain about upsetting the balance of powers among the branches of Government, as well as about the wisdom of the economic and budget policies that such an approach would require. In addition, a balanced budget requirement would not even address what may be a more fundamental problem: The tendency of Government to grow at an unwarranted rate, and to consume or redistribute an ever greater share of our Nation's resources. I intend to address this latter problem with a future legislative proposal.

It seems clear, however, that the balanced budget statute is at least a proposal worthy of debate, and that it should be considered alongside the balanced budget amendment and other related proposals. Accordingly I am today introducing a bill to require, by statute, that the Federal budget be balanced.

The proposal I am introducing is identical to H.R. 1003, which has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. CHALMERS WYLIE. Fundamentally, what it accomplishes is an amendment to the Congressional Budget Act stating that:

Congress shall not enact or authorize any budget authority which would cause outlays to exceed revenues, except in times of war or economic necessity; and a two-thirds vote of both Houses is required to declare a period one of economic necessity;

It shall not be in order to consider or adopt any budget resolution which does not show a balance, again, except in times of war or economic necessity; and

The President shall take steps to ensure that the requirements of the measure are enforced, except that the President may not take any special steps with respect to appropriations for the legislative or judicial branches of Government.

The proposal is, among the possible approaches in this area, relatively straightforward. In this sense it is closest in spirit to the balanced budget constitutional amendment: A clear and simple expression of congressional desire to change the budget process, and to change it dramatically.

Mr. President, I send the bill to the desk and ask for its appropriate referral. I also ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2912

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) title III of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"REQUIREMENT THAT FEDERAL EXPENDITURES NOT EXCEED FEDERAL REVENUES

"SEC. 312. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the expenditures of the Federal Government during any fiscal year shall not exceed its revenues for that year, and the Congress shall not enact or authorize the enactment of budget authority which would result in expenditures by the Federal Government during any such fiscal year in excess of its revenues for that year, except—

"(1) in time of war declared by the Congress, or

"(2) during a period of economic necessity declared by the Congress in a concurrent resolution which has passed each House by the affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of the authorized membership of that House.

"(b) For purposes of any concurrent resolution on the budget under section 301(a), 304, or 310(a), a deficit in the budget shall not be considered appropriate for any fiscal year in the light of economic conditions and all other relevant factors unless (with respect to that year) the exception provided by paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (a) applies. The projections required by sections 301(d)(6) and 308(c)(2) shall take into account the provisions of the preceding sentence.

"(c) It shall not be in order in either the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider or adopt a concurrent resolution on the budget (as described in section 301(a), 304, or 310(a)) for any fiscal year, if such resolution sets forth or affirms a deficit in the budget for such year, unless (with respect to that year) the exception provided by paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (a) applies and such resolution so specifies.".

(b) The table of contents in section 1(b) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended by inserting immediately after the item relating to section 311 the following new item:

"Sec. 312. Requirement that Federal expenditures not exceed Federal revenues.".

SEC. 2. Section 201 of the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921 (31 U.S.C. 11), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k)(1) The budget transmitted pursuant to subsection (a) for each fiscal year shall be prepared, on the basis of the best estimates then available, in such a manner as to insure compliance with section 312(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

"(2) Notwithstanding any obligational authority granted or appropriations made except such with respect to the legislative and judicial branches of the Government, the President shall from time to time during each fiscal year take such action as may be necessary (by placing funds in reserve, by apportionment of funds, or otherwise) to insure compliance with section 312(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.".

SEC. 3. (a) Section 301(a)(3) of the Congressional Budget Act is amended by striking out "which is appropriate" and inserting in lieu thereof "which, subject to section 312, is appropriate".

(b) Section 310(a)(2) of such Act is amended by inserting immediately after "are to be changed" the following: "(for the purpose of complying with the requirements of section 312 or otherwise)".

(c) Section 311(a) of such Act is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", or would otherwise result in a violation of section 312(a)".

SEC. 4. The amendments made by this Act shall apply with respect to fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1983.●

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself and Mr. D'AMATO):

S. 2913. A bill to amend the Tax Reform Act of 1984 to clarify that a credit union is not to be treated as an instrumentality of the United States for the purposes of determining exemptions from the tax-exempt leasing rules; to the Committee on Finance.

STATUS OF CREDIT UNIONS

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to clarify a provision of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, to ensure that, as Congress intended, the Teachers Federal Credit Union in Farmingville, NY, can proceed with its plans to sell and lease back its headquarters building under the law applicable prior to that act.

The Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 changed the rules for this type of sale-leaseback transaction. With the approval of the National Credit Union Administration, the Teachers Federal Credit Union has been planning just such a transaction since 1982. My bill would ensure that this sale/leaseback could proceed as it was planned, rather than under the new rules inserted into the Tax Code by the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984.

The Senate version of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 specifically exempted this particular transaction from the new leasing restrictions of the bill. The Teachers Federal Credit Union project was mentioned by name. The House bill did not include such an exception, and when the House and Senate conferees met to reconcile their differences, there was agreement to provide broad transitional relief for transactions that already had been planned. The House did not accept language specifically naming the projects to be excepted from the new sale/leaseback rules. General language was drafted to cover a large number of planned sale-leaseback projects. It does seem that the conferees did intend to exempt the Teachers Federal Credit Union, but they may have inadvertently failed to do so for technical reasons in the drafting of the act.

Section 31(g)(4) of the act provides a broad exception for virtually all sale-leaseback projects approved by Federal, State, or local governments prior to 1984. This section states that the new leasing rules do not apply if, first, on or before November 1, 1983 there was significant official governmental action with respect to the projects; and second, the tax-exempt entity entered into the lease pursant to a written binding contract agreed to prior to January 1, 1985. The Teachers Federal Credit Union's planned sale/leaseback clearly met these two tests. Unfortunately, this exception does not apply to the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof.

For certain purposes, Federal credit unions have been treated as instrumentalities of the United States. Therefore, even though Teachers Federal Credit Union is a wholly independent financial institution, there is concern that it may not qualify under the broad exception of section 31(g)(4), despite the fact that the transaction had been planned since 1982. The National Credit Union Administration approved the proposed sale/leaseback in 1982, and the conference report language on section 31(g)(4) interpreted that section to ensure that "the approval of financing arrangements by a regulatory agency" like the National Credit Union Administration would be sufficient to satisfy the so-called significant governmental action requirement discussed above.

It does appear to me that the conferees did intend to exempt the Teachers Federal Credit Union's sale/leaseback transaction, but the drafters of the relevant section were unaware that Federal credit unions sometimes have been viewed as Federal instrumentalities. The ambiguity surrounding the exception, as now drafted, has cast doubt on the completion of Teachers Federal Credit Union's sale-leaseback. Accordingly, I am introducing this legislation to clarify this ambiguity in section 31(g)(4), and make it absolutely clear that, for purposes of that section, Federal credit unions are not deemed to be instrumentalities of the United States. The Teachers Federal Credit Union will be able to proceed with its planned sale/leaseback, with no unnecessary uncertainty. This is a simple technical correction, and I urge its prompt passage.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2913

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) paragraph (4) of section 31(g) of the tax reform Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) SPECIAL RULE FOR CREDIT UNIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph, a credit union shall not be treated as an agency or instrumentality of the United States.".

(b) The amendment made by this section shall take effect as if included in the provisions of the Tax Reform Act of 1984.●

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from New York, Senator MOYNIHAN, as an original cosponsor of legislation designed to correct an oversight in the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, H.R. 4170.

Mr. President, the Teachers Federal Credit Union of Farmingville on Long Island, NY, has long been planning to finance its headquarters through a sale/leaseback transaction. The credit union has 60,000 members, all of whom are teachers in New York. It is not a sophisticated organization attuned to the legislative process in Congress. The credit union had been working on a sale/leaseback for over 18 months when legislation was introduced to prohibit such transactions with an effective date of May 23, 1983.

The Teachers Federal Credit Union approached me later that summer with their dilemma. They had a binding contract to enter into a sale/leaseback as of August 23, 1983. However, the pending sale/leaseback legislation would have killed the deal.

I discussed this problem with the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator DOLE, who arranged to exempt the Teachers Federal Credit Union from the sale/leaseback provisions of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, H.R. 4170. Of course, I am greatly indebted to Senator DOLE for his assistance in this matter.

When H.R. 4170 went to conference, however, generic transition rules were drawn up to exempt many projects from the sale/leaseback provisions of the bill. The transition rules exempted those projects that had entered into a binding contract prior to January 1, 1985, and had significant official governmental action on or before November 1, 1983. Unfortunately, these transition rules did not apply to instrumentalities of the United States which include Federal credit unions. As a result, the Teachers Federal Credit Union was not grandfathered. It is my understanding that this was an inadvertent occurrence: There was no intent to exclude the credit union. The Finance Committee staff has assured my staff that this oversight would be corrected in an upcoming technical corrections bill on H.R. 4170.

The legislation introduced today outlines the necessary language needed to correct the oversight in H.R. 4170. It is my hope that this error can be corrected in the near future and I look forward to working with the Finance Committee to achieve this goal.●

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself and Mr. WILSON):

S.J. Res. 341. A joint resolution designating August 28, 1984, as a national day of recognition of Father Junipero Serra; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RECOGNITION OF FATHER JUNIPERO SERRA

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I'm most pleased to rise with my colleague from California, Mr. WILSON, to recognize one of the founders of our State, Father Junipero Serra.

The joint resolution we are introducing today is a companion measure to House Joint Resolution 603, authored by my good friend from California, Congressman LEON PANETTA, commemorating the bicentennial on August 28, 1984 of Father Serra's death.

All 21 missions of California will celebrate the achievements of this great pioneer on August 28. Father Serra founded the west coast's original nine missions along El Camino Real establishing settlements which later became population centers.

When Father Serra arrived on the California coast in the late 1700's, most Americans knew very little of the fertile lands lying outside the settlements at San Diego and Monterey. Father Serra created a chain of missions 1 day's travel apart in San Antonio (1771), San Gabriel (1771), San Luis Obispo (1772), San Francisco (1776), San Juan Capistrano (1776), Santa Clara (1777) and Ventura (1782) to augment the missions he had established in San Diego and Monterey. These settlements linked the most populated areas of the state from south to north.

Father Serra dedicated his life to working California's land and teaching its people. He introduced to California the cultivation of grains and fruit and—especially—grapes, spawning what is today the richest food growing area in the world and the food basket of our great Nation. He began establishing a wine industry which now ranks among the best in the world.

Junipero Serra's statue stands as one of the two representatives of California in Statuary Hall of the U.S. Capitol, symbolizing the great contribution of Spanish culture to the development of California.

This joint resolution honors one commited individual's life as teacher, missionary, visionary.

In honoring Father Serra's accomplishments we recognize his substantial contribution to the development of our Nation's most populated State.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the joint resolution appear in full below:

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 341

Whereas August 28, 1984, marks the bicentennial of the death of Father Junipero Serra, the famed Spanish missionary and a founder of California;

Whereas Father Junipero Serra, through personal hardship and perseverance, established a series of nine missions along the length of California from San Diego to San Francisco;

Whereas these missions at San Diego, Carmel, San Antonio, San Gabriel, San Luis Obispo, San Francisco, San Juan Capistrano, Santa Clara, and Ventura became religious and community centers which grew and developed into the State of California;

Whereas Father Junipero Serra, through his introduction of cattle, grain, and fruit cultivation to the west coast, established what has become the food basket of our Nation;

Whereas Father Junipero Serra's work demonstrates the importance of Spanish influence and culture to the development of the United States of America;

Whereas in 1931, California included a statue of Father Junipero Serra as one of its two representatives in the United States Capitol Hall of Fame and in 1943 the Roman Catholic Church initiated the long process of considering Father Junipero Serra for sainthood; and

Whereas the twenty-one California missions and the Carmel Mission Basilica, the center of Father Serra's activities and his burial place, have designated August 28, 1984, as the beginning of a year of celebration of Father Junipero Serra's many contributions to California and our Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating August 28, 1984, as a national day of recognition of Father Junipero Serra and calling upon the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 133—SENSE OF THE CONGRESS THAT TELEVISION STATIONS SHOULD PUBLICIZE KIDNAPPED CHILDREN CASES

Mrs. HAWKINS submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

S. CON. RES. 133

Whereas the problem of kidnapped children is a national priority;

Whereas an estimated 160,000 children are kidnapped each year in the United States;

Whereas television coverage of kidnapped children cases has been instrumental in helping to find them; and

Whereas the federally funded National Center for Missing and Exploited Children is the first nationwide center of its kind to assist parents, the judicial system, and others in locating, identifying, and returning kidnapped childen: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the major television networks, their affiliates, and independent stations should broadcast a series of public service announcements publicizing kidnapped children cases based on information provided by the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children or by other sources.

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I am introducing today legislation that will encourage television networks, their affiliates, and independent stations to broadcast public service announcements on missing and kidnapped children.

Each year, almost 2 million children disappear from their homes. Although many of these youngsters quickly return to their parents, an estimated 160,000 children are forcibly kidnapped annually. The tragic formulas of child abduction are being repeated thousands of times across this country. Eight years ago, Dee Scofield disappeared while running an errand at a Florida shopping center. Two days later, a classmate reportedly saw Dee looking out the window of a van, desparately forming the word "help" with her lips. Dee has never been found. Five years ago, 6-year-old Etan Patz vanished on his first unaccompanied trip to the bus stop. Despite methodical searches with bloodhounds, helicopters, and a virtual army of police, Etan's fate still remains unknown. These are just two examples of the tragedy that now daily wracks the lives of thousands of American families.

Unfortunately, the tragedy of child kidnappings is not limited to the initial horror of the abduction. For the child, kidnapping often means involvement in pornography, prostitution, sexual exploitation, and even death. For the parents, they must live in constant fear that every knock on the door, every ring of the phone could mean the final word on their personal tragedies. In this Nation, we face a virtual epidemic of these heart-wrenching stories, and the pain of this tragedy is multiplied greatly by the fact that this disease does not merely strike at one individual but at the very core of the American family.

Luckily, we are doing something to contain this terrible disease. The Missing Children's Act and the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children are important steps in this fight, but there is much more to be done by Government, by business, and by the media to effectively address this problem. The resolution I am introducing is one such vital step that we must take.

This legislation expresses the sense of the Senate that major television networks, their affiliates, and independent stations should broadcast information on kidnap victims furnished by the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children. Many stations are doing this now, and the results have been nothing less than phenomenal. Following the initial broadcast of "Adam" the docu-drama about the kidnaping and murder of a 6-year-old Florida boy, a roll of missing children was flashed across 40 million TV screens. This rollcall included the picture, name, age, and date of disappearance of 55 children. Following this display, a toll-free telephone number was shown. Mr. President, that number was on television for a mere 10 seconds, yet the results were fantastic. For 3 solid days, 100 calls an hour were recorded to that number, and over 1,000 identifications were made on the 55 children. But most gratifying of all, 13 of those children were reunited with their parents. From that brief message, 13 families were pulled from an eternity of grief to a bright and joyous future.

I do not know how much 10 seconds of air time costs, but I do know that the cost is insignificant in comparison to the incalculable benefit brought to these 13 families. For me, reuniting just one child with his family would have made this experiment an unqualified success; the other 12 triumphs only serve to point out the validity and urgency of this project.

Mr. President, similar successes have been recorded elsewhere. Judging from these results, public service announcements do stand a great chance of reaping tangible benefits. We would be remiss if we did not do everything in our power to encourage the laudable and important programs. I urge all my colleagues to join me in support of this vital measure. ●

SENATE RESOLUTION 429—AUTHORIZING THE PRINTING OF A REPORT AS A SENATE DOCUMENT

Mr. STAFFORD submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. RES. 429

APPLICATION OF CERTAIN CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

HATCH AMENDMENT NOS. 3595 THROUGH 3597

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. HATCH submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 5490) to clarify the application of title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, the Age Discrimination Act of 1975, and title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964; as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 3595

On page 4, line 4, insert the following new subsection:

"(d) Section 902(a)(3) is amended by striking out everything following "educational institution which is" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ", in whole or substantial part, owned, supported, controlled, or managed by a particular religion or by a particular religious corporation, or society, or in which the curriculum is directed toward the propogation of a particular religion if the application of this subsection would not be consistent with the tenets of such religion." Insert "or educational recipient" after "educational institution".

Add the following language after "subunits" on page 3, line 7; page 5, line 10; page 8, line 8; and page 10, line 2:

"Provided, however, That no institution of higher education shall be deemed a 'recipient' where the only Federal financial assistance extended consists of grants received directly by students in attendance at such institutions under 20 U.S.C. 1070a (Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program, ADS); or 38 U.S.C. 1681 (Veteran's Educational Assistance Program). This exclusion shall not apply to proprietary institutions of higher education, vocational schools, any school not entitled to tax exempt status under 26 U.S.C. 501(c)(3), or to any school which, during the five years preceding as a result of a final judgment of any court of the United States, has been found in violation of any provision of the United States Constitution or law of the United States relating to civil rights."

In the definition of "recipient", wherever it appears, insert the following new language at the end thereof:

"Provided, however, That the term 'recipient' shall not be construed to include a church, convention, or association of churches, religious order, or other religious organizations or any subunit of the foregoing, whether or not separately organized or incorporated which does not actually receive Federal financial assistance."

APPLICATION OF CERTAIN CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION—HATCH AMENDMENT NOS. 3598 THROUGH 3600

(Ordered to be referred to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.)

Mr. HATCH submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2568) to clarify the application of title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, the Age Discrimination Act of 1975, and title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964; as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 3598

On page 4, line 4, insert the following new subsection:

"(d) Section 901(a)(3) is amended by striking out everything following "educational institution which is" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ", in whole or substantial part, owned, supported, controlled, or managed by a particular religion or by a particular religious corporation, or society, or in which the curriculum is directed toward the propagation of a particular religion if the application of this subsection would not be consistent with the tenets of such religion." Insert "or educational recipient" following "educational institution".

Mr. METZENBAUM proposed an amendment to the bill S. 2489, supra; as follows:

On page 16, between lines 12 and 13, insert the following:

(d) Not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this section, the Comptroller General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress a report evaluating the implementation of the amendments made by subsections (b) and (c), and the extent to which such amendments have increased the opportunity of small business concens and small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals to participate in the performance of Government contracts and subcontracts.

BINGAMAN AMENDMENT NO. 3605

Mr. BINGAMAN proposed an amendment to the bill S. 2489, supra; as follows:

On page 60, after line 3, insert the following:

COMPUTER CAPABILITY IMPROVEMENT PLAN

Sec. 15. Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall transmit to the Congress a plan to substantially improve the Department of Defense computer capability store and rapidly access data that is needed for the efficient procurement of spare parts. Such plan shall provide for a computer data base that includes price and procurement history, parts identification, sources of supply, and other relevant information. The plan shall specify a time frame for implementation and projected cost of implementation of the improvements.

On page 38, between lines 8 and 9, insert the following new sections:

COMMERCIAL PRICING FOR SPARE PARTS

Sec. 13. (a) Section 15 of the Small Business Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(s)(1) Except in the case of an offer submitted with a written statement under paragraph (2) and except as provided in paragraph (3), a contract made by any agency for the purchase of spare or replacement parts offered for sale to the general public may not result in a cost to the United States that exceeds the lowest price at which such parts are made available by the contractor to commercial buyers.

"(2) A person who submits an offer to an agency for the supply of spare or replacement parts having commercial application shall certify that the offered price is its lowest commercial price for the items submitted, or shall submit with the offer a written statement specifying the difference between the lowest commercial price of the offeror for the parts and the price offered and providing a justification for that difference.

"(3) Paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply to a contract if the contracting officer determines that the use of the price otherwise required by paragraph (1) for such contract is not appropriate because of—

"(A) national security considerations; or

"(B) differences in quantities, quality, delivery, or other terms and conditions of the contract from commercial contract terms.".

(b) Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the single system of Government-wide procurement regulations (as defined in section 4(4) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403(4))) shall be revised to include provisions specifying the manner in which each executive agency (as defined in section 4(1) of such Act (41 U.S.C. 403(1))) may negotiate prices for supplies procured from a contractor which does not produce the supplies and does not add significant value to the total value of the supplies. The regulation shall include provisions reasonably limiting the amount of overhead costs which such a contractor may allocate to any item of supplies.

Sec. 14. Section 15 of the Small Business Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(t)(1)(A) Each Federal agency shall procure supplies in such quantity as (i) will result in the total cost and unit cost most advantageous to the United States, when practicable, and (ii) does not exceed the quantity reasonably expected to be required by the agency during a fiscal year or longer period for which an appropriation is available for the purpose of procuring such supplies.

"(B) The head of a Federal agency shall take subparagraph (A) into account in approving rates of obligation of appropriations.

"(2) Each solicitation for a supply contract shall include a clause requesting each contractor responding to the solicitation to state an opinion on whether the quantity of the supplies proposed to be procured is economically advantageous to the United States and, if applicable, to recommend two quantities which would be more economically advantageous to the United States. Each such recommendation shall include a quotation of the total price and the unit price for supplies procured in each recommended quantity."

PUBLICATION OF PROPOSED REGULATIONS

Sec. 15. The office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 401 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof "Changes to the single system of Government-wide procurement regulations (as defined in section 4(4) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403 (4))), including supplemental regulations to agency acquisition regulations, may not take effect until the date thirty days after the date such regulations have been published in the Federal Register for public comment."

PERSONNEL EVALUATIONS TO INCLUDE EMPHASIS ON COMPETITION AND COST SAVINGS

Sec. 16. Section 15 of the Small Business Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(u) The head of each Federal agency shall establish procedures to ensure that personnel appraisal systems of the agency give appropriate recognition to efforts to increase competition and achieve cost savings in areas relating to the contract of the agency.".

Redesignate the succeeding sections accordingly.

On page 53, line 18, strike out the end quotation marks and the period after the end quotation marks.

On page 53, between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

"§ 2321. Commercial pricing for spare parts

"(a)(1) Except in the case of an offer submitted with a written statement under subsection (b), and except as provided in subsection (c), a contract made by any agency referred to in section 2303(a) of this title for the purchase of spare or replacement parts offered for sale to the general public may not result in a cost to the United States that exceeds the lowest price at which such parts are made available by the contractor to commercial buyers.

"(b) A person who submits an offer to such an agency for the supply of spare or replacement parts having commercial application shall certify that the offered price is its lowest commercial price for the items submitted, or shall submit with the offer a written statement specifying the difference between the lowest commercial price of the offeror for the parts and the price offered and providing a justification for that difference.

"(c) Subsections (a) and (b) do not apply to a contract if the contracting officer determines that the use of the price otherwise required by paragraph (1) for such contract is not appropriate because of—

BYRD (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3607

Mr. BYRD (for himself, Mr. NICKLES, and Mr. LEVIN) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 2489, supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill, add a new section, as follows:

ADVOCATE FOR COMPETITION

SEC. . (a) Chapter 137 of title 10, United States Code, is further amended by inserting after section 2306 the following new section:

"§ 2306a. Office of the Competition Advocate General

"(a)(1) There is in the executive part of each agency referred to in section 2303(a) of this title an Office of the Competition Advocate General (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Office'). The head of the Office is the Competition Advocate General.

"(2) The head of a military department or the Coast Guard shall designate a commissioned officer of the armed forces who is serving on active duty in a grade not below colonel or, in the case of an officer in the Navy or the Coast Guard, serving in a grade not below captain, to be the Competition Advocate General of the agency. The head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration shall designate a civilian in a grade not below GS-16 to be the Competition Advocate General of the agency. The designation shall be for a term of two years. An officer of the armed forces while serving as the Competition Advocate General shall have the grade of major general or rear admiral, as appropriate, unless entitled to a higher grade under another provision of law.

"(3) The head of an agency shall provide the Competition Advocate General of the agency such staff or assistance as may be necessary to carry out the duties and responsibilities of the advocate for competition.

"(b)(1) The Office of the Competition Advocate General of an agency shall, under the direction of the head of the agency, promote competition in the procurement of property and services by the agency.

"(2) The Office of the Competition Advocate General of an agency shall, under the direction of the head of the agency—

"(A) review the purchasing and contracting activities of the agency;

"(B) identify and report to the head of the agency—

"(i) opportunities to achieve competition on the basis of price and other significant factors in the purchases and contracts of the executive agency;

"(ii) solicitations and proposed solicitations which include unnecessarily detailed specifications or unnecessarily restrictive statements of need which may reduce competition in the procurement activities of the executive agency; and

"(iii) any other condition or action which has the effect of unnecessarily resticting competition in the procurement actions of the agency.

"(c)(1) The Competition Advocate General of an agency shall review each proposed noncompetitive procurement in the agency involving more than $100,000 before a solicitation for the procurement is issued and shall recommend to the procurement or program officer involved specific acquisition actions as appropriate.

"(2) An agency need not delay the issuance of a solicitation for a noncompetitive procurement for more than 10 working days in the event of a procurement of more than $100,000 but less than $10,000,000, or for more than 15 working days in the event of a procurement of $10,000,000 or more, for the purposes of permitting the Competition Advocate General to accomplish the review referred to in subsection (c)(1).

"(3) The agency may waive submission of a solicitation for a noncompetitive procurement to the Competition Advocate General if—

"(A) the solicitation deals with a highly classified program and the head of the agency, or his designee not below the level of an Assistant Secretary, determines that review by the Competition Advocate General is not consistent with the security requirements of such program; or

"(B) the head of the agency, or his designee not below the level of an Assistant Secretary, determines that the urgency of the procurement is of such an extreme nature that the procurements should not be delayed for review by the Competition Advocate General.

"(4) At least 15 days before a procurement or program officer takes or directs an action inconsistent with a recommendation made by a Competition Advocate General under paragraph (1), the officer shall submit a written justification for such action to the head of the procuring activity, and shall transmit a copy of the justification to the Competition Advocate General of the agency.

"(d)(1) Each head of an agency shall transmit annually to the Senate and the House of Representatives a report detailing any procurements made by the agency which were inconsistent with any recommendation made under subsection (c)(1). Such annual report shall include the annual report required by paragraph (2) to be made by the Competition Advocate General of the agency.

"(2) Each Competition Advocate General of an agency shall prepare and transmit to the head of the agency an annual report describing the activities of the Office under this section during the preceding year.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 2306 the following new item:

"2306a. Office of the Competition Advocate General.".

NUNN AMENDMENT NO. 3608

"MINIMUM TOUR OF DUTY FOR OFFICERS ASSIGNED TO CERTAIN DUTIES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

"SEC. . (a) The tour of duty of an officer of the Armed Forces assigned as a program manager of a major defense acquisition program (as defined in section 139a(a) of title 10, United States Code) shall be (1) not less than four years, or (2) until completion of a major program milestone (as defined in regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense).

"(b) The tour of duty of an officer of the Armed Forces assigned as the commander of the Army Materiel Development and Readiness Command, the Naval Materiel Command, the Air Force Systems Command, or the Air Force Logistics Command shall not be less than four years.

"(c) The length of the tour of duty prescribed in subsection (a) or (b) may be waived in the case of any officer by the Secretary of the military department of which the officer is a member. Such authority may not be delegated."

EXON (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3609

Mr. EXON (for himself, Mr. ZORINSKY, Mr. JEPSEN, Mr. BOREN, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. PRESSLER Mr. HUDDLESTON, Mr. FORD, and Mr. NICKLES) proposed an amendment (which was subsequently modified) to the bill (H.R. 6040) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes; as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. . (a) The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the competing credit demands by State and local governments, agriculture, business, and consumers, aggravated by massive Federal debt financing and increasing credit demands by foreign governments, continue to cause serious economic disruption in rural America;

(2) the United States has a vital interest in protecting the economic health of American farmers;

(3) the American farmer has been caught in an unprecedented credit squeeze;

(4) monetary and fiscal policies have substantially caused real interest rates to remain at two or three times historic levels of such rates;

(5) high real interest rates have dramatically increased the value of the dollar to the detriment of farmers who devote at least one out of three acres of land to production for export;

(6) the average value of an acre of farm land fell this year for the third year in a row, the longest sustained decline since the Great Depression;

(7) the total amount of debt owed by American farmers is $203,800,000,000;

(8) last year Brazil, Mexico, Argentina, and Venezuela held $260,000,000,000 in external debt and the interest payments on these loans alone totaled more than $20,000,000,000;

(9) the governments of Brazil, Mexico, Argentina, and Venezuela have been successful in securing postponements in debt and principal repayments, favorable renegotiations, new loan guarantees, and other special arrangements through private negotiations, assistance from the United States Government, and the International Monetary Fund; and

(10) American farmers have been unsuccessful in obtaining as favorable special treatment from private banks or the Federal Government.

(b) It is therefore the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the President, in cooperation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, should exercise appropriate authority to assure that an adequate flow of credit be available to American farmers at reasonable rates and that American farmers be treated no less favorably than foreign borrowers with comparable levels of risk, and

(2) the President, in cooperation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, should take noninflationary actions necessary to reduce interest rates which are currently at levels abnormally above the historic real cost of money.

ANDREWS AMENDMENT NO. 3610

Mr. ANDREWS proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 6040, supra; as follows:

On page 42, line 21 strike the word "Provision" and insert in lieu thereof "Provisions".

On page 43, following line 9, insert the following:

"Section 306(b)(2) of the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act, Public Law 92-318, (20 U.S.C. 241ee(b)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) No payments shall be made under this title to any local educational agency for any fiscal year unless the State educational agency finds that the combined fiscal effort (as determined in accordance with regulations of the Secretary of Education) of that agency and the State with respect to the provision of free public education by that agency for the preceding fiscal year was not less than 90 per centum of such combined fiscal effort for that purpose for the second preceding fiscal year. In addition, the Secretary may waive this requirement for exceptional circumstances for one year only.".

PELL AMENDMENT NO. 3611

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. PELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 6040, supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

POLICY ON TAIWAN

SEC. . (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) February 28, 1984, marked the twelfth anniversary of the Shanghai Communique signed by the United States and the People's Republic of China;

(2) the communique and the 1979 United States-People's Republic of China normalization agreement greatly improved relations between Washington and Beijing;

(3) peace has prevailed in the Taiwan Strait since the normalization of relations between the United States and the People's Republic of China;

(4) maintaining a sound United States-People's Republic of China relationship serves the interests of both countries and the interests of peace in the Pacific region;

(5) the United States has also pledged in the Taiwan Relations Act to continue commercial, cultural, and other relations between the people of the United States and the people of Taiwan; and

(6) the United States established diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China in the expectation that the future of Taiwan will be determined by peaceful means.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that Taiwan's future should be settled peacefully, free of coercion, and in a manner acceptable to the people on Taiwan and consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act enacted by the Congress and with the communiques entered into between the United States and the People's Republic of China.

HELMS (AND EAST) AMENDMENT NO. 3612

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. HELMS (for himself and Mr. EAST) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill H.R. 6040, supra; as follows:

On page 7, line 6, strike out "$8,530,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,330,000".

On page 7, line 10, before the period insert ": Provided further, That $800,000 shall be available for program enhancement at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Undersea Research Program at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington".

KASTEN (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3613

Mr. KASTEN (for himself, Mr. HUDDLESTON, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. EAGLETON, and Mr. COCHRAN) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 6040, supra; as follows:

On page 68, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following:

INTERNATIONAL DISASTER ASSISTANCE

For an additional amount for "International disaster assistance", $7,000,000: Provided, That this sum shall be available only for emergency inland transportation associated with food relief efforts in Africa.

STEVENS AMENDMENT NO. 3614

Mr. STEVENS proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 6040, supra; as follows:

On page 87, line 5, strike "234,630,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$244,630,000";

On page 87, line 6, strike "$40,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof $30,000,000.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON WATER AND POWER

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public the scheduling of a public hearing before the Subcommittee on Water and Power to consider S. 1981, to amend the Small Reclamation Projects Act of 1956, as amended. The hearing will be held on Thursday, September 20, beginning at 10 a.m. in room SD-366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building.

Those wishing to testify or who wish to submit written statements for the hearing record should write to the Subcommittee on Water and Power, Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC 20510. Witnesses should provide the subcommittee with 25 copies of their written statement 24 hours in advance of the hearing and 75 copies on the day of the hearing.

For further information regarding this hearing you may wish to contact Mr. Russ Brown of the subcommittee staff at 224-2366.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, August 7, at 10 a.m., to hold a hearing to consider the nomination of Edward Streator, to be Representative of the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development with rank of Ambassador, to be followed by a briefing at 11 a.m. on the overview of U.S. security assistance package for Central America for 1984 and 1985 and the current situation in El Salvador, and at 2:30 p.m. to consider the nomination of Victor Rivera, to be Assistant Administrator for AID for Inter-American Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, August 7, in open session to be followed by a closed hearing on the nomination of Maj. Gen. William W. Hoover, to be Assistant Secretary of Energy for Defense Programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

OVER 10,064 MEMBERS HAVE SERVED IN CONGRESS

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, while traveling in California last week, I was asked several questions about the Senate and, on my return to Washington, I obtained the information from the Library of Congress and it is so interesting I just want to place it here in the RECORD so that my colleagues could see it.

Since 1758, there have been a total of 15 Senators who have served 30 years exclusively in the Senate. If we include Senators who have also served time in the House of Representatives, the number goes up to 73. Fifty-nine Senators have served in the House.

Since 1758, over 10,064 Members have served in the entire Congress, both House and Senate. I just thought you would be interested in this.●

OMAHA WORLD-HERALD CALLS FOR TOUGH EXPORT CONTROLS

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, the United States and our allies recently reached agreement in principle to improve controls on the export of computer equipment to the Soviet bloc. This agreement demonstrates great progress in the administration's efforts to stem the hemorrhage of strategically important goods and technologies to our potential adversaries.

These controls are essential for the maintenance of our national security, for our security is based upon the qualitative superiority of our defense systems. Our defense will continue to depend upon such a qualitative superiority as long as we wish to avoid adding millions more of our people to the Armed Services and more than doubling our conventional weapons.

Mr. President, it seems to me that there should be little disagreement about the foolishness of selling anything to our adversaries that will improve their ability to kill Americans.

The Omaha World-Herald published an editorial on July 21 that comments on our export control efforts. I wholeheartedly agree with its conclusion:

Tight restraints on the sale of strategic products and other materials to the Soviet Union are necessary. The Soviet military establishment has strengthened itself too much already by taking advantage of Western technology.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the editorial from the Omaha World-Herald be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial follows:

[From the Omaha World-Herald, July 21, 1984]

TOUGH RESTRAINTS ARE NEEDED ON SOME SALES TO SOVIET BLOC

Some members of the Coordinating Committee for Multinational Export Controls don't seem to share fully the commitment of the United States to prevent the Soviet Union from buying Western products with possible military uses.

The committee is made up of Japan and most countries that belong to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The idea is to keep strategic goods out of Communist hands. Adherence to the group's rules is voluntary.

Representatives of the 15 countries often disagree on whether a type of product could be of military value, or whether the Soviets could find similar equipment in places such as Sweden, Singapore, Hong Kong or Austria, which are not members of the committee.

A point of dispute is West Germany's desire to sell an advanced diesel engine to the Soviet Union. The United States opposes the sale because current Soviet diesels are inefficient. Many Russian submarines and tanks that use diesel engines are underpowered.

Similarly touchy are American and British proposals to liberalize the rules on the sale of arms to mainland China. France and West Germany are afraid the Kremlin would be offended.

The committee did agree recently to new restrictions on the sale of computer technology to the Soviet Union. Software and computerized telecommunications switching equipment were placed under export controls.

Over the objections of the United States, the committee decided that certain types of personal computers and desktop equipment that are commonly available on world markets may now be shipped to the Soviet Union and other Communist countries.

The Defense Department said some of the small computers can be adapted for battlefield use. The Reagan administration wants to prohibit all such products from going to the Soviets, but practicality and the more generous attitudes of other members of the committee make such a prohibition difficult.

The give-and-take that produced the new rules required 22 months of study and discussion. Tight restraints on the sale of strategic products and other materials to the Soviet Union are necessary.

The Soviet military establishment has strengthened itself too much already by taking advantage of Western technology.●

THE RETIREMENT EQUITY ACT OF 1984, H.R. 4280

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I am very pleased to rise to express my support for legislation vital to the economic well-being of American women, the Retirement Equity Act of 1984. I was an original cosponsor of this legislation, and I have long supported its needed reforms. The Retirement Equity Act of 1984 will bring this Nation a little closer to realizing a goal we all share—full economic equality for women and men.

This legislation will change certain aspects of current pension law to eliminate discrimination against women in this vital area. As women have joined men in the work force in large numbers—today, fully 43.5 percent of American workers are women—it has become increasingly apparent that the existing pension and retirement laws do not accommodate certain special needs of women and homemakers. Many disturbing instances of outright discrimination also have become apparent. These laws must be changed, to ensure American women their due financial security, now and into the future. The present legislation could help ameliorate the feminization of poverty, particularly among elderly women, by providing new protections for widows and for women who become divorced or separated from their husbands.

This legislation has the support of both women's and industry groups. Among its many features are provisions to ensure that more women qualify for employer pension plans, provisions to protect women's pension rights when they elect maternity leave or longer breaks in their work service, and provisions to protect spousal survivors. The legislation also allows courts to split pension benefits between a husband and wife who separate or divorce. Although this legislation does not address every necessary change in this area, it is a necessary and long overdue step in the continuing struggle for full equality. Women, in the American work force and out, must be guaranteed the financial security they have earned.

Mr. President, this legislation is not a panacea, nor is it intended to be a substitute for the equal rights amendment. As one of the original cosponsors of the equal rights amendment, I know that equal rights for women cannot be achieved until it is part of the U.S. Constitution. Nevertheless, I am committed to the passage of every piece of legislation—large or small—that promotes equity among men and women. I thank my colleagues for passing the Retirement Equity Act of 1984, and I urge my colleagues to work to ensure that the equal rights amendment is part of the U.S. Constitution.●

NOTICE OF DETERMINATION BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON ETHICS

● Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, it is required by paragraph 4 of rule 35 that I place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this notice of a Senate employee who proposes to participate in a program, the principal objective of which is educational, sponsored by a foreign government or a foreign educational or charitable organization involving travel to a foreign country paid for by that foreign government or organization.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Mr. Paul Donnelly, of the staff of Senator CHRISTOPHER DODD, to participate in a program in Taipei, Taiwan, sponsored by Tamkang University from July 1-8, 1984.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Donnelly in the program in Taipei, Taiwan, at the expense of Tamkang University, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Mr. Henry Sokolski of the staff of Senator DAN QUAYLE, to participate in a conference in Taipei, Taiwan, sponsored by Tunghai University in August 1984.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Sokolski in the conference in Taipei, Taiwan, at the expense of Tunghai University, to discuss United States-Taiwan relations, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Mr. Tom Blau of the Intelligence Committee staff to participate in a program in Taipei, Taiwan, sponsored by Tunghai University from August 13-19, 1984.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Blau in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of Tunghai University, to discuss United States-Taiwan relations, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.●

LEGACY OF DEATH FROM "GREAT LEAP FORWARD"

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, the world has rightfully never forgotten the horrible crime of genocide committed by Nazi Germany against 6 million Jews during the so-called final solution campaign of 1939-45. Even more overwhelming in numbers, however, is the calamitous 30 million deaths and 37 million unborn directly attributable to the inhuman policies of Communist China during the misnamed "Great Leap Forward," the years of 1958-61.

These depressing totals of loss of life in mainland China are based on newly available demographic data released by Communist China itself, data which population experts believe is accurate and detailed. Part of the information is contained in the census of Red China conducted in 1964, but not published until the last 2 years. The new information is also derived from the 1982 Census of Population, the 1982 Fertility Survey and the Statistical Yearbook for 1983, which includes official annual birth and death rates since 1950. Data from the 1953 mainland China census has also been made available with much more detail than previously known.

The availability of this detailed information has disclosed a tragedy of enormous proportions, one that has been suggested by many objective observers of Communist China, but which the news media until now had generally rejected as unsupported speculation. According to this new statistical data, published in official Chinese Communist sources, the birth rate in Red China fell from 42.5 per 1,000 in 1957, the year preceding the "Great Leap Forward," to 21.9 in 1961, the height of the economic disruption and famine resulting from this Government created crisis. Translated in population figures, this data means that 29 million babies were not born, not because of birth control policies, but because of the widespread starvation and malnutrition of the entire population.

At the end of this horribly conceived and mismanaged social experiment by the Communist government, the birth rate increased to 50 births per 1,000, demonstrating by contrast the massive disruption of normal life that can only have been caused by Communist policies.

Official records of death rates reveal an even more frightful picture of human suffering during the "Great Leap Forward." An extraordinary excess mortality occurs in these years which cannot be explained except by the horrible failure of rigidly imposed, insane economic policies set on the people of the mainland by dictate of the Communist tyrants who occupy that territory. Officially recorded deaths show an increase during the years of 1958-61 from 10.8 per 1,000 to 25.4 per 1,000 in the peak year of 1963. Rephrased in terms of total number of deaths, the figure derived from officially recorded sources discloses that the "Great Leap Forward" led to an excess of 16 million deaths over and beyond the total that could be explained by normal conditions.

Even these official totals, as mind boggling as they are, underestimate the true extent of harm caused by the Communist government. According to the comprehensive report prepared by the committee on population and demography, which was approved and substantially funded by the National Research Council, the principal operating agency of both the National Academy of Sciences and the National Academy of Engineering, the actual total number of excess deaths in 1958-61 is 27 million. The higher figure is calculated by applying a series of stringent tests of accuracy and consistency to the census data of 1953, 1964, and 1982 and comparing the results with official totals.

The same kind of professional analysis has been made by Dr. Judith Banister, chief of the China branch of the U.S. Bureau of the Census, who calculates that fully 30 million people died of famine and economic chaos induced by the "Great Leap Forward." In an interview with the Baltimore Sun this year, Dr. Banister points out that only now could the world know, with the confirmation of statistics originating with Communist China itself, the incredibly high human costs of the "Great Leap Forward." Dr. Banister points out that for over 20 years Communist China's demographic and economic statistics have been suppressed. Until now, it was impossible to document what happened during the decades from 1958-78.

What has been revealed is that communism is a terrible blight on humankind, that state economic control is a total disaster and that Chairman Mao was not a humane agrarian reformer, but in truth was a power-mad dictator fully capable of unleashing every conceivable ill on the Chinese people, from famine to genocide.

To the 30 million deaths in 1958-61 must be added the 50 million or more of its own people literally murdered by the state system of Communist China during the cultural revolution, in slave labor camps and throughout its miserable period of occupation on the mainland since 1949.

It is almost sickening for me to see our Government officials smile and toast these Communist dictators and make deals with them to the detriment of our true friends in the Republic of China, and I hope this latest evidence of Communist failure will reach the attention of the White House and be used in shaping our Government's Asian policies according to realistic, instead of sentimental, views of the regime on the Chinese mainland.

Mr. President, I ask that four articles on this subject from the Baltimore Sun, Washington Post, and Washington Times, including an interview with Dr. Banister, may appear in the RECORD.

The material follows:

THE DEATH OF 30 MILLION CHINESE

(By Stephens Broening)

The loss of life in China during the Great Leap Forward, 1958–1961, ranks among the Twentieth Century's worst human catastrophes, according to recently published Chinese population figures.

More people died in China during that four-year span than in all the battles of the First World War, or the Holocaust of Europe's Jews or Soviet collectivization and Stalin's Terror, the figures show.

According to one calculation, the deaths of Chinese from famine and related causes during the Great Leap Forward may even have totaled 30 million people, or nearly double the battlefield losses of all countries in World War II.

China was not at war at the time of the Great Leap Forward. There was no mass epidemic. The weather was bad, but no worse than at some other periods in Chinese history. Yet there is nothing in Chinese records of the previous 80 years—including wars, famine and pestilence—which shows such a sudden and massive nationwide rise in mortality. The damage appears to have been self-inflicted.

Until now Western scholars have usually referred to the period as an "economic disaster" or a "farm crisis" or simply as the "failure" of Mao Tse-tung to rewrite the rules of economic development. There was scattered anecdotal evidence of the human costs—reports from refugees on conditions in a village, or a province; underground literature—but not enough to allow a sound generalization.

This was due largely to the Chinese authorities, who for understandable reasons suppressed population and food production figures that would have permitted such a calculation. One American expert, Thomas B. Wiens, says 1958–1963 was "an era of statistical anarchy or near-total silence" on the part of the Chinese.

The base line was the 1953 census, taken four years after the Communists won power. The Chinese conducted a subsequent census in 1964, but didn't announce it to the outside world at the time. Detailed results from it were made available only last year. Most recently, a widely publicized census was undertaken in 1982, the first one China ever processed by computer. It counted slightly more than 1 billion Chinese.

The new figures from 1964 and 1982, plus a 10-percent sampling from 1982 census questionnaires, made available just a few months ago, were a bonanza for foreign demographers, such as Judith Banister, chief of the China Branch at the U.S. Bureau of the Census. As Louis Kincannon, deputy director of the U.S. Census Bureau, told an unprecedented gathering of demographers in Peking last month, "Analysis of data from all three censuses provides the best picture of Chinese demographic trends ever available."

While the picture may have been clear, it was not very pretty.

The official Chinese interpretation of the population data is that some 15 million people perished in the Great Leap Forward. Dr. Banister thinks the Chinese have underestimated the rates of "excess mortality," deaths of people unexplained by previous or subsequent trends. Official Chinese estimates are based on registered deaths, which historically are underreported. Dr. Banister concludes that the immediate human cost was nearer 30 million.

Dr. Banister and the Chinese are not so far apart, however, in their estimates of the delayed cost in unborn Chinese, what demographers call a deficit of births. In conditions of malnutrition and starvation, the birth rate falls. Severely malnourished women may suffer from amenorrhea, the absence of menstruation; men simply lose their sexual desire. The Chinese estimate the deficit of births for the period at 29 million, Dr. Banister at 37 million.

So the total human cost—counting both the living and the unborn—was at least 44 million by current Chinese estimates, or as high as 67 million, according to the calculations of the Census Bureau's China Branch.

Right after the policies of the Great Leap Forward were abandoned, the death rate fell and the birth rate rose, both returning to the population trends evident before 1958.

What happened during these years to produce such a calamity? What was the Great Leap Forward?

When Mao proclaimed the Great Leap Forward he promised that "three years of struggle" would lead to "a thousand years of Communist happiness." His intention was to accelerate the pace of industrialization and the accumulation of capital. He was, he thought, going to have China leap over the next step in economic development directly to mature communism. The result was economic and administrative chaos, and ultimately famine.

Private property was abolished, the rural population was organized into communes which were to pay and feed their members equally, without regard to individual output. At the same time, national steel and iron output were to be suddenly doubled with the establishment of "backyard" iron and steel mills throughout the country.

Peasants slaughtered their livestock rather than give it to the commune. With the abolition of private plots there was an almost immediate shortage of vegetables. Agriculture suffered widespread neglect when armies of peasants were mobilized for the backyard smelters or for vast public works projects.

Mao's underlings assured him everything was going fine. In the midst of growing food shortages the government falsely reported record harvests for two succeeding years. Mao said to push on.

In 1959, Marshal Peng Dehuai, the defense minister, urged an end to the Great Leap Forward. Peng was imprisoned. An excerpt from his notes at the time, published in 1980, four years after Mao's death, provides a sketch of the vast social and economic dislocation that produced the famine:

". . . In August, 1958, at the Beidaihe Central Committee meeting when it was suggested to double the steel and iron output (there were also demands for doubling the output of other items in one year), i.e., from 5.35 million tons of steel in 1957 to reach a production of 10.7 million tons in 1958, there were only four months of the year left and output had only reached the previous year's figure.

"[This meant] a . . . general mobilization . . . for all the people to produce steel and iron; that meant the mobilization of 90 million people to go into the countryside to smelt iron in small backyard furnaces. . . . This . . . was not only a violent shock to the market, but also affected the progress of the autumn harvest, so that many crops, such as grain, yams and potatoes, cotton, peanuts, tobacco, tea-oil, grapefruit, etc., were not properly harvested and some not at all. The peasants, having to work hard [at other tasks], let the harvest rot on the ground for nothing.

"The results of this operation . . . affected the livelihood of the people, who were left with nothing to eat during the first half of 1959 [italic added]. . . . [The] destruction and loss were beyond calculation!

". . . aluminum and iron utensils of all sorts were smashed to meet the duty of turning in the required amount of iron; houses were torn down and trees were felled to provide fuel for iron-smelting, not to speak of the wastage of ore. This iron-smelting by the entire people was actually one big widespread destruction. . . ."

Only now, some 25 years after the fact, are the Chinese providing information that allows a measure of this destruction to be made.

CALCULATING THE COST

(Judith Banister, chief of the China Branch at the U.S. Bureau of the Census, is both a China expert and a demographer. Dr. Banister and her staff have calculated on the basis of recently published population figures that China's Great Leap Forward cost some 30 million lives. In an interview with the editor of the Opinion, Commentary page, Dr. Banister tells how it was done.)

Question: The first census by the Communist regime in China was conducted in 1953, I believe, and until pretty recently, you had little to update it with to get a more complete picture of demographic trends in China. There was a census taken in 1964, and a census taken in 1982. When did you begin to get usable information from these censuses and what use were you able to make of it?

Answer: The usable information from the 1953 and 1964 census was only released at the end of 1982, along with the first data from the 1982 census. . . . The single-year age structures, age distributions, were released from the 1953 and 1964 censuses, and then there was a 10-percent sample of the 1982 census questionnaire.

With these single-year age and sex structures, we can reconstitute population trends from 1953 to 1982. We took these three age structures by single years of age, and we combined them with the data from a new fertility survey that was taken in China, along with the census; the survey was released very recently, just a few months ago. This gave us the fertility trends and population growth trends for the period 1953 to 1982. From that we could derive mortality trends.

Now for the first time we have a fairly good picture of China's demographic trends from 1953 to 1982. That was only possible with the release of the age-structure data at the end of 1982.

Q. What did these figures show?

A. Well, first, the data from the three censuses, the age-structure data, are extremely accurate, very high quality age reporting, so that we don't have to do any adjusting and can use the data as they are. Therefore, most demographers will be able to agree on what they tell us.

The fertility survey gave us annual fertility for China of apparently high accuracy from the early Fifties until through 1981, and the censuses appear to be approximately equally complete. That is what we derive from analyzing what are called survival ratios, how people in each cohort survive from one census to the next, how many of them survive. So we use our demographic skills to test the reasonableness and the likely accuracy of the successive age structures, and we find them highly reasonable.

Q. Is there internal consistency?

A. Very strong internal consistency.

Q. Were there any unusual trends which showed up when you compared the three censuses: '53, '64 and '82?

A. The most striking one is the severe drop in fertility that shows up in the numbers of young children in the 1964 census, and when they are 18 years older in the 1982 census, it is verified again. That is, there was a steep drop in fertility which shows up as very small cohorts born during the Great Leap Forward period.

Q. This is '58 to '61?

A. Yes, which goes from 1958 through 1961.

Q. Did anything else turn up when you examined this period of the Great Leap Forward?

A. Well, what you find in comparing the 1953 census count and age structure with the 1964 census count and age structure is that population growth was far less than one would have expected with the population trends of the early and mid-Fifties. The reason it was far less than expected was because of a sharp rise in mortality and a sharp drop in fertility during the years of the Great Leap Forward, 1958 to 1961.

Q. You say there was a sharp rise in mortality? How big?

A. China has released its own estimates of that period, and the official data show a rise from a crude death rate of 10.8 per thousand population in 1957 to a crude death rate of 25.4 at the height of the famine in 1960, and then a sharp drop again in 1962.

Q. What does this mean as a sort of gross number? You talk about going from 10.8 per thousand deaths to 25.4 per thousand.

A. If you just use the official data and calculate the excess deaths to the population, you're getting about 15 million excess deaths during the four-year period.

Q. What do you mean by excess deaths?

A. Well, those are deaths above what you would have expected if that crude death rate of 10.8 had held for those four years, which it would have done.

Q. How do demographers explain deaths in excess of what were expected or anticipated or indicated by previous trends? What conclusions can a demographer draw from that?

A. We draw the same conclusions that anybody would, that there must have been some crisis which caused a sharp increase in deaths. So, we go after the source of, the cause of the deaths.

China had achieved a tremendously sharp drop in mortality during the 1950's, which we can document through studies of changes in health trends and the mortality trends of the early and mid-1950's. It was a drop to half the death rate of before 1949.

So, China had made great achievements in mortality up through 1957, but then there was this very sharp reversal of that progress, temporary but sharp, for the Great Leap period.

Q. So, are the Chinese conceding or stating that 15 million people died from famine or other causes during this four-year period?

A. No, this is simply derivable from the data which the Chinese are now releasing from this period. For over 20 years China's demographic and economic statistics have been suppressed. From 1958 through 1978 most important demographic and economic data were not released.

Only now are the retrospective historical data being published and, therefore, only now can we document what happened during those decades.

Q. Do the calculations of you and your colleagues coincide with the official Chinese calculations on the costs of the Great Leap Forward?

A. For the most part, the Chinese press, Chinese media and Chinese authors do not go into detail about the human costs of the Great Leap Forward. They talk in general terms about the policy mistakes of the period, causing great hardship to the people, in combination with bad weather.

They talk about the three bad years, 1959 through '61; but it is discussed with great delicacy and caution, because to criticize the Great Leap Forward too strongly is to criticize Mao Tse-tung, and the Chinese authorities do not want to criticize him too strongly.

Q. So there has been no straightforward declaration that 15 million people died of famine or related causes as a result of these "mistakes in policy"?

A. Not to my knowledge. What I have seen is indirect references to the losses of the Great Leap Forward. . . .

Q. Don't your calculations differ somewhat in measuring what you call the excess deaths during this period?

A. Yes. It is possible to reconstruct the demographic trends from 1953 to 1982, using all the data at our disposal. Doing that gives us far higher mortality in every year than Chinese official crude death rates. This is fairly clearcut now, because of the excellent fertility survey that was taken, documenting the higher fertility levels than had been reported from their official data also.

So, when we combine every year's fertility with the intercensal population growth rates between each two censuses, we discover the number of deaths in the intercensal period. The period between 1953 and 1964 censuses saw far more deaths than had been recorded in the official deaths rates. So, in order to reconstruct the trends, we must raise the death rate for every year accordingly.

Q. What do you find?

A. In every year of the 1950s, the crude death rate was much higher than officially reported, so was the infant mortality rate. In particular, during the Great Leap Forward, the crude death rate was far higher, the infant mortality rate was far higher than reported.

Q. And so what does this suggest?

A. My own calculations give about 30 million excess deaths during the Great Leap Forward.

Of course, we ought to point out right away that China is, after all, the world's most populous country with 22 percent of the world's population. So, the slightest rise in China's death rate causes millions of what we would call excess deaths. So, looking only at the absolute figures is a bit misleading. You have to look at the excess deaths, 30 million, in comparison to the huge size of China's population. . . .

Q. Most experts are attributing these excess deaths to famine, are they not?

A. Yes.

Q. There is another aspect to this, I think, for a demographer. That is what might be called a deficiency in births?

A. Right. A birth deficit. The deficit of births that we see now from retrospective data for the Great Leap period was caused by what is called famine fertility—it means that when women and men are severely deprived of food, the women cease menstruating and both sexes cease being effective sexually, and they cannot conceive and carry a birth to full term successfully.

So, basically, when a famine hits most severely, you have a nine-month lag, and then the births are severely cut.

Q. Do you have any idea of the size of the birth deficit from this period?

A. Yes, we do. You can calculate that from the official data and from our reconstructed data. The official data give a birth deficit of 29 million births during the four years. In my computer reconstruction of the population trends there is a 37 million birth deficit during the period.

Q. So, these are 37 million people who would have been born under normal circumstances?

A. Right.

Q. You attended last month's international seminar of demographers in Peking, didn't you?

A. Yes, it was a very exciting conference, an international seminar on China's 1982 population census, which was attended by demographers and heads of statistical bureaus from many countries, and by about 65 Chinese statisticians, demographers, and other experts.

Q. Has this ever happened before to your knowledge?

A. No, it has not. It was unprecedented in terms of bringing together the foreign and the Chinese demographers to discuss the meaning of the data from the census.

Q. Part of this, as I understand it, was that the Chinese were eager to get international acceptance of the validity of their data. Wasn't this part of it?

A. Certainly. The Chinese government took extraordinary care with the 1982 census. It was important to them to do a very high quality census, and they put great planning into it, and the quality controls were quite unusual.

So, they were very proud of the census taking and of its results and, therefore, they have released the data in great detail and will continue to do so. Indeed, analysis of the data shows high quality of the census.

So, it is good for the Chinese State Statistical Bureau to hear from their foreign colleagues, as well as from their own demographers, a confirmation of the quality of the census results. Or, if there are errors and anomalies, they don't mind hearing that.

Q. Was there what you would describe as a dialogue?

A. Yes. The intent of the conference was to have real dialogue. We were told by some of the leaders right at the beginning, and particularly by the vice premier whom we met earlier in the week in the conference, that this was to be an open meeting, and that we were not to be afraid to speak out. The Chinese colleagues were also told that. They took it to heart, and we all were able to speak fairly freely about what we saw.

Q. Was there any discussion, though, of what must have been the common finding from the '64 and '82 censuses when compared to that of '53, that there had been a massive rise in mortality during the Great Leap Forward years? Was there any discussion of this?

A. There was very little discussion of this in the formal sessions of the conference. However, after the U.S. Census Bureau paper was presented and showed very high mortality levels during the Great Leap period, for example, many Chinese colleagues came up to discuss this with me in between sessions of the conference. They were very interested in this reconstruction.

One demographer came up to me and said, "But it's impossible for the death rate to have risen that high during the Great Leap Forward."

My response was, "Well, perhaps it did not increase quite so much in the peak famine year of 1960 but, if not, then those deaths simply must be reallocated to another year between 1953 and 1964."

Our colleagues understood that and therefore, they realized that this reconstruction is not far wrong.

Q. There is nothing mystical or magical about the treatment of these data that you get?

A. It is not mystical or magical, but it is difficult, because every time you change something like fertility or mortality or migration, you change everything else. Population growth moves in an integrated way. So, any change causes another change. Age structure is determined by the combination of births and deaths.

So, what you need is a fairly complex computer program that can make all these adjustments. As you raise fertility, it can change everything that has to be changed. As you raise mortality, it can change everything that has to be changed. We have a very fine computer program invented here at the U.S. Census Bureau which can do that.

So, we used that and reconstructed the population trends fairly accurately. That is, you start with the 1953 census age structure, and in order to create the 1964 age structure from the census, matching the census age structure, you have to use certain fertility and mortality trends to do that. So, that constrains very greatly the assumptions that you can make. So, that's what I did. That's where this reconstruction comes from. It is internally consistent and gives you your 1982 age structure, too.

So, I'm fairly confident that it is reasonably accurate as a description of what has happened in China from 1953.

CHINESE STATISTICS INDICATE KILLING OF BABY GIRLS PERSISTS

(By Philip J. Hilts)

Widespread killing of female infants still may be practiced in China, and a specialist said the killings may number as high as tens of thousands a year, according to information released yesterday at the National Academy of Sciences.

The information comes from the first detailed reports of population statistics ever released by the Peoples Republic. The statistics also disclosed that about 27 million people died during the economic campaign, called the "Great Leap Forward," of the late 1950s and early 1960s.

After three decades of demographic secrecy about their huge population, the Chinese suddenly have disgorged a wealth of data in a special edition of the official Chinese demographic journal, "Population and Economics."

The issue, published late last year in China, reports details not only of the new 1982 census, the largest census in history by any nation, but also for the first time of the 1953 and 1964 censuses.

There are "dramas told by these data," said Ansley J. Coale, a Princeton University demographer who reported yesterday on the Chinese data for the National Research Council, the research arm of the National Academy of Sciences.

Striking achievements and disasters are reflected in the data, Coale said, including a public health program that has raised life expectancy far above what might be expected for a country with as little development as China.

Life expectancy is now 69 years for Chinese women and 66 for men, an increase of 20 years over the past three decades. At the same time, the fertility rate has been cut in half.

On the problem of infanticide, Coale said the statistics show that overall the male-female ratio is near the norm of 106 boys to 100 girls at birth.

But the figures also show that, in rural areas, the ratio is 112 males tc 100 females for third children at birth. Since about 1 million girls are born as third or later children, the discrepancy between the natural rate of 106 boys and the reported rate of 112 indicates a loss of about 60,000 baby girls a year.

For fourth children, ratios are even higher, 115 boys to 100 girls. In some regions of China ratios as high as 130 or more to 100 have been reported.

Coales said it is possible that some of the missing girls may be accounted for by the Chinese practice of not reporting to authorities the births of third or later children, especially girls, because of the government's strong sanctions against having more than one child.

Numerous stories in Chinese newspapers reporting and condemning infanticide, however, support the likelihood that a substantial portion of the distorted ratio is caused by infanticide.

The reports cite it as a serious problem remaining from the "feudal" past and describe in gory detail the means of killing baby girls, such as keeping a water bucket near the maternity bed in which to drown girls as soon as they are born.

Also, in the official Chinese journal, infanticide is mentioned as one explanation of the unusual ratio.

The Chinese numbers also show a striking leap in the death rate in the years around 1960, coinciding with the "Great Leap Forward," the economic program of former Communist Party chairman Mao Zedong.

The death rate was just above 20 per 1,000 people in the mid-1950s. It leaped to 38 per thousand in 1960, and dropped to about 13 per thousand by 1963.

Coales said the rates meant that about 27 million people died who otherwise would not have if the death rates had remained steady.

"The peak in 1960 is without any doubt the result of the economic crisis that came during the Great-Leap Forward," Coales said.

The economic scheme was one intended to modernize Chinese agriculture and industry at once. Mass changes were ordered in social and economic organization to achieve it.

The result, according to Coales, was that the Chinese "didn't properly collect and distribute the crops. There was a great deal of starvation."

CHINA GENOCIDE AVOIDED ATTENTION

(By Edward Neilan)

In this Age of the Tube, calamities and disasters do not fully make their mark on the citizenry unless they are reported on television.

So it is little wonder that the statistics revealed the other day by the National Academy of Sciences that 27 million people died as a result of former Chairman Mao Tse-tung's Great Leap Forward in China in the late 1950s and early 1960s went virtually unnoticed.

Television didn't cover the Great Leap Forward firsthand, nor for that matter did foreign correspondents of newspapers. China in those days was a mystery behind closed doors. Only now are we finding out the dimensions of the draconian nightmares which took place there in the name of building a model socialist state.

The news of the largest death figure ever admitted by any nation came buried deeply, almost parenthetically, in coverage of a population report issued by the World Bank. One newspaper headlined the story "Population Explosion Forecast"—hardly news anymore. The significance of the 27 million deaths was overlooked.

Think of that magnitude of humanity for a moment: 27 million people died because of misguided communist policies that were supposed to correct inequities of the previous regime.

The term autogenocide was coined recently to describe the substantial destruction of a people by its own leaders. Kampuchea's Khmer Rouge regime was thought to be the most notorious practitioner of autogenocide when after 1975 it decimated as many as one-fourth of the population. But the total dead in Kampuchea is nowhere near the 27 million admitted by China.

The Republic of China on Taiwan has been claiming for years that the policies of the Peoples Republic of (Communist) China were haywire and that mass deaths were resulting from poor food planning and from direct killing of "unproductive mouths."

Public opinion, led by liberal commentators, tended to dismiss those claims from Taipei as propaganda. The figure 27 million dead, released by the National Academy of Sciences, was based on data in the official Chinese demographic journal "Population and Economics."

The local representative office of the Republic of China, known as the Coordination Council for North American Affairs, is discouraged under the Taiwan Relations Act from commenting on such matters. So a telex message asking for comment was dispatched to James C.Y. Soong, director-general of the Government Information Office, Republic of China. His reply was received Monday:

"This scientific analysis proves the charges of Chinese communist genocide that the Republic of China has been making over a period of many years," Mr. Soong, who acts as chief spokesman for his government, said.

"Some of our critics said this was propaganda. It was not. Now the proof has been cited in the scientific findings of the National Academy of Sciences in Washington.

"As we have asserted and the analysis proves, there was a terrible loss of human life during the Great Leap Forward, the Cultural Revolution and other Chinese communist experiments in the enforced control of society. We hope the people of the world now will come to understand the evils that the Chinese communists have committed in the time of Mao Tse-tung and since.

"The infanticides and abortions for which Deng Xiaoping is responsible merely repeat Mao's regard of the people of the mainland as 'little blue ants' to be manipulated and stepped on without regard for the traditional humanism of China," Mr. Soong said.

"In efforts to control the birth rate, the Chinese communists are now murdering a whole generation. This is one of the most heinous crimes in history. Today's mainland leaders are no different from those who have gone before.

"We ask in the name of humanity that the free world cite the National Academy of Sciences' conclusive evidence of these crimes and demand that Peking be called to account for them," Mr. Soong said.

The press attache of the Embassy of the People's Republic of China here, Chenxun Shi, said that to his recollection there had been no comment on the National Academy of Sciences report by the official Xinhua News Agency. However, he said that Chinese delegates to the World Population Council meeting in Mexico City next month will later pass through Washington and "may have some explanation or elaboration of the population statistics."

Killing of female infants is still practiced in China and may number as many as tens of thousands a year.

The Chinese press continues to report on infanticide as a serious problem left over from the feudal past and describe bluntly measures to kill baby girls such as keeping a water bucket near the maternity bed in which to drown girls as soon as they are born.

One has to wonder why there has been no international campaign to protest human rights violations in China, particularly after Peking's government iself now confirms such a staggering death toll.●

THE NEED TO PRESERVE A STRONG TITLE IX

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, in adopting title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, Congress sought to expand educational opportunities for women in the United States. Compelling evidence of the success of title IX is being demonstrated in the outstanding performance of America's talented women athletes during the Olympic Games now underway in Los Angeles.

The goal of title IX is to ensure that schools and universities receiving Federal assistance provide equal opportunities for both men and women. Congress clearly intended through title IX to guarantee equal access by both sexes to the programs and activities of federally supported institutions. This includes such areas as admission, athletics, counseling, housing facilities, financial aid, course selection, employment, vocational education, and other activities.

Title IX has enabled female students to make tremendous progress in educational pursuits which had traditionally been dominated by men. The most striking gains have been in athletics. The number of women involved in high school and intercollegiate athletic programs has soared since the law was passed, and the proportion of scholarships offered to talented women athletes by colleges and universities has risen from 1 out of 100 in 1974 to 22 out of every 100 today.

Title IX has helped to guarantee that no area of professional development in our society is limited on the basis of sex. In the decade since title IX became law, the enrollment of women in vocational education courses has risen significantly, along with the admission of women to schools of business, law, and medicine.

The Supreme Court has adopted a narrow interpretation of title IX, holding that the laws protections are limited to specific programs or activities and do not apply on an institution-wide basis. In the wake of this decision, the Civil Rights Office of the Department of Education dropped a finding of sex discrimination against the University of Maryland, which had been charged with failing to provide equal treatment for female athletes in scholarships, facilities, and other services. Other actions have also been dropped, leading to the prospect of a serious setback for women under a weakened title IX.

Legislation is pending in the Senate to clarify the broad scope of coverage which Congress intended for title IX and other important civil rights laws. Passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1984 will reaffirm the commitment of Congress to eliminate discrimination and to promote equality of opportunity at all levels of society.

The 1984 Olympics have provided spectacular proof of the great strides which our Nation has made under title IX. Now is not the time to turn back. The importance of strengthening title IX has been outlined in an article by Kenneth H. Bastian, Jr., director of east coast operations for the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, in Sunday's edition of the Washington Post. Mr. President, I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 5, 1984]

THANK TITLE IX FOR SOME OF THAT GOLD

(By Kenneth H. Bastian, Jr.)

The whole world is watching American women win Olympic gold medals in Los Angeles, thanks to a dramatic explosion of interest—and money—devoted to women's sports in the United States. As a firm believer in the private sector, and as one who does not advocate government interference where it has no business, I'd be delighted to report that the catalyst for this growth in women's amateur sports was the same as for me: early encouragement from school athletic programs and generous corporate sponsorships.

Instead, a key reason that Cheryl Miller leads our women's basketball team to one victory after another and that Tracy Caulkins has broken swimming records for our country is that they, like the majority of their teammates, have benefited from a law passed by Congress in 1972.

That law, Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, states that "no person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any educational program or activity receiving financial or federal assistance."

It forced American schools, colleges and universities to broaden their women's athletic programs, and led to the first athletic scholarships' being made available to women. The results have been dramatic: the number of women in intercollegiate athletic programs jumped from 16,000 in 1972 to over 150,000 today. In 1972 only 7 percent of high school athletes were girls. Ten years later, the number had jumped to 35 percent. The quality, as well as the quantity, of their achievements has been spectacular.

For example, men have taken only seven minutes off their best record marathon running time in the past 10 years. Women, many training seriously for the first time thanks to new women's professional coaches in school programs, have taken an hour and five minutes off their 1964 record. The same story can be told throughout the sports world: women finally are beginning to reach their potential as athletes.

Yet even as we cheer these victories, they may be fleeting. This dramatic increase in female athletic achievement is threatened by the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling in the Grove City College case, which struck down the Title IX provision.

Already schools are relaxing their efforts. According to the Women's Sports Foundation, 23 sex discrimination cases—aimed at forcing compliance with Title IX cases in school athletic programs—have been dropped.

"If an administrator takes it into his head that 'basketball is for boys,' he can do away with girls' basketball with no fear of governmental action," says Donna de Varona, a founding member and president of the Women's Sports Foundation, who won two Olympic gold medals in swimming in 1964.

She knows what the future could hold without Title IX. After her gold medal victories in Tokyo, she had no real opportunities to train in college. However, Don Schollander, her fellow gold medalist, went on to compete for four more years in the highly developed world of men's collegiate swimming.

In the Grove City ruling, the Supreme Court found that the equality requirements are "program specific," so that if a college receives $10,000 in federal funds for its mathematics programs, that money must be spent equally for men and women only in mathematics programs. This interpretation allows schools to accept federal dollars through one office while discriminating in another.

Other school programs—including athletics—no longer need to provide equal opportunity if they don't get that direct federal funding. Many schools, therefore, won't have to comply, since their sports are funded from non-federal sources—student fees, alumni groups, ticket sales and television contracts.

Will they voluntarily continue to fund women's sports in a big way? Many believe not, since enough progress hasn't been made yet to elevate women's sports to the same profit-making level as men's sports. Before Title IX, which aimed at promoting the potential of each individual—whether male or female—in sports, athletic directors historically concentrated on whatever program provided the most public attention and revenue for their schools.

College athletic budgets for women, which grew under pressure from Title IX from 1 percent to 16 percent of the total spent on all college sports, probably will shrink again unless Congress acts.

Many of our future Olympic women athletes might have to retire in their teens, like de Varona, while their male counterparts compete for their colleges and universities. Scholarships may dry up. And this may turn out to be the peak year for U.S. women in the Olympics. Of the more than 200 women

Olympians representing our nation in the current games, more than 170 received their training in a university or college athletic program.

It is ironic that this progress should be threatened in the same year that finds a woman on the Supreme Court, women aboard the space shuttle, women in the Cabinet and a woman running for vice president. It doesn't have to happen. Both the Democrats and the Republicans, who claim to offer equal opportunity for all Americans, should support legislation that will reinforce the key provisions of Title IX. In a May 22 press conference, the president voiced his support for Title IX, but the language reversing the Grove City College case is currently stalled in the Senate, and time is running out for passage and for our women athletes.●

LEGAL COSTS ARE OUT OF CONTROL

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, yesterday I shared with my colleagues some information about the Uniform Product Liability Act, S. 44, that opponents of the measure have circulated. They expressed concern that my effort to reform the product liability system would mean less business for trial lawyers, since the bill would greatly streamline the system and make it understandable to the lay person. By its own words, the Association of Trial Lawyers of America showed its vested interest in keeping our product liability laws as confusing as possible, in order to generate more profits for the legal profession.

I am not alone, however, in expressing concern over the high cost of legal services in this country. No less an authority than the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, the Honorable Warren Burger, has condemned excessive legal costs and the needless litigation that produces them. Others share that view as well and have taken imaginative steps to reduce the cost of legal assistance to the American public. I'd like to think that S. 44, which would take money out of the hands of middlemen like trial lawyers and give it to the injured victims that deserve it, is also a step in that same direction.

The August 13, 1984, issue of U.S. News & World Report contains an excellent overview of the subject of rising legal costs. I commend it to the attention of my colleagues before they vote on S. 44. I, therefore, ask that the article be reprinted in the RECORD.

The article follows:

SOARING LEGAL COSTS: EVEN LAWYERS ARE WORRIED

(By Ted Gest)

CHICAGO—Lawyers and judges gathered here for the American Bar Association's annual convention are stepping up moves to slash the nation's huge legal bill.

Their aim is to curtail complex court maneuvers that often waste clients' time and last year helped run up lawyers' fees estimated to exceed 33 billion dollars nationwide, almost three times as much as a decade earlier.

The increase is partly due to the doubling of lawyers' ranks to 650,000 in the same period—growth that many bar leaders say is justified by public demand for legal assistance. But critics charge that some lawyers are provoking or prolonging litigation unnecessarily to maintain their income levels in a time of brisk competition.

Whoever is right, many in the profession are disturbed by what Chief Justice Warren Burger calls the "widespread hue and cry about lawyers' fees and litigation costs."

A recent survey of American Bar Association members found more than one third concerned about lawyers' image and "public credibility."

ETHICALLY WRONG

As the delegates arrived here, a special ABA Commission to Reduce Court Costs and Delay released results of a five-year study, declaring: "The high cost of litigation is a matter of critical concern. It is ethically wrong for the judicial resolution of disputes to be prohibitively expensive."

The commission and other experts urged a two-pronged attack that would seek to:

Keep out of court entirely many of the 14.6 million civil disputes that land in the laps of judges each year.

Impose stricter controls on the cases that make it to the courtroom.

Diverting disagreements before they get to judges in the first place is the goal of dispute-resolution projects already sprouting around the U.S.

Noting that 9 out of 10 civil suits are settled out of court—often only after expensive preparation—Chicago lawyer Jerold Solovy says that "when all that time and energy goes down the drain, it's a very inefficient process."

Businesses suffer the bulk of the burden. Eager to save time and money by resolving legal disputes, many corporations are turning away from the courts to such devices as the "minitrial." This involves having litigants agree to air their differences privately in an abbreviated, courtlike proceeding held in a private club or a law office.

Top executives take an active role, in the hope that settlements of the matters can be reached on the spot. A neutral party—usually a retired judge—often presides and may offer an opinion on the likely outcome of the case if it were brought to court.

Minitrials offer combatants the chance to size up each other's arguments and agree on solutions without wasting many years and dollars on protracted maneuvers. If no settlement is reached, the parties still have the option of taking their arguments to court.

More than 100 minitrials have been conducted in the last few years, most of them ending conflicts without litigation. The procedure works best in disputes that are strictly monetary; novel legal questions usually require a judge's formal decision. It helps if disputants are on friendly terms, but experts say that even cases in which both sides start out far apart and unwilling to budge have been unsnarled through the minitrial process.

A quarrel between U.S. German companies over a 1.5-million-dollar contract was shaping up into a two-year-long international courtroom battle.

Recalls one participant, New York lawyer Charles Parlin: "We decided to have a minitrial in which each side had an hour to present its best case to the other. We broke for lunch, and the dispute was settled afterward in 15 minutes." Tens of thousands of dollars in legal fees were saved.

A similar procedure was used to iron out a natural-gas-contract dispute in which Borden, Inc., had sought 800 million dollars in damages from Texaco. Instead of a monetary settlement, the firms renegotiated a gas-supply contract not at issue in the case—a deal that gave favorable rates to Borden and saved Texaco heavy legal costs.

BETTER BUSINESS

Texaco attorney Charles Kazlauskas reports that relations between the two firms improved dramatically, leading to more business between them. "Not only was this resolution novel, but it was economically beneficial to both parties," he says.7

New private firms specializing in such bargaining are hanging out their shingles. One of them, EnDispute, Inc., is based in Washington, D.C., but has already opened branches in Chicago and Los Angeles. Says President Jonathan Marks: "This is a consumer revolution in the purchase of legal services—one of the few revolutions led by corporations."

Business isn't the only beneficiary of the trend. Taxpayers could cut some of the costs of paying a growing corps of government lawyers if disputes involving public agencies were settled more readily.

A private, New York-based organization called the Center for Public Resources is starting a pilot program of arranging minitrials in big-stakes squabbles between the U.S. government and defense contractors.

Minitrials help settle big corporate claims, but many consumer and divorce problems are better suited to more-traditional methods in which a third party meets with each side in an effort to find a middle ground.

In mediation, a neutral observer helps move negotiations along. In arbitration, an independent authority hears arguments and decides the issue in a procedure that is much less formal than in a courtroom.

More than 200 communities have set up out-of-court centers where citizens can bring minor disputes. Legislation is pending or on the books in nearly two dozen states recognizing such projects as alternatives to courts. A few states provide operating funds.

But many citizens don't know where to find such services. To overcome this problem, offices have been opened on an experimental basis in Houston, Tulsa and Washington, serving as central sites that people can visit to obtain counseling on how to settle claims cheaply and efficiently.

"We diagnose legal problems just as a physician would diagnose an illness," says director Terry Simonson of the Tulsa program, which has handled more than 100 cases a week since it opened last spring. Many people are referred to mediators or arbitrators, others to government agencies or the Better Business Bureau.

Despite the rapid growth of such projects, lawsuits by the millions will keep pouring into the nation's courthouses. Many languish for five years or longer, some because judges are overwhelmed with cases and others because lawyers persist in unnecessary pretrial paper work and interviews.

MONEY METER

Judges around the U.S.—under fire for being lax with lawyers—are clamping down on cases that drag on for years while attorneys' billing meters are running.

One speedup technique being tried is the "summary jury trial." In such a proceeding, lawyers present brief versions of their arguments to jurors, who offer an informal verdict that usually provides a guideline for settling the case.

U.S. District Judge Thomas Lambros of Cleveland, who initiated the concept in 1980, reports that virtually all of the more than 100 lawsuits handled through summary procedures have been wrapped up without a full trial.

Other jurists are trying more-modest reforms. Many cases are delayed, for example, when persons testifying at pretrial out-of-court "depositions" refuse to answer questions. Typically, lawyers must then schedule a court hearing on whether the witness is required by law to answer. Nowadays, some judges tell attorneys to notify them of such disputes immediately so they can issue rulings by telephone.

Gaining more support is an ambitious concept nicknamed the doomsday-machine approach by Washington lawyers Howard Bedlin and Paul Nejelski. It imposes strict deadlines for completing such steps as motions and pretrial investigations, along with penalties for noncompliance.

Lawyers are increasingly being held accountable, too, for pursuing meritless claims. Chief Justice Burger cites one case in which a judge ordered a plaintiff to pay a defendant nearly 2 million dollars in fees and expenses for using the judicial system to air "totally frivolous allegations."

States are beginning to put time limits on case processing. Fourteen have deadlines ranging from six months to two years for disposing of civil cases. Chief justices of the 50 states, meeting in Lake Ozark, Mo., on August 2, urged each state to enact such limits. "Cases shouldn't be allowed to lie in the system and fester," said North Dakota Chief Justice Ralph Erickstad.

The ABA commissison reported success with time-limit experiments it has sponsored in both trial and appeal courts. A statewide Kentucky program to speed cases, for example, caused lawyers' fees to drop by 24 percent.

An ABA unit will mount a drive in coming months to persuade state and local lawyers' groups and courts to adopt plans to speed and simplify litigation. Says San Francisco lawyer Theodore Kolb, who heads the effort: "We don't enjoy running up litigation costs—we want happy clients. Now is the time for the bar to take the leadership on this issue, or clients will abandon the court system."

Critics charge, however, that most American lawyers have little reason to press hard for reforms. "Lawyers are not highly motivated to cut themselves out of potential income," comments Robert Tigner of Help Abolish Legal Tyranny, a Washington-based law-reform organization. "For many attorneys, the more inefficient the legal system is, the better," he says.

FOOT DRAGGING

Lawyers sometimes block proposed improvements. Tigner notes that when Maryland's judiciary scrubbed a requirement that couples make an appearance in court with their attorneys even in uncontested divorce cases, the lawyer-dominated Legislature reinstated the rule.

What's more, the ABA commission conceded that even when cases are handled faster, some attorneys don't pass along the savings. In too many cases, said the panel, "lawyers are benefiting but clients are not."

Many bar leaders acknowledge that if lawyers don't recognize that it is in their interest to hold down fees and delays, judges will take action.

Says Denver lawyer Robert Hanley, a member of the ABA's policymaking House of Delegates: "More lawyers are realizing that we could price ourselves out of existence. But it almost doesn't matter what we think because judges are forcing us to be more efficient, and that is bound to save clients money."●

JUDGE A. DAVID MAZZONE

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, Judge A. David Mazzone of the U.S. district court in Boston deserves recognition for 6 years of exemplary service on the bench.

In a recent article in the Boston Globe, William Doherty detailed the qualities that make Judge Mazzone a highly respected jurist. Known for his efficiency and his efficacy, he is always well-prepared and acquainted with the details of each case.

Judge Mazzone's personal qualities are equally commendable. He is often described as patient, humble, kind and caring, and evidence of his compassion for victims of injustice abounds. At the same time, he has been firm and severe with transgressors of the law.

In his own words, Judge Mazzone says that there aren't "any secrets to being a good judge," other than hard work, "a respect for the law, a knowledge of the principles, and a desire to do the best job you can." And those are precisely the assets which Judge Mazzone brings to the bench.

I ask that the Boston Globe article about Judge Mazzone be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

GOOD LAWYERS MAKE GOOD JUDGES

JUDGE MAZZONE COMBINES EFFICIENCY WITH RESPECT FOR LAW, AWARENESS OR ISSUES

(By William Doherty)

For years Judge A. David Mazzone has had one of the lowest backlogs of any of the nine judges on the US District Court in Boston. The 400 cases on his dockets are half that of some of his colleagues.

Many lawyers attribute his effectiveness in disposing of cases to the tight control he exerts from the earliest stages of a case.

"He is always well-prepared. He has read the file beforehand, and he knows how to price a case. He knows what the case is worth, what the defendant's exposure is going to be. And he is aware of the issues even before they are spread out before him," one prosecutor said.

Mazzone himself scoffs at comparisons. "I don't like scorekeepers" he said, pointing out that he has not been burdened with cases like the Boston school desegregation case, which have skewered the backlog of other judges. "I just want to do my job, quietly," he said.

The case of Theordore V. Anzalone, which was assigned to Mazzone by lot, has thrust the 56-year-old judge into the spotlight, however. Anzalone, the former chief fundraiser for former Boston Mayor Kevin H. White, was found guilty of currency reporting violations. The case attracted wide attention.

"I don't think there are any secrets to being a good judge," Mazzone said in a recent interview. "You have to work at it. Few of us have the brillance of a (Judge Charles E.) Wyzanski or (Judge) Learned Hand. What you have is a respect for the law, a knowledge of the principles and a desire to do the best job you can."

"Good lawyers make good judges. Any lawyer can make a judge look bad. But a good lawyer playing by the rules, playing it straight makes a good case, and the judge is merely incidental, truly an impartial arbiter. A judge should just be there with a knowledge of the law and leave the lawyering to the lawyers."

Mazzone schedules conferences on all his pending cases twice a year. "I go through every one with the lawyers. I discuss settlement with them. I schedule each case for trial and, as much as I can, I adhere to that schedule."

A large black board in his lobby has each case and the dates allotted to it chalked in.

"Down to earth . . . patient . . . orderly" are words lawyers frequently used to describe Mazzone's courtroom style.

He never raises his voice, but when his 6-foot-4 frame mounts the bench and his eyes scan the courtroom there is no doubt who the authority figure is.

Boston lawyer Monroe L. Inker describes Mazzone as "a kind, caring man, who bends over backwards to be patient with lawyers. He has a great deal of humility."

Atty. Morris M. Goldings said Mazzone "fits the mold of the typical Kennedy judge. If (W. Arthur) Garrity was the Jack Kennedy legacy to the bench, he is the Robert Kennedy legacy."

Mazzone has a pro-environment and pro-civil rights accord. Atty. Albert F. Cullen said Mazzone may be liberal on some social issues, but "he is a hardliner on criminal cases overall."

Mazzone himself argues it is unfair to type a judge. "There are so many different aspects to every case and so many human factors and procedural factors that I don't think judges ought to be imprinted with a stamp. . . ."

A defense lawyer, who asked that his name not be used, said Mazzone at times is reluctant to rule against the prosecution on crucial questions. "He doesn't have the same outlook on the Fourth Amendment or the Fourteenth Amendment as (Judge W. Arthur) Garrity. Oh sure, he may rule against the government on minor stuff, but when it comes to suppression of evidence, for instance, when it means the government will not be able to make a case, he finds it difficult to rule against the government. I attribute it to growing up in an Italian immigrant family with the inbred respect for the government. . . ."

One prosecutor suggested US Att. William F. Weld's office was fortunate Mazzone was assigned the Anzalone case.

Anzalone, who was former Mayor White's chief fundraiser, was convicted of breaking up $100,000 in cash into several smaller bank transactions to circumvent federal law which requires banks to report cash transactions in excess of $10,000.

Another judge, the prosecutor argued, may have been more susceptible to defense arguments that splitting up large amounts of cash is a common practice.

The prosecutor added that another judge, may not have spent the time to consider the importance of the reporting law to investigators.

But the judge also made several key rulings unfavorable to the defense. He excluded an affidavit signed by Anzalone that the prosecution claimed showed Anzalone had a motive to hide from the IRS contributions to the birthday party for White's wife. Mazzone also, over objections of the prosecution, granted Anzalone a separate trial this fall on an extortion charge.

Anzalone was acquitted on charges relating to the birthday party contributions, but convicted and given a six-month prison sentence on charges relating to $100,000 in cash used to purchase bonds for White's mother.

Armando David Mazzone was born 56 years ago in Everett to Italian immigrant parents. An all-scholastic football player at Everett High School, he played end on Harvard football teams that included Robert F. Kennedy and Kenneth O'Donnell.

After graduation from Harvard in 1950, Mazzone went to work as a foreman in a steel mill in Chicago.

Mazzone had married Eleanor Stewart, a Californian, he met while she was attending Wellesley College. "We decided to settle halfway between both families."

Although he wanted to go to law school, his finances didn't permit it, until his job with Inland Steel Corp. was interrupted by two years in the Army and the GI bill enabled him to enroll at DePaul University Law School.

"I went to school days when I worked on the night shift. And when I worked the day shift, I picked up the other courses at night," he recalled.

After law school, Mazzone opened a small law office in Chicago, "I had three children by then and the tug of Massachusetts and everything that is nice about Boston was too strong."

He returned home and spent two years on the staff of Middlesex County Dist. Atty. John Droney and four years as an assistant US attorney under then US Atty. W. Arthur Garrity Jr.

In 1965, Mazzone and three other assistant US attorneys, resigned to form their own law firm.

Gov. Michael Dukakis appointed him to the Superior Court in 1975. Less than three years later, Mazzone was nominated to the federal bench by President Jimmy Carter on the recommendation of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy. He was sworn in March 1978.

His 89-year-old father, A. Marino Mazzone, who regularly attended many of his son's cases in Superior Court sessions throughout eastern Massachusetts, welcomed the change to a permanent location at the Federal Building in Post Office Square. "I am glad he's got a steady job," his father told an acquaintance at the time.

The judge, who is an avid tennis player, and his wife live in Wakefield. They are the parents of seven children.

His more publicized cases have included the trial of two men convicted of murdering three members of the Mahoney family in Tewksbury, the horse race-fixing trial case of Mob leader Howard Winter and the contract dispute between the New England Patriots and former coach Chuck Fairbanks.

But it is cases where his rulings have focused on victims of the process that he regards as more significant. He becomes animated talking about his decisions, which included:

Enjoining the federal government from depriving elderly persons of medicaid benefits when their income exceeded the limit because of cost of living increases in their social security benefits.

Barring highway construction near the Quabbin Reservoir after it affected the quality of Boston's water supply. "I appointed a monitor who sat out there by a stream for two years testing the water. He sent me samples that were so filthy you would become a confirmed Scotch drinker. But after two years the water was clean."

Requiring the federal government to return $3 million in fuel assistance allocated to low income Massachusetts residents in the winter of 1980. The federal government wanted the money back because the state failed to set up the distribution procedures quickly enough.

Halting the sale of oil drilling leases on Georges Bank after finding the Secretary of the Interior has not complied with the required procedures—"a clear example of government overreaching. It was like saying if the government says it is good, it must be good. And it wasn't."●

THE AMERICAN STEEL INDUSTRY: MYTH VERSUS REALITY XI

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, today I present my 11th in a series of brief statements that will appear periodically in an effort to elevate the level of debate on the crisis in the American steel industry.

The recent decisions made by the International Trade Commission concerning the American steel industry have increased the intensity of the debate concerning the restoration of the industry to healthy competitiveness. The ITC majority decision determining that imports were the major cause of injury and its followup decision recommending relief in the form of a combination of tariffs and quotas for the steel industry have encouraged critics of relief to become increasingly vocal. Most often, they claim that the U.S. steel industry is already adequately protected under current law from unfairly traded and unfairly priced imports and has been so for years, It is time to dispense with such an illusion and return this debate concerning import quotas and the steel industry to a factual basis from which we can all proceed in search of an effective, comprehensive solution.

MYTH

The American steel industry has been protected from imports for the past 10 years.

REALITY

In 1974, foreign imports claimed 13.4 percent of the American steel market. At the beginning of 1984, foreign steelmakers were claiming over 26 percent of the U.S. market. Such penetration, in absolute terms, hardly constitutes protection.

In relative terms, U.S. steel producers have been protected much less than Japanese, European, or Third World steelmakers. In Japan, the Government restricted steel imports to 1 million tons yearly from 1950 to 1978. Currently, the Japanese steel industry is protected by structural barriers to imports, notably by the refusal of large trading companies to handle imported steel.

In Europe, the European Community has attempted to coordinate an extensive program of market controls since 1975. The European Community has limited imports to a maximum of 12 million net tons or to about 10 percent of apparent European Community steel consumption per year. By 1978, bilateral agreements had been reached with all major exporters to the European market, stringently limiting imports into the Community. Any producers not covered are monitored against minimum import price levels as established by the European Community. A bilateral Japanese-European Community agreement helps to explain Japan's sale of 75 times as much steel to the United States as it sold to the European Community in 1981.

The LDC's have limited most steel imports to those products which indigenous producers do not or cannot make in sufficient quantity. During the establishment of production capacity and during periods of expanded production or import levels, market forces are severely constrained. Access for foreign steel to LDC markets is nearly universally restricted to meeting only demand which the domestic industry is unable to satisfy.

MYTH

Current barriers to imports are sufficient to check any future growth.

REALITY

Foreign exporters of steel and steel products are becoming increasingly adept at getting their products into the U.S. market in spite of barriers to imports. For example, recent barriers erected against Brazilian steel products in the U.S. market have not been insuperable. Peter Mangels, president of the Mangels groups of steel products manufacturers, recently boasted in the English language edition of a Brazilian publication, Gazeta Mercantil, of the ease with which such barriers can be circumvented. Citing a recent instance from his own group's experience, Mangels told of supplying a $3 million order from a U.S. importer for 7,000 tons of steel sheet by shipping the product labeled as "steel shelving." Classified as "furniture," the steel sheet was delivered to the buyer without difficulty. This is just one example of the determination of foreign exporters to get their products into the U.S. market regardless of the costs or illegality of the method employed.

The American steel industry has not only suffered from insufficient protection against unfairly priced and unfairly traded imports, but from the weakness of current barriers to imports as well. In a world steel market where very few foreign competitors play by the rules as we know them, American steelmakers need effective Government assistance to restructure and regain the competitiveness necessary to survive.●

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF UMTA

● Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I would like to join my distinguished colleague from New York, Senator D'AMATO, in sponsoring Senate Resolution 415, to commemorate the 20th anniversary of the Federal Government's support of mass transportation through the Urban Mass Transportation Administration [UMTA].

Since its inception in 1964, UMTA has provided over $30 billion to the development and renovation of urban mass transit systems. These funds have assisted in the purchase of over 54,000 transit buses, almost 6,500 rail vehicles, and 18 ferry boats. At the end of 1984, UMTA will have contributed to the acquisition of 75,000 mass transportation vehicles.

The benefits that such a contribution have made to the Nation's urban areas cannot be undervalued. It has been estimated that 6.1 million persons take advantage of these systems daily, and the employment opportunities gained through the construction, maintenance and administration of these projects, as well as the convenience they offer to commuters, serve to be a major asset to the local economies of cities that have transit systems.

Assistance accrued by the State of Pennsylvania has been substantial. Since 1965, Pennsylvania has received $1.9 billion in mass transportation aid, including over $380 million toward the completion of Pittsburgh transportation authority's light rail transit project. This is the largest such undertaking in the history of western Pennsylvania.

Finally, UMTA has been an example of Federal, State, and local cooperation at its best. By providing funds for the development of these critical rail, bus and water systems and ensuring local participation, UMTA has created an equitable system for enabling our Nation's urban areas to provide their citizens with safe, reliable and efficient mass transportation systems.●

ORDERS FOR WEDNESDAY

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 10 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have a unanimous-consent request that I understand has been cleared all around. It is with respect to the setting of time for a vote tomorrow. I have discussed it with the minority leader.

SPECIAL ORDERS AND ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there be three special orders in favor of Senators DOLE, BAKER, and PROXMIRE, in that order, not to exceed 15 minutes each, to be followed by a time for the transaction of routine morning business until 11 a.m., with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

DEBATE ON BAKER MOTION AT 11 A.M.

I ask unanimous consent that at 11 a.m. tomorrow, the Senate begin 1 hour of debate on the Baker motion to waive the Budget Act with respect to the consideration of the agriculture appropriations bill, the time to be equally divided between the chairman of the Budget Committee and the ranking minority member or their designees.

CLOTURE VOTE AT 12 NOON

I ask unanimous consent that at 12 noon, the Senate proceed to vote on the cloture motion on the Baker motion to waive the Budget Act with respect to consideration of the agriculture appropriations bill and that the mandatory quorum provided for under rule XXII be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PUBLISHING OF REPORT AS SENATE DOCUMENT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report entitled, "Twenty-Fifth Meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, March 8–12, 1984" be published as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Labor Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 4164, the vocational-technical education amendments of 1984, and it be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Veterans' Affairs Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 5618, the Veterans' Health Care and Facilities Improvement Act of 1984, and it be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEASURE HELD AT DESK

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate receives from the House, House Joint Resolution 600, a commission to study agriculture export, it be held at the desk pending further disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEASURE INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 1043, Senate Concurrent Resolution 130, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IMMIGRATION REFORM AND CONTROL ACT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 529.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 529) to revise and reform the Immigration and Nationality Act, and for other purposes.

(The amendment of the House is printed in the RECORD of June 20, 1984, beginning at page 17312.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move the Senate disagree to the House amendment and request a conference with the House, and the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer [Mr. EVANS] appointed Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. MATHIAS, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. METZENBAUM, and Mr. LEAHY conferees on the part of the Senate.

PROGRAM

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, to recap, when the Senate recesses tonight, it will convene tomorrow at 10 a.m. Following the time for the two leaders under the standing order, there will be special orders not to exceed 15 minutes each for Senators DOLE, BAKER, and PROXMIRE.

Following those special orders, there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond 11 a.m., with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

Following routine morning business, by unanimous consent there will be 1 hour debate on the Baker motion to waive the Budget Act with respect to consideration of the agriculture appropriations bill, the time to be equally divided between the Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI].

At 12 noon, by unanimous consent the Senate will vote on the cloture motion on the Baker motion to waive the Budget Act with respect to consideration of the agriculture appropriations bill.

Following the cloture vote, the Senate will either resume debate on the Baker motion or resume consideration of H.R. 6040, the supplemental appropriations, which is, I believe, the pending business.

Is my statement of the program for tomorrow correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, is there any further business to come before the Senate?

If there be no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess in accordance with the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6:17 p.m., recessed until Wednesday, August 8, 1984, at 10 a.m.

FAMILY HOUSING

SEC. 102. (a) The Secretary of the Army may construct or acquire family housing units (including land acquisition) at the following installations in the number of units shown, and in the amount shown, for each installation:

Sierra Army Depot, California, one hundred and twenty-five units, $660,000.
Sierra Army Depot, California, eighty units, $5,721,000.
Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland, four hundred and thirty-nine units, $30,792,000.
Fort Hood, Texas, twenty units, $1,950,000.
Babenhausen, Federal Republic of Germany, one hundred and six units, $8,856,000.
Mainz, Federal Republic of Germany, one hundred and eighty-six units, $18,233,000.

(b)(1) Of the family housing units authorized by subsection (a) to be constructed at Fort Hood, Texas—

(A) three of those units shall be constructed for assignment to general officers who hold positions as commanders or who hold special command positions (as designated by the Secretary of Defense) and (notwithstanding section 2826 of title 10, United States Code) each such unit may be constructed with a maximum net floor area of 3,000 square feet; and

(B) seventeen of those units shall be constructed for assignment to colonels who hold positions as commanders and (notwithstanding section 2826 of title 10, United States Code) each such unit may be constructed with a maximum net floor area of 2,100 square feet.

(2) For the purposes of this subsection, the term "net floor area" has the meaning given that term by section 2826(f) of title 10, United States Code.

IMPROVEMENTS TO MILITARY FAMILY HOUSING UNITS

SEC. 103. (a) Subject to section 2825 of title 10, United States Code, the Secretary of the Army may make expenditures to improve existing military family housing units in an amount not to exceed $105,876,000, of which

(2) by striking out "standards related to the safekeeping of arms" and inserting in lieu thereof "construction criteria or standards related to the execution of the Federal military mission assigned to the unit using the facility".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1984.

RESTRICTION ON USE OF LANDS AT CAMP SHELBY, HATTIESBURG, MISSISSIPPI

SEC. 704. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the land comprising Camp Shelby, Hattiesburg, Mississippi (including any land acquired by the Secretary of the Army on or after the date of the enactment of this Act and made a part of Camp Shelby) may not be used for any purpose other than the military training of members of the Armed Forces to enhance the ability of such members to perform successfully mission assignments in a conventional warfare environment.

(b) Subject to such regulations as the Adjutant General of the State of Mississippi may prescribe, the lands referred to in subsection (a) may be used for hunting, agricultural, or forestry purposes or for any other civil purpose for which such lands were permitted to be used on or before the date of the enactment of this Act.

TITLE VIII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

PART A—MILITARY CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM REVISIONS

LIABILITY OF OCCUPANTS OF MILITARY HOUSING

SEC. 801. (a)(1) Section 2775 of title 10, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2775. Liability of members for damage to housing and related equipment and furnishings

"(a) A member of the armed forces shall be liable to the United States for damage to any family housing unit or unaccompanied personnel housing unit, or damage to or loss of any equipment or furnishings of any family housing unit or unaccompanied personnel housing unit, assigned to or provided such member if it is determined, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, that the damage or loss was caused by the abuse or negligence of the member (or a dependent of the member) or of a guest of the member (or a dependent of the member).

"(b) The Secretary of Defense may establish limitations on liability under this section, including different limitations based upon the degree of abuse or negligence involved, and may compromise or waive a claim of the United States under this section.

"(c)(1) The Secretary concerned may deduct from a member's pay an amount sufficient to pay for the cost of any repair or replacement made necessary as the result of any abuse or negligence referred to in subsection (a) for which the member is liable. Regulations implementing this section may also provide for the collection of amounts owed under this section by any other authorized means.

"(2) The final determination of an amount to be deducted from the pay of an officer of an armed force in accordance with regulations prescribed under this section shall be deemed to be a special order authorizing such deduction for the purposes of section 1007 of title 37.

"(d) Amounts received under this section shall be credited to the family housing operations and maintenance account, in the case of damage to a family housing unit (or the equipment or furnishings of a family housing unit), or to the operations and maintenance account, in the case of damage to an unaccompanied personnel housing unit (or the equipment or furnishings of an unaccompanied personnel housing unit), of the military department or defense agency concerned. Amounts so credited shall be available for use for the same purposes and under the same circumstances as other funds in those accounts.

"(e) The Secretary of Defense shall prescribe regulations to carry out the provisions of this section, including (1) regulations for determining the cost of repairs and replacements made necessary as the result of abuse or negligence referred to in subsection (a), and (2) regulations providing for limitations of liability, the compromise or waiver of claims, and the collection of amounts owed under this section.".

(2) The item relating to section 2775 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 165 of such title is amended to read as follows:

"2775. Liability of members for damage to housing and related equipment and furnishings.".

(b)(1) Regulations shall be prescribed under subsection (e) of section 2775 of title 10, United States Code, as amended by subsection (a), not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act. That section shall apply with respect to the liability of a member under such section for damage or loss to an unaccompanied personnel housing unit (or the equipment or furnishings of an unaccompanied personnel housing unit) or for damage or loss caused by a guest of the member or of a dependent of the member to a family housing unit (or the equipment or furnishings of a family housing unit) only in the case of damage or loss caused on or after the date that such regulations take effect.

(2) The authority of the Secretary of Defense under subsection (b) of such section is applicable to any claim of the United States under such section, whether such claim arose before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

COST VARIATIONS FOR ACQUISITION OF REAL PROPERTY BY CONDEMNATION

SEC. 802. Section 2676 of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting "or, in the case of land to be acquired by condemnation, the amount to be deposited with the court as just compensation for the land" in subsection (c)(2) after "upon the agreed price for the land";

(2) by inserting "or, in the case of land to be acquired by condemnation, the amount to be deposited with the court as just compensation for the land," in subsection (c)(2)(B) after "the agreed price for the land,"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) The Secretary concerned shall promptly pay any deficiency judgment against the United States awarded by a court in an action for condemnation of any interest in land or resulting from a final settlement of an action for condemnation of any interest in land. Payments under this subsection may be made from funds available to the Secretary concerned for military construction projects and without regard to the limitations of subsections (c) and (d).".

MAXIMUM AMOUNT FOR ACQUISITION OF OPTIONS ON REAL PROPERTY

SEC. 803. Section 2677(b) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by striking out "5 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "12 percent".

AUTHORITY TO RESTORE LAND OF OTHER AGENCIES USED TEMPORARILY BY DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

SEC. 804. (a) Chapter 159 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 2691. Restoration of land used by permit or lease from other agencies

"(a) The Secretary of the military department concerned may remove improvements and take any other action necessary in the judgment of the Secretary to restore land used by that military department by permit or lease from another military department or Federal agency if the restoration is required by the permit or lease making that land available to the military department. The Secretary concerned may carry out this section using funds available for operations and maintenance or for military construction.

"(b) Unless otherwise prohibited by law or the terms of the permit or lease, before restoration of any land under subsection (a) is begun, the Secretary concerned shall determine, under the provisions of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 471 et seq.), whether another military department or Federal agency has a use for the land in its existing, improved state. During the period required to make such a determination, the Secretary may provide for maintenance and repair of improvements on the land to the standards established for excess property by the Administrator of General Services.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"2691. Restoration of land used by permit or lease from other agencies.".

STORAGE AND DISPOSAL OF NONDEFENSE TOXIC AND HAZARDOUS MATERIALS

SEC. 805. (a) Chapter 159 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding after section 2691 (as added by section 804) the following new section:

"§ 2692. Storage and disposal of nondefense toxic and hazardous materials

"(a)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the Secretary of Defense may not permit the use of an installation of the Department of Defense for the storage or disposal of any material that is a toxic or hazardous material and that is not owned by the Department of Defense.

"(2) The Secretary of Defense shall define by regulation what materials are hazardous or toxic materials for the purposes of this section, including specification of the quantity of a material that serves to make it hazardous or toxic for the purposes of this section. The definition shall include materials referred to in section 101(14) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (42 U.S.C. 9601(14)) and materials designated under section 102 of that Act (42 U.S.C. 9602) and shall include materials that are of an explosive, flammable, or pyrotechnic nature.

"(b) Subsection (a) does not apply to—

"(1) the storage of strategic and critical materials in the National Defense Stockpile under an agreement for such storage with the Administrator of General Services;

"(2) the temporary storage or disposal of explosives in order to protect the public or to assist agencies responsible for Federal law enforcement in storing or disposing of explosives when no alternative solution is available, if such storage or disposal is made in accordance with an agreement between the Secretary of Defense and the head of the Federal agency concerned;

"(3) the temporary storage or disposal of explosives in order to provide emergency lifesaving assistance to civil authorities;

"(4) the disposal of excess explosives produced under a Department of Defense contract, if the head of the military department concerned determines, in each case, that an alternative feasible means of disposal is not available to the contractor, taking into consideration public safety, available resources of the contractor, and national defense production requirements;

"(5) the temporary storage of nuclear materials or non-nuclear classified materials in accordance with an agreement with the Secretary of Energy;

"(6) the storage of materials that constitute military resources intended to be used during peacetime civil emergencies in accordance with applicable Department of Defense regulations; and

"(7) the temporary storage of materials of other Federal agencies in order to provide assistance and refuge for commercial carriers of such material during a transportation emergency.

"(c) The Secretary of Defense may grant exceptions to subsection (a) when essential to protect the health and safety of the public from imminent danger if the Secretary otherwise determines the exception is essential and if the storage or disposal authorized does not compete with private enterprise.

"(d)(1) The Secretary may assess a charge for any storage or disposal provided under this section. Any such charge shall be on a reimbursable cost basis.

"(2) In the case of storage under this section authorized because of an imminent danger, the storage provided shall be temporary and shall cease once the imminent danger no longer exists. In all other cases of storage or disposal authorized under this section, the storage or disposal authorized shall be terminated as determined by the Secretary.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding after the item relating to section 2691 (as added by section 804) the following new item:

"2692. Storage and disposal of nondefense toxic and hazardous materials.".

LEASING AND RENTAL GUARANTEE PROGRAM EXTENSION

SEC. 806. (a) Section 2828(g) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by redesignating paragraph (8) as paragraph (9) and by inserting after paragraph (7) the following new paragraph (8):

"(8) In addition to the contracts authorized by paragraph (7), the Secretary of the Army may enter into one contract under this subsection for not more than 600 family housing units at one location if the contract is necessary in order to provide sufficient family housing to accommodate a major restationing action by the Army. The Secretary of the Army may not enter into a contract under this paragraph and an agreement under section 802(g) of the Military Construction Authorization Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-115; 97 Stat. 783).".

(b) Section 802 of the Military Construction Authorization Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-115; 97 Stat. 783), is amended by redesignating subsection (g) as subsection (h) and by inserting after subsection (f) the following new subsection (g):

"(g) In addition to the agreements authorized by subsection (f), the Secretary of the Army may enter into one agreement under this section for not more than 600 family housing units at one location if the agreement is necessary in order to provide sufficient family housing to accommodate a major restationing action by the Army. The Secretary of the Army may not enter into an agreement under this subsection and a contract under section 2828(g)(8) of title 10, United States Code.".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall take effect on October 1, 1984.

AUTHORIZED COST VARIATIONS

SEC. 807. Section 2853(e) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting "is more than the amount specified by law as the maximum amount for a minor military construction project and" after "under the contract" in the second sentence.

CONTRACTS FOR ARCHITECT AND ENGINEER SERVICES

SEC. 808. (a) Section 2855 of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "Contracts" at the beginning of such section; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b)(1) In the case of a contract referred to in subsection (a)—

"(A) if the Secretary concerned estimates that the initial award of the contract will be in an amount greater than or equal to the threshold amount determined under paragraph (2), the contract may not be set aside exclusively for award to small business concerns; and

"(B) if the Secretary concerned estimates that the initial award of the contract will be in an amount less than the threshold amount determined under paragraph (2), the contract shall be awarded in accordance with the set aside provisions of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 631 et seq.).

"(2) The initial threshold amount under paragraph (1) is $85,000. The Secretary of Defense may revise that amount in order to ensure that small business concerns receive a reasonable share of contracts referred to in subsection (a).

"(3) This subsection does not restrict the award of contracts to small business concerns under section 8(a) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(a)).".

(b) Subsection (b) of section 2855 of title 10, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), shall apply with respect to contracts awarded after September 30, 1984, except that the authority of the Secretary of Defense under paragraph (2) of that subsection shall apply only with respect to contacts awarded after September 30, 1985.

ADMINISTRATION OF FOREST PRODUCTS PROGRAM

SEC. 809. (a) Section 2665 of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (b), by striking out "logs wholly or partly manufactured by, or otherwise procured for, the Army, Navy, or Air Force, or" and inserting in lieu thereof "forest products produced on land owned or leased by a military department or the";

(2) in subsection (d), by striking out "lumber and timber products" and inserting in lieu thereof "forest products";

(3) in subsection (e)(1)—

(A) by striking out "timber and timber products" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "forest products"; and

(B) by striking out "25 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "40 percent"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) There is in the Treasury a reserve account administered by the Secretary of Defense for the purposes of this section. Balances in the account may be used for expenses of the military departments—

"(A) for improvements of forest lands;

"(B) for unanticipated contingencies in the administration of forest lands and the production of forest products for which other sources of funds are not available in a timely manner; and

"(C) for expenses to enable operations of forest lands and the production of forest products to continue from the end of one fiscal year through the beginning of the next fiscal year without disruption.

"(2) Subject to paragraph (3), there shall be deposited into the reserve account not later than December 31 of each year, for credit to the preceding fiscal year, an amount equal to one-half of the amount (if any) remaining of the total amount received by the United States during that fiscal year as proceeds from the sale of forest products after (A) the reimbursement of appropriations of the Department of Defense under subsection (d) for expenses of production of forest products during that fiscal year, and (B) the payment to States under subsection (e) for that fiscal year.

"(3) The balance in the reserve account may not exceed $4,000,000. If a deposit under paragraph (2) would cause the balance in the account to exceed that amount, the deposit shall be made only to the extent the amount of the deposit would not cause the balance in the account to exceed $4,000,000.".

(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1984.

(2) The amendment made by subsection (a)(2)(B) shall apply with respect to payments to States for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1984.

SALE OF ELECTRICITY FROM ALTERNATE ENERGY AND COGENERATION PRODUCTION FACILITIES

SEC. 810. (a) Chapter 147 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 2483. Sale of electricity from alternate energy and cogeneration production facilities

"(a) The Secretary of a military department may sell, contract to sell, or authorize the sale by a contractor to a public or private utility company of electrical energy generated from alternate energy or cogeneration type production facilities which are under the jurisdiction (or produced on land which is under the jurisdiction) of the Secretary concerned. The sale of such energy shall be made under such regulations, for such periods, and at such prices as the Secretary concerned prescribes consistent with the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2601 et seq.).

"(b) Proceeds from sales under subsection (a) shall be credited to the appropriation account currently available to the military department concerned for the supply of electrical energy.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"2483. Sale of electricity from alternate energy and cogeneration production facilities.".

INSTALLATION OF TELEPHONE WIRING

SEC. 811. (a) Section 1348 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, funds appropriated to the Department of Defense are available to install, repair, and maintain telephone wiring in residences owned or leased by the United States Government and, if necessary for national defense purposes, in other private residences.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective as of January 1, 1984. Funds appropriated to the Department of Defense may be used to reimburse persons for expenditures made after December 31, 1983, for the installation, repair, and maintenance of telephone wiring in any Government-owned or leased housing unit before the date of the enactment of this Act.

FAMILY HOUSING CONSTRUCTED OVERSEAS

SEC. 812. Section 803(a) of the Military Construction Authorization Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-115; 97 Stat. 784) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "shall require", and

(2) by striking out the period at the end and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "or (2) in the case of concrete housing, the use of housing (A) that is produced in a plant that was fabricated in the United States by a United States company, and (B) for which the materials, fixtures, and equipment used in the construction of such housing (other than cement, sand, and aggregates) are manufactured in the United States.".

PART B—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

TEST OF INNOVATIVE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTING METHODS

SEC. 821. The Secretary of the Air Force, with the approval of the Secretary of Defense, may enter into construction contracts for military construction projects using either turnkey competitive negotiation methods or construction management techniques at one installation of the Secretary's choice. Contracts for architectural and engineering services and for construction awarded under this section shall be subject to section 2855 of title 10, United States Code.

REPEAL OF LIMITS ON PROJECTS IN SUPPORT OF THE MASTER RESTATIONING PLAN

SEC. 822. Section 107 of the Military Construction Authorization Act, 1983 (Public Law 97-321; 96 Stat. 1552), is repealed.

STUDY OF SECTION 6 SCHOOLS

SEC. 823. The Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct a study to determine the most suitable means to pay for the construction and operation of Department of Defense dependent schools established under section 6 of Public Law 874 of the Eighty-first Congress. The study shall consider the effect that transferring responsibility for funding and operating those schools from the Department of Defense to local school districts would have on funding for the impact aid program of the Department of Education and the effect that such transfer would have on local school districts. Not later than May 1, 1984, the Comptroller General shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a report on the results of the study.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

SEC. 824. Section 807(b) of the Military Construction Authorization Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-115; 97 Stat. 788), is amended by striking out "section 2809" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 2667a". The amendment made by this section shall apply as if included in the enactment of the Military Construction Authorization Act, 1984.

PART C—REAL PROPERTY TRANSACTIONS

LAND EXCHANGE, FALCON AIR FORCE STATION, COLORADO

SEC. 831. (a)(1) The Secretary of the Air Force is authorized to acquire from the State of Colorado easements restricting the use of, and giving the United States rights-of-way over, certain parcels of land owned by the State of Colorado adjacent to the Consolidated Space Operations Center, Falcon Air Force Station, Colorado.

(2) As consideration for the interests in land acquired under paragraph (1), the United States shall convey to the State of Colorado Board of Land Commissioners all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to suitable Federal lands in Colorado.

(b) The Secretary shall adjust the amount of land conveyed and the nature of the interests acquired under subsection (a) so that the fair market value (as determined by the Secretary) of the interests in land acquired under subsection (a)(1) is not less than the fair market value (as determined by the Secretary) of the land conveyed under subsection (a)(2).

(c) The transaction authorized by subsection (a) may not be carried out until the Secretary has reported to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representative on the details of the transaction, including specification of the lands to be conveyed by the United States under subsection (a)(2), and a period of 21 days has passed from the date of the receipt of the report by those committees.

(d) The exact acreages of the lands to be acquired and conveyed under this section shall be determined by surveys which are satisfactory to the Secretary. The cost of any such survey shall be borne by the United States.

(e) The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with the transaction authorized by this section as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

REPLACEMENT OF WAREHOUSE FACILITIES, CAMP PENDLETON MARINE CORPS BASE, CALIFORNIA

SEC. 832. In consideration for granting continued use through December 31, 2006, of approximately 84 acres of land and 164,000 square feet of warehouse space at the Marine Corps Base, Camp Pendleton, California, to the Southern California Edison Company in support of the San Onofre Nuclear Generating Station, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept—

(1) replacement warehouse facilities, satisfactory to the Secretary, to be constructed at no cost to the United States on the Marine Corps Base, Camp Pendleton; and

(2) payment of the fair market rental value, as determined by the Secretary, for use of the 84 acres of land.

DISPOSITION OF SUBSTANDARD HOUSING AT CAMP PENDLETON, CALIFORNIA; CONSTRUCTION OF EQUIVALENT VALUE OF NEW FAMILY HOUSING

SEC. 833. (a) The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to convey all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the parcel of land, consisting of 56 acres, more or less (together with the improvements thereon), in Oceanside California owned by the United States and under the jurisdiction of the Secretary known as the Sterling Homes Project. The conveyance shall be for cash or under an exchange as described in subsection (c)(2). If the conveyance is for cash, the sale of the property shall be conducted in accordance with competitive bidding procedures.

(b)(1) The Secretary is authorized to construct family housing units at Camp Pendleton, California, in addition to the family housing authorized for Camp Pendleton by section 202.

(2) The number of housing units authorized to be constructed under this subsection is the number of units that may be constructed by the contractor within—

(A) the amount received as proceeds from the conveyance under subsection (a), if the property referred to in that subsection is sold for cash; or

(B) an amount equal to the fair market value, as determined by the Secretary, of the property conveyed under that subsection, if the property is conveyed under an exchange described in subsection (c)(2).

(c) If the conveyance under subsection (a) is for cash, the Secretary shall retain the proceeds of the sale and shall use the proceeds for the construction authorized by subsection (b). In such case, the Secretary may not enter into a contract for that construction in an amount in excess of the amount received as proceeds from the sale or in advance of the receipt of such proceeds.

(2) In lieu of a sale for cash under subsection (a), the Secretary may exchange the property referred to in that subsection for the construction of the housing units authorized by subsection (b).

(d) The exact acreage and legal description of the property to be conveyed by the Secretary under this section shall be in accordance with surveys that are satisfactory to the Secretary. The cost of any such survey shall be borne by the buyer.

(e) The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with the conveyance and construction authorized by this section as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

LAND CONVEYANCE, LOMPOC, CALIFORNIA

SEC. 834. (a) Subject to subsection (b), the Secretary of the Army (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to convey, without monetary consideration, to the city of Lompoc, California (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "City"), all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the real property described in subsection (c).

(b)(1) The conveyance authorized by subsection (a) shall be subject to the condition that the real property conveyed shall be used by the City—

(A) for the Lompoc, California, Western Spaceport Museum and Science Center as a permanent site for a space science museum;

(B) for educational and recreational purposes related to the purpose described in subparagraph (A); or

(C) for the purposes described in subparagraphs (A) and (B).

(2) If the property conveyed pursuant to subsection (a) is not used for one or more of the purposes described in paragraph (1), all right, title, and interest in and to such property shall revert to the United States, which shall have the right of immediate entry thereon.

(3) The Secretary may require such other terms and conditions with respect to the conveyance as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

(c) The real property referred to in subsection (a) is a tract of land containing 148.84 acres, more or less, located within the City and bounded on the north by Santa Barbara County Highway S-20, on the east by California State Highway Numbered 1, and on the south and west by property controlled by the Department of the Army.

(d) The exact acreage and legal description of the property to be conveyed under subsection (a) shall be determined by surveys that are satisfactory to the Secretary. The cost of any such survey shall be borne by the City.

LAND CONVEYANCE, RIVERSIDE COUNTY, CALIFORNIA

SEC. 835. (a) Subject to subsection (b), the Secretary of the Air Force (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to convey to the Village West Foundation, Incorporated (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Foundation"), of San Bernardino, California, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land described in subsection (c).

(b) In consideration for the conveyance by the Secretary under subsection (a), the Foundation shall pay to the United States an amount of money equal to the fair market value (as determined by the Secretary) of the land authorized to be conveyed under subsection (b).

(c) The land referred to in subsection (a) is a portion of March Air Force Base, California, composed of one parcel containing approximately 150 acres. The tract of land is on west March Air Force Base bounded on the east by Clark Street, on the west by Allen Street, on the south by 5th Street, and the north is an extension of 11th Street between Allen and Clark Streets.

(d) A conveyance by the Secretary under subsection (a) shall provide that—

(1) if the land conveyed is not used as a permanent location for facilities of the Foundation before the end of the 10-year period beginning on the date on which the land is conveyed—

(A) title to the land shall revert to the United States; and

(B) upon such reversion, the Secretary shall pay to the Foundation, from amounts available for that purpose, an amount equal to 50 percent of the fair market value of the land reverting to the United States, determined as of the date on which the land was conveyed to the Foundation by the Secretary;

(2) if all or any portion of the land conveyed ceases to be used for Foundation purposes during the 40-year period beginning on the date on which the 10-year period stated in paragraph (1) ends, title to all of such land which has ceased to be used for Foundation purposes shall revert to the United States;

(3) during the 50-year period beginning on the date of the conveyance, a construction project may be begun on such land only after the plans for such construction are approved by the Secretary; and

(4) during the 50-year period beginning on the date of the conveyance, the Foundation may not sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of the land conveyed.

(e) Notwithstanding section 2733 of title 10, United States Code, sections 1346 and 2672 of title 28, United States Code, and section 715 of title 32, United States Code, or any other provision of law enacted before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act (except a law that specifically refers to the Foundation or to this section), the United States shall not be liable to the Foundation for any damage to, or diminution in value of, any land conveyed under this section (or any improvement on such land) if such damage or diminution in value is caused by an activity of the United States at March Air Force Base, California.

(f) The transaction authorized by this section shall be made subject to such additional terms and conditions as the Secretary considers appropriate to carry out the provisions of this section and to protect the interests of the United States.

(g) The exact acreage and legal description of any land conveyed under this section shall be determined by surveys which are satisfactory to the Secretary. The cost of any such survey shall be borne by the Foundation.

RELEASE OF LEASEHOLD INTEREST, SAN DIEGO UNIFIED PORT DISTRICT, CALIFORNIA

SEC. 836. (a) Subject to subsection (b), the Secretary of the Navy (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to convey to the San Diego Unified Port District, California (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Port") all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to Lease NOy(R)-44755 entered into by the United States with the Port, comprising approximately 3.35 acres of land with Navy-owned improvements known as the San Diego Branch, Western Division, Naval Facilities Engineering Command. Such conveyance may not be made until a replacement facility for the San Diego Branch is available in accordance with subsection (b).

(b) In consideration for the conveyance authorized by subsection (a), the Port shall—

(1) construct, at no expense to the United States, a suitable replacement facility for the San Diego Branch at a suitable Navy-owned site, as determined by the Secretary;

(2) pay to the Secretary the cost of removing any existing improvements on the replacement site;

(3) pay to the Secretary the cost of relocating the San Diego Branch and its tenants; and

(4) convey to the United States unencumbered title to the replacement facility.

(c) The Secretary is authorized to receive, obligate, and disburse any funds received under subsection (b)(2) and (3) to facilitate the relocation.

(d) If the fair market value of the interest conveyed under subsection (a) exceeds the sum of the fair market value of the replacement facility and the amounts paid under subsection (b), as determined by the Secretary, the Port shall pay the difference to the United States.

(e) The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions as the Secretary considers necessary or appropriate to protect the interest of the United States.

LAND EXCHANGE, SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA

SEC. 837. (a) Subject to subsection (b), the Secretary of the Navy (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized (1) to convey to the City of San Diego (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "City") all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to approximately 120 acres of land lying southerly of proposed highway S-52 and east of Second San Diego Aqueduct, and (2) to convey to the City or the San Diego Energy Recovery Project, a joint powers agency of the City and County of San Diego (hereinafter in this section referred to as "SANDER"), approximately 45 acres of land lying easterly of Convoy Street and southerly of proposed highway S-52 and comprising a portion of the Naval Air Station, Miramar, San Diego, California.

(b) In consideration for the conveyances authorized by subsection (a), the City shall convey to the United States appropriate interests (as determined by the Secretary) in and to approximately 280 acres of land abutting the boundaries of the Naval Air Station, Miramar, of which approximately 120 acres are adjacent to and easterly of highway I-805 in the vicinity of Miramar Road and 160 acres are adjacent to and northerly of proposed highway S-52, east of Second San Diego Aqueduct.

(c) If the fair market value of the land conveyed by the Secretary under subsection (a) exceeds the fair market value of the lands conveyed by the City under subsection (b), the Secretary may accept such other lands as the Secretary has been previously authorized to acquire by exchange in partial or full consideration for the remaining value. The total value of the consideration to the United States shall be at least equal to the fair market value of the lands conveyed under subsection (a), as determined by the Secretary. The City or SANDER or the City and SANDER shall pay any difference to the United States.

(d) The exact acreages and legal descriptions of any real property to be conveyed or acquired under this section shall be determined by surveys that are satisfactory to the Secretary. The cost of such surveys shall be borne by the City or SANDER or by the City and SANDER.

(e) The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions under this section as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

LAND CONVEYANCE, TUSTIN, CALIFORNIA

SEC. 838. (a)(1) Subject to subsections (b) and (c), the Secretary of the Navy (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to convey to the Irvine Company, a Michigan corporation, or to either or both of the cities of Tustin and Irvine, municipal corporations of the State of California, the interest of the United States described in paragraph (2) in a tract of approximately 15 acres of land located on the Marine Corps Air Station (Helicopter), Tustin, California (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Air Facility"), for the development and extension of a public thoroughfare through the Air Facility from Barranca Parkway on the south of the Air Facility to Irvine Center Drive on the north of the Air Facility.

(2) The interest of the United States that may be conveyed under this subsection is (A) a public right-of-way easement in perpetuity over, across, and under the land described in paragraph (1) for roadway purposes, installation and maintenance of such underground utilities as are customarily located in rights-of-way, and related purposes, or (B) all right, title, and interest of the United States in such land.

(b) The conveyance authorized by subsection (a) may not be made unless—

(1) the Irvine Company conveys to the United States, for a term not to exceed the period of the use of the Air Facility as an active military air station—

(A) interests or rights acceptable to the Secretary within or over certain land commonly known as the "Browning Corridor" and certain other undeveloped land traversed by military aircraft and used by the Air Facility as its Ground Control Approach; or

(B) if the Irvine Company and the Secretary are unable to agree to interests or rights acceptable to the Secretary with respect to the land described in clause (A) that are at least equivalent in value (as determined by the Secretary) to the value of the interest of the United States to be conveyed under subsection (a)—

(i) interests or rights acceptable to the Secretary in a tract of approximately 39 acres of land (or a portion thereof that is acceptable to the Secretary) in the vicinity of the northwest portion of the intersection of Barranca Parkway and Peters Canyon Wash; or

(ii) a combination of interests or rights acceptable to the Secretary within or over the land described in clause (A) and in the land described in subclause (i); and

(2) the Irvine Company or the cities of Tustin and Irvine pay to the United States all costs of the United States related to replacing, in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary, the helicopter heavy-lift training facility displaced by reason of the conveyance under subsection (a) and any other improvement displaced by reason of that conveyance.

(c) The value of the interests or rights in real property conveyed to the United States under subsection (b)(1) must be at least equivalent in value (as determined by the Secretary) to the value of the interest of the United States to be conveyed under subsection (a).

(d) If the conveyance under subsection (b)(1) is to include a conveyance to the United States of interests or rights described in subsection (b)(1)(A), then before the conveyance authorized by subsection (a) is made, the Secretary and the cities of Tustin and Irvine shall enter into written agreements, satisfactory to the Secretary, under which the cities—

(1) agree that in exercising land use planning and zoning authority, the cities shall consider limiting the extent and location of residential development of the lands commonly known as the "Browning Corridor" as appropriate to air operations in that corridor; and

(2) provide a process for the United States to participate in the initial and continued planning of land uses within the Browning Corridor.

(e) The exact acreages and legal descriptions of the interests in land to be conveyed under subsections (a) and (b) shall be determined by surveys that are satisfactory to the Secretary. The Irvine Company or the cities of Tustin and Irvine shall pay all survey and title evidence costs involved in those conveyances.

(f) The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with the transaction authorized by this section as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

LAND CONVEYANCE, ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND

SEC. 839. (a) Subject to subsections (b) and (d), the Secretary of the Navy (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to convey to the Naval Academy Athletic Association, a nonprofit organization located in the State of Maryland (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Association"), all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to approximately 4.3 acres of unimproved land comprising a portion of the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland.

(b) In consideration for the conveyance under subsection (a), the Association shall pay to the United States an amount equal to the appraised fair market value of the property to be conveyed (as determined by the Secretary).

(c) The unimproved land to be conveyed under subsection (a) is land that was conveyed by the Association to the United States in 1965. The exact acreage and legal description of the land to be conveyed shall be determined by surveys that are satisfactory to the Secretary. The cost of any such survey shall be borne by the Association.

(d) Before making the conveyance under subsection (a), the Secretary shall enter into an agreement with the Association which provides that the Association, after such conveyance, will expeditiously develop the property conveyed and will use the property for purposes consistent with and in support of activities of the United States Naval Academy. The terms of the conveyance under subsection (a) shall require that if the Association fails to comply with the terms of such agreement, all right, title, and interest of the Association in and to the land conveyed (including the improvements on the land) shall revert at no cost to the United States, which shall have the right of immediate entry thereon.

(e) The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions under this section as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

FISH HATCHERY, FORT LEWIS, WASHINGTON

SEC. 840. (a)(1) The Secretary of the Army shall issue a permit to the Secretary of the Interior for use of the land described in paragraph (2) as a site for a fish hatchery or shall otherwise make such land available for such use by an entity designated by the Secretary of the Army (with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Interior).

(2) The land referred to in paragraph (1) is a portion of Fort Lewis, Washington, adjacent to Clear Creek, Washington, consisting of 135 acres, more or less, that was identified as suitable as a site for a fish hatchery in a feasibility report concerning the location of a fish hatchery at Fort Lewis issued in May 1982 under contract number 14-16-0001-81086 of the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior, dated July 20, 1981.

(b) Land for which a permit is issued (or which is otherwise made available) under subsection (a) may be used by the party to which the permit is issued (or to which the land is made available) only for a fish hatchery and related purposes. The Secretary of the Army may not incur any cost in connection with such use.

(c) The Secretary of the Army may require such additional terms and conditions with respect to this section as the Secretary considers appropriate.

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5604) to authorize certain construction at military installations for fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

COMPARISON OF HOUSE AND SENATE BILLS

As passed by the House, H.R. 5604 provided $9,237,585,000 in new authorization.

The bill as amended by the Senate provided $9,300,089,000 in new authorization.

SUMMARY OF RESOLUTION OF DIFFERENCES

As a result of the conference between the House and Senate on the differences in H.R. 5604, the conferees agree to a new adjusted authorization for appropriations for military construction and family housing for fiscal year 1985 in the amount of $9,133,908,000. The Department of Defense and the respective military departments submitted a request in the amount of $10,499,802,000.

GENERAL TOPICS

CONFERENCE GUIDELINES

There were several hundred projects or language items in dispute between the House and Senate versions of the military construction authorization bill. In order to facilitate the resolution of these differences the conferees established the following conference guidelines:

1. A target of $9.2 billion in budget authority was determined to represent the amount that the conferees could authorize for appropriations to stay within the ceiling for the defense function being negotiated between the House and Senate in conference on H.R. 5167, the Department of Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1985.

2. Within this target, priority was given to restoring those adequately justified projects that had been included in the budget request but deferred by either the House or the Senate for budgetary reasons.

3. Prior year savings that are expected to result from a good bidding climate in the construction industry were used to reduce the authorization for appropriations.

BURDEN SHARING IN NATO

The conferees continue to be concerned at the apparent unwillingness of the NATO allies to increase their support of U.S. forces deployed in NATO. The issue of burden sharing, as exemplified in the Senate vote on the Nunn amendment to the fiscal year 1985 omnibus defense authorization bill to withdraw U.S. forces from NATO unless the allies keep their commitments to real increases in defense spending, is becoming a major issue with the American people. Unless the allies are more forthcoming in their support for U.S. forces, there will be ever-increasing pressures to bring U.S. forces home.

Of particular concern is the situation in the Federal Republic of Germany where the great majority of U.S. forces are deployed. In the decade of the 1970's the German government sponsored programs, such as the Offset Program and the Garlstedt construction program, which supported U.S. forces. However, since 1980, while the United States has taken on much of the defense of Southwest Asia, the German government has done little to support deployed U.S. forces. The Master Restationing Plan, for instance, which would greatly benefit the war-fighting capability of NATO and return high value, urban real estate to the German economy, has not been financially supported by the German government.

The conferees believe strongly that the allies must be more forthcoming on the burdensharing issue. In the area of facilities for U.S. forces, there is great potential for the allies to undertake programs that would demonstrate their willingness to take on more of the collective defense burden. The Rheinberg facility is symbolic of this issue. There is no reason that the German government could not purchase this facility and make it available to U.S. forces. Their investment in the facility would be repaid quickly by the impact of U.S. forces on the local economy.

However, they have not undertaken this option and the conferees find themselves in a familiar dilemma. The Army budget request includes $13,100,000 to buy this facility; if the project is turned down, U.S. forces suffer. Therefore, the conferees have reluctantly agreed to authorize appropriations for this facility on the condition that the Administration will make one more sincere effort to have the German government buy this facility for use by U.S. forces.

PROPERTY MANAGEMENT

Three projects in the Department of Defense request were associated with the President's Executive Order 12348, dated February 25, 1982, which is aimed at improving the government's management of real property by selling surplus Federal properties and using the proceeds to reduce the national debt. In implementing that order, the Administration has adopted a concomitant policy of requiring one Federal agency to pay for property it desires to acquire from another Federal agency, including land transfers between two military services. In line with this policy, the National Defense University requested $5 million to acquire from the General Services Administration (GSA) 10.5 acres of surplus land adjacent to Ft. McNair in the District of Columbia for a new university headequarters and library. The Air Force requested $1.4 million to buy 50 acres of federally held land for a new housing site near Fort MacArthur, California. The National Security Agency requested $7.5 million to purchase from the General Services Administration on office building in the harbor area of Baltimore, Maryland.

The House denied the three projects because of its concern over the policy of charging one Federal agency for unused properties of another. The Senate amendment authorized the three property acquisitions but without providing a corresponding increase in appropriations for the acquisitions, meaning that the agencies would have to make the purchases "out of their own hides."

The conferees agree that the projects are indeed well justified but do not support this new policy of buying and selling properties between agencies. In the cases of these particular projects, such a practice inflates the budget of the acquiring agencies. In other words, these projects were in addition to what these three agencies normally would have requested. Also, the conferees are concerned that to the best of their knowledge, these are the only three property acquisitions in the entire Federal budget that were required to comply with the new policy, raising serious questions as to whether the policy is being applied government-wide and in an equitable fashion among departments.

If the purpose of the policy is to force Federal agencies to acquire only those real properties they absolutely need, the objective can and should be achieved through good management review within the Executive Branch. The conferees suggest in the strongest terms possible that the Office of Management and Budget reconsider the Department of Defense's request for a waiver of the policy for these three projects.

NAMING OF MEDICAL FACILITIES

The House bill contained legislative provisions that would name wings of the proposed new Brooke Army Medical Center after Representative Abraham Kazen, Jr. and Senator John Tower, both of Texas; and would change the name of the San Diego Naval Hospital to the Bob Wilson Naval Hospital in honor of former Representative Bob Wilson of California.

The conferees concluded that, while recognizing the tremendous contributions of Representative Kazen, Senator Tower, and former Representative Wilson to public service, the precedent of naming facilities for elected officials in the military construction authorization bill would not be good policy. Traditionally, the naming of military facilities has been the prerogative of the secretary of the service involved. The conferees, therefore, direct that a letter be sent to the appropriate service secretaries recognizing the public contributions of Representative Kazen, Senator Tower, and former Representative Wilson and recommending that their names be considered when these medical facilities are named.

DEMOLITION OF WORLD WAR II BUILDINGS

The Senate bill contained a provision (Section 812) which would require the Army to demolish temporary World War II wooden structures when new facilities were accepted into the inventory on a square foot for square foot basis. The House bill did not address this issue.

The conferees agree that retention of World War II temporary wooden buildings creates an unnecessary maintenance burden on the Army and the retention of these buildings should be kept to the absolute minimum. The conferees also recognize that some Army functions must continue to utilize these aging structures because the total replacement of all the World War II facilities now in use is not a practical alternative in the near future considering current budget constraints.

The Army submitted a disposal plan on March 15, 1984, which was based on the disposal of World War II temporary buildings as replacement projects are completed. The Army plan would begin with the calendar year 1986. The conferees agree with the basic principles of the plan, but feel the disposal must start sooner and achieve a greater reduction in the current inventory of these old buildings.

In order to expedite the disposal of World War II temporary buildings, the Army is expected to demolish temporary facilities with an area equal to the area of the replacement facilities for each replacement project provided in the United States by the Army's military construction program and accepted into the inventory after October 1, 1984. In order to identify specific demolition plans in the future, beginning with the fiscal year 1986 program request, the Army is to include a disposal statement on the DD Form 1391 which identifies temporary facilities which will be disposed of for each of the replacement projects requested.

In addition to the demolition of buildings being replaced by new construction, the conferees feel the Army can improve its management and utilization of the buildings now in the inventory and thus make more World War II temporary buildings available for demolition. The Army is to conduct space utilization surveys at the active Army installations in the United States to determine the need for continued use of the World War II buildings. Unnecessary World War II temporary buildings identified by these surveys will be demolished.

The Army is expected to provide a report to the appropriate committees which describes the progress made during the first year of operation under the demolition plan and the initial results of the space utilization surveys. This report should be provided by June 30, 1985. The committees will review the actual and projected demolition results to determine if further legislative action is required.

CONTRACTING OUT CHILD CARE

The Senate amendment authorized $26,000,000 for 19 projects either to construct new child care centers or build additions to existing ones. The House bill authorized the same 19 projects but provided for only $23,400,000, reflecting an across-the-board 10 percent reduction in the request as an effort to hold down the cost of constructing child care centers.

Both the Senate and House expressed in their respective reports on this legislation their concern over the high cost of building and operating centers to care for the children of military personnel.

In its report language, the Senate directed that each service seek to enter into at least one third-party contract for the construction and operation of a child care center on one of its military installations. The House report had no such language.

The conferees agree to authorize the child care centers at the lower total of $23,400,000. They also agree that the services should test the market place to determine whether contracting out child care centers is less costly to the government than present procedures. Therefore, the services are directed to seek contracts with private firms through the competitive bidding process for the construction and operation of one child care center on a base belonging to each of the three military services. While in pursuit of the third-party contracts the services are permitted to execute under existing procedures the child care center projects authorized by the conference. The services should seek their respective third-party contracts for child care centers from those projects programmed for future years. A third-party contract may be entered into only if it is determined cost effective, based on the total cost to the government under the third-party option versus the conventional procedure. Before any action is taken by a service to award a contract for child care under this effort, a report including the cost analysis upon which a decision is based must be furnished to the appropriate committees of Congress at least 30 days before contract award.

The conferees also agree that future child care projects will not be considered by the Armed Services Committees of the House and Senate unless this pilot effort is accomplished.

MINOR CONSTRUCTION

To accomplish the task of meeting its budget target, the conference directed that five projects, each estimated at less than $1,000,000, be authorized and funded under the fiscal year 1985 unspecified minor construction programs of the Navy and Air Force. The projects are:

1. A fire station estimated at $560,000 for the Naval Security Group Activity, Skaggs Island, California.

2. An aircraft parking project estimated at $600,000 and a library at $900,000 at K.I. Sawyer Air Force Base, Michigan.

3. An aircraft parking project estimated at $600,000 and a library at $700,000 at Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan.

MISCELLANEOUS REPORT REQUIREMENTS

In the respective reports on the bill, both the Senate and the House Armed Services Committees included items of "Special Emphasis". The conferees hereby endorse the language on items of "Special Emphasis" found in both reports and, unless some modification to that language is contained in this joint statement of the committee of conference, the positions and requirements contained under items of "Special Emphasis" in both Senate and House reports on the fiscal year 1985 military construction authorization bills are concurred in by the conferees.

TITLE I—ARMY

The House bill approved $3,138,774,000 in authorization for the Department of the Army military construction and family housing programs. The Senate amendment approved authorization in the amount of $3,358,832,000 for such purposes. The conferees agree to authorize appropriations for projects in Title I in the amount of $3,140,884,000 which is $2,110,000 above the House figure and $217,948,000 below the Senate figure. Among the items considered in conference and acted upon by the conferees were the following:

BROOKE ARMY MEDICAL CENTER

The Department of the Army and the Office of Health Affairs of the Department of Defense have been in disagreement for several years as to whether or not to proceed with a new hospital at the site of the current Brooke Army Medical Center at Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio, Texas. The size of a replacement facility has also been an issue.

The House bill contained language to require the Army to proceed with a 695-bed replacement hospital. The provision further specified that separate wings be named after Representative Abraham Kazen, Jr. and Senator John Tower.

The Senate amendment had no comparable provision.

Recognizing that the Department of the Army has recently been directed by the Department of Defense Office of Health Affairs to design a replacement facility with the capacity for 450 beds, the conferees agree to modified language requiring the Secretary of the Army to enter into a contract for the design of a replacement facility with the capacity for not less than 450 beds. The design is to be accomplished in a manner that will accommodate future expansion in the event it becomes necessary as the result of increased peacetime needs or to meet mobilization requirements. The conferees further direct that Brooke Army Medical Center remain a regional teaching hospital.

The conferees agree to delete the provision to name wings of the hospital for elected officials because of concerns regarding the precedent of naming facilities in the annual military construction authorization bill. This matter is discussed more fully under the "General Topics" portion of the report.

The conferees endorse the concept of a "Blue Ribbon Panel" of health experts from outside the Department of Defense (DoD) which is required to be established by Senate Report No. 98-500, and believe such a panel can provide constructive comment on DoD procedures for sizing medical facilities.

The conferees expect the future sizing of Brooke Army Medical Center to be reviewed by the special "Blue Ribbon Panel" on hospitals to further insure the appropriate size for this important facility.

However, the conferees want to make it clear that the programming and construction of military hospitals should not be delayed to await the results of the deliberations of this panel. The Department of Defense is expected to proceed with the programming of projects already under consideration.

The conferees further expect medical facilities to be included in the fiscal year 1986 budget request with the understanding that costs can be adjusted if the findings of the panel indicate that changes are required.

FORT HOOD, TX—SENIOR OFFICERS' QUARTERS

The House bill contained $3,253,000 in authorization for construction of 20 units of family housing for senior officers at Fort Hood, Texas. The House bill further authorized a one time exemption from title 10, U.S.C., section 2826, which establishes housing space allowances. The Senate amendment contained no comparable provision.

The conferees agree to authorize $1,950,000 for the construction of three units of general officers' quarters and 17 units of colonels' quarters with a one-time waiver of the space limitation provision.

The conferees reluctantly approved the one-time exemption to the existing space criterial statute because of the unique situation at Fort Hood. The senior officers quarters were constructed in the early 1950s based on standards at that time and are inadequate.

The Senate recedes to the House position with the clear understanding that this would be one-time exception because of the situation existing at Fort Hood.

TITLE II—NAVY

The House bill approved $2,314,558,000 in authorization for the Department of the Navy military construction and family housing programs. The Senate amendment approved authorization in the amount of $2,358,381,000 for such purposes. The conferees agree to a new total in Title II of $2,288,803,000 which is $25,755,000 below the House figure and $69,578,000 below the Senate figure.

ADMINISTRATIVE SPACE, WASHINGTON NAVY YARD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The House bill authorized $19,750,000 to renovate and covert Building 111 at the Washington Navy Yard into administrative office space and construct a 680-vehicle parking garage for future occupants of the building and other personnel being relocated to the Navy Yard in association with a fiscal year 1983 office space renovation of Building 210. No authorization was provided in the Senate amendment.

The conferees agree to authorize $16 million for the building conversion and a parking garage appropriately sized to accommodate the personnel scheduled to move into Building 111 and 210. The 350 future occupants of Building 111 are personnel of the Naval Investigative Service now located at the Suitland Federal Center in Suitland, Maryland. The 550 persons scheduled to occupy Building 210 are Military Sealift Command personnel, now located in the Tamol Building in Washington, D.C.

The conferees emphasize the approval of this project does not constitute endorsement of the large Navy master plan to relocate 18,000 personnel to the Washington Navy Yard.

SANTA MARGARITA WATER PROJECT

The Senate amendment approved the Navy's request for $142,000,000 to partly fund a proposed $263,000,000 water reclamation and flood control project associated with the Marine Corps Base at Camp Pendleton, California. The House deferred consideration of the request until the Congress acts on pending legislation to authorize the two-dam project.

The conferees agree to authorize the Navy to spend up to $1,500,000 for design and engineering associated with the project. However, none of the funds may be obligated unless legislation is enacted to carry out the project in accordance with federal reclamation laws.

LAND ACQUISITION, NAVAL AIR STATION, OCEANA, VA

The House bill authorize $7.7 million for the acquisition of land in the high noise and accident potential zones surrounding Naval Air Station, Oceana, Virginia. The Senate amendment contained to authorization for this purpose.

The conferees agree to defer authorization for this project because of budget constraints. Recognizing, however, the importance and urgency of completing the 10-year Air Incompatible Use Zone (AICUZ) program to protect the operational capability of the master jet base at NAS, Oceana the conferees direct the Navy to resubmit this project in the fiscal year 1986 budget request.

TITLE III—AIR FORCE

The House bill approved $2,742,813,000 for military construction and military family housing for the Department of the Air Force. The Senate amendment approved $2,685,031,000. The conferees agree to a new total in the amount of $2,791,063,000, which is $48,250,000 above the House figure and $106,032,000 above the Senate figure.

AIR FORCE MUSEUM

The Air Force requested $5,400,000 as the Federal share of a project to expand the Air Force Museum at Wright Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio. Private funds are being raised to match the proposed Federal contribution. The House approved the request of the Air Force, while the Senate denied the request.

The conferees debated this issue at length. House conferees felt strongly that this was a meritorious project for which there was ample precedent. Senate conferees argued that, in view of the overall constraints on defense spending and the restricted ceiling on military construction in particular, expenditure of funds on this museum project was not warranted. In addition, the Senate conferees argued that unless some limits were placed on museum projects, Federal funding could be sought for museum projects at a great many military installations where such museums already exist.

The Senate conferees reluctantly agree to a compromise that would permit each service (to include the Marine Corps) to designate one museum at one location to be the official service museum. The services could seek appropriated funds, if necessary, on a matching basis, only for the one official service museum. The Congress will consider requests for appropriated funds for official service museums, if such requests can be justified. However, as a rule, the conferees expect the services to make every attempt to fund these official service museums through private, non-Federal sources. The large number of smaller museums found at many military installations around the country will continue to be operated as they are now and Federal funds will not be used for construction, additions or alterations.

Given this compromise, the conferees agree to authorize the $5,400,000 requested for the Air Force Museum at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base. If the Secretary of the Air Force designates this museum as the one official Air Force Museum as indicated above, then the funds, if appropriated, may be obligated, assuming that an equal amount of matching funds is on hand from other sources.

During debate on this issue, the conferees were made aware that the Air Force is conducting a fund-raising campaign to help raise matching funds for this project. Contributions are being solicited from uniformed and civilian employees of the Air Force. According to internal Air Force documents, in some instances extreme pressure is being placed on individuals to contribute a specified "fair share" toward this project. The conferees consider these tactics to raise matching funds to be entirely inappropriate and urges the Secretary of the Air Force to insure that such practices are not permitted.

STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND MILITARY CONSTRUCTION BUDGET

The conferees are displeased with the tactics used by the Strategic Air Command (SAC) to secure approval of unbudgeted projects outside the normal budget process. The Strategic Air Command is the only major command in any of the services that, as a matter of routine, seeks to have projects added at the congressional level. These procedures distort the legislative process and subvert the service's system of priorities. The conferees expect the Secretary of the Air Force to take the necessary action to preclude abuses of the system in the future.

TITLE IV—DEFENSE AGENCIES

The House bill authorized $363,148,000 in new construction for Defense Agencies while the Senate amendment approved $358,245,000. The conferees agree to a new total of $357,075,000, which is $6,073,000 below the House figure and $1,170,000 below the Senate figure.

TITLE V—NATO INFRASTRUCTURE

The House bill authorized $250,000,000 for the NATO Infrastructure program.

The Senate amendment provided authorization in the amount of $131,700,000 for the NATO fund.

Believing that the U.S. dollar will continue to be strong against foreign currencies through fiscal year 1984, the confeees agree to $131,700,000 authorization for the program.

TITLE VI—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

OVERSEAS HOUSING LEASES

In Section 608, the House bill approved the request of the Department of Defense for authority to lease up to 31,000 units of family housing at any one time in foreign countries. The Senate amendment, however, reduced the requested number to 30,000 units, the same as the level authorized for fiscal year 1984.

The conferees agree to authorize 30,000 units. The conferees believe that the requirement for leased housing in foreign countries should be reduced as a result of the new construction of family housing authorized in fiscal year 1985 and prior years.

TITLE VII—GUARD AND RESERVE

The House bill provided a lump sum authorization of $428,292,000 for the Guard and Reserve construction program. The Senate amendment contained authorization in the amount of $407,900,000.

The conferees agree to authorize $424,383,000.

HIGH PRIORITY PROJECTS

In addition to the projects approved in the budget request, authorization is included to construct the following high priority items from the lump-sum authorization:

Army National Guard:
Camp Shelby, MS—Alter/rehab buildings	$8,113
Greensberg, OH—Army aviation support facility	3,770
Holdenville, OK—Armory	900
Army Reserve: Ripley, WV—Alter and expand U.S. Army Reserve Center	1,300
Naval and Marine Corps Reserve: Charlotte, NC—Land acquisition	1,200
Air National Guard:
Stewart Field, NY—Phase IV construction	10,500
Thompson Field, Jackson, MS—Aircraft parking ramp and jet fuel storage and distribution system	7,800

SENATE—Wednesday, August 8, 1984

(Legislative day of Monday, August 6, 1984)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Our Father who art in Heaven, You are involved in the infinitesimal as much as the infinite—the atom as much as the universe. Whether it's a sparrow falling to the ground or an empire dissolving, each is the object of Your unfailing love. Nothing touches our lives personally or nationally which is not of concern to You. Thank You for Your unconditional love.

Father, there is nothing about the Senate, the Nation, and the world, which You do not know. Help the Senate in its work today and tomorrow to accomplish that which is important as You know the situation past, present, and future.

Loving Lord, give the Senators discernment to distinguish what ought to be done from what can wait. Free them from extraneous matters and guide them in essentials today and tomorrow. In Jesus' name. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

THE CHAPLAIN'S PRAYER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I observe that the Chaplain asked the munificence of the Lord on today and tomorrow, but he left out Saturday. The adjournment resolution is going to provide for a Thursday, Friday, or Saturday, and the House, I understand, will adopt a resolution for Friday or Saturday.

So it may be that the Chaplain may wish to amend his remarks, or at least his supplication to the Lord on our behalf, to include the final day of the week. I hope that is not necessary, but I would hate to be here by myself.

Those irreverent remarks are made in good spirit, as the Chaplain knows. He also knows that not with every Chaplain, with every prayer, have I listened. But I am fascinated with the presentations made by this Chaplain, and I thank him once again for his good work.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, today is probably going to be a late day. We have to finish the supplemental appropriations bill. As the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee indicated to me in colloquy on yesterday, he wants to stay as late as possible today, tonight, and throughout the night, even into Thursday morning, if we can make good progress and attempt to finish this bill tonight.

In any event, it seems to me that we must finish this bill tonight or tomorrow, because we still have to go to conference with the House, and that will take some time, and then to act on the conference report, and then await the action of the President with respect to the bill Congress may submit to him for his consideration.

So I urge Senators to consider that the warning of a late evening is not to be taken lightly.

We also have a cloture vote on the budget waiver motion today in relation to the agriculture appropriations bill. I hope we get cloture on that matter. If we do, it will be necessary, under the rule, to finish the Senate's deliberations on the motion itself. However, assuming that the waiver is adopted, it is not the present intention of the leadership to ask the Senate to leave the supplemental appropriations bill and proceed to the agriculture appropriations bill but, rather, to resume consideration of the supplemental, for the reasons I have already indicated about the urgency of that matter.

Then, after we pass the supplemental, if we do—and I think we must—we would return to the consideration of the agriculture appropriations bill while we await action of the conference and of the House of Representatives.

It is my hope that we can finish both those matters this week—the supplemental appropriations bill and the agriculture appropriations bill.

Mr. President, we also have one or two other matters we can do today that may not take very long—the vocational education authorization bill, which will take perhaps only a few moments, and the veterans' health bill. We will try to work those in if we can, but we are talking about 5 or 10 minutes. We are not talking about much time.

If we receive conference reports from the House of Representatives, we will take those up as well.

Today, Mr. President, there are special orders in favor of Senators DOLE, BAKER, and PROXMIRE. I ask unanimous consent that the time allocated to me on special order may be transferred instead to the use and control of the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DENTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have nothing further, and I offer my remaining time, if any, to the distinguished minority leader.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no need for my time.

I yield back my time.

Mr. BAKER. I yield back my time.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to suggest the absence of a quorum, without the time so utilized being charged against the special order of any Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR DOLE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] is recognized for not to exceed 30 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator will allow me to interrupt, if he wishes additional time, I will yield him my time that I yielded back.

Mr. DOLE. No, I think 30 minutes will be more than ample.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that if the distinguished Senator needs additional time, I may be allowed to retrieve the time I yielded back and it be placed under his control.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the distinguished minority leader.

S. 2914—ENTERPRISE ZONES

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator BOSCHWITZ in reintroducing President Reagan's enterprise zone initiative in the same form in which it passed the Senate on H.R. 4170.

The legislation is cosponsored by Senator RUDY BOSCHWITZ, myself, Senators ARLEN SPECTER, JOHN H. CHAFEE, BILL BRADLEY, ALFONSE M. D'AMATO, DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN, JAMES ABDNOR, MARK ANDREWS, LLOYD BENTSEN, JOHN C. DANFORTH, PETE V. DOMENICI, DAVE DURENBERGER, DANIEL J. EVANS, JAKE GARN, SLADE GORTON, ORRIN G. HATCH, PAULA HAWKINS, HOWELL HEFLIN, JOHN HEINZ, GORDON J. HUMPHREY, BOB KASTEN, PAUL LAXALT, MACK MATTINGLY, FRANK H. MURKOWSKI, CHARLES H. PERCY, LARRY PRESSLER, DAN QUAYLE, WILLIAM V. ROTH, JR., WARREN RUDMAN, ALAN K. SIMPSON, STROM THURMOND, JOHN TOWER, PAUL S. TRIBLE, JR., MALCOLM WALLOP, JOHN W. WARNER, and PETE WILSON.

I indicated there is strong bipartisan support for this legislation. It would be my hope that we might act on the legislation yet this week, and if we can work out some agreement on the other side of the aisle, and I know a number of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle are making an effort to get that agreement, then we would hopefully take it up and send it to the House of Representatives. I would be very hopeful that the House of Representatives would then accept all or a portion of this proposal.

The enterprise zone legislation has been reported by the Senate Finance Committee on three occasions and the Senate twice. After it passed the Senate in 1983, the Ways and Means Committee did have hearings. We passed it again this year. We went to conference on H.R. 4170. At the last moment of the conference we were advised by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that they would not accept any enterprise zones despite the strong personal intervention and pleading by President Reagan.

It is a part of the President's economic recovery program. It is one that I hope we might address and not because we are in the election season, but because this initiative has been out here now for about 3 years and we believe that it has broad bipartisan support. In addition, many States, whether they have Democratic Governors, or Republican Governors, have passed State enterprise zone legislation.

We are not suggesting this morning that this is a perfect program. The Senator from Kansas is not yet convinced there is enough juice in this program to really help inner cities, or to do as much good as some might hope for in rural and urban areas. But it is a step in the right direction.

Having recently visited the inner city of Philadelphia with my distinguished colleague, Senator ARLEN SPECTER, who will speak later, I can attest, on a firsthand basis, to the need for some assistance in these areas. It is a tragedy, where people, four, five, six, seven, eight people living in one room, with little to eat, and very little else, and no job, and unemployment rates are as high as 35 percent.

So it would seem to me that we ought to give this program a shot. If those who are not certain it is going to succeed want to sunset it in 3 years and say, "OK, let's try it for 3 years and come back to the Congress," that would be acceptable.

The program authorizes 25 zones a year. If they want to reduce that to 15 or 10 or 20, so many rural and so many urban zones just to try it out, that would be acceptable.

The point the Senator from Kansas is making is we are not trying to foist some new program off on the taxpayers of the United States and have it get out of hand and say, "Well, that wasn't a very good idea and I am sorry the cost has gone up to several billion dollars, but it is too late to turn back."

So, Mr. President, I am very sincere in my efforts to work out some bipartisan agreement on this program. I hope that the Democratic Presidential candidate, Mr. Mondale, would take a look at this program. I think it would be in his interest. With all this fuss about taxes and who is going to do what to taxes, maybe he could focus on enterprise zone legislation for 30 minutes or an hour and lend his support. That would be very helpful.

So I urge the Presidential candidate and also the Vice Presidential candidate on the Democratic ticket, GERALDINE FERRARO, to focus on this legislation. It would be a great help to the city of New York. There is a big demand in the city of Minneapolis, MN. There is widespread interest in the program. So I call upon the leaders of the Democratic Party as of this moment to lend their support in what can become very effective legislation.

As I said, if it proves not to be effective, we are willing to sunset it. We are willing to do most anything to give it a chance.

After all, even in the best of times, there are some areas that economic prosperity seems to bypass. We want to see equal economic opportunity for every city, town, State, and locality in the Nation. Enterprise zones can be a vital part of the fight to reach that goal, as the States are already demonstrating. There is no excuse for holding up the President's enterprise zone legislation any longer, because this is an approach to economic revitalization that we very much need to try at the Federal level.

HISTORY OF EFFORTS

Mr. President, the Reagan administration first proposed enterprise zone legislation in March 1982. As I have mentioned, the Senate Finance Committee, which I chair, has approved the legislation on three occasions, and it has passed the Senate twice. On each occasion the House of Representatives has refused to consider the bill.

We thought we had a good chance for getting enterprise zones under way in the Deficit Reduction Act the President signed last month. Unfortunately, after a number of conflicting signals from the House side, Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI of the Ways and Means Committee informed us that it was "no go" on enterprise zones. I think that was not an acceptable response, and I intend to move this bill through the Senate again at the earliest opportunity this week if possible. Even if we acted today, zones would not begin operating until next year. Further delay is hard to excuse, when we have already been waiting more than 2 years.

STATE AND LOCAL EXPERIENCE

States and localities are making a success of enterprise zones by using their own resources and ingenuity, and that is the kind of innovative leadership that enterprise zones are all about. But they very much need a push from the Federal Government as well, and I intend to do whatever I can to see that Federal enterprise zone legislation is put on the books this year. The time is right for a new approach to the problem of revitalizing distressed areas.

I could go on and on, but it would seem to me that the question now and the hope that I have is that there is still a possibility—I have just spoken to the majority leader, who indicates his willingness to be of assistance yet this week to see if we cannot work out some agreement with our colleagues on both sides of the aisle to send this matter to the House where I can, hopefully, work with my friend and colleague, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI, and the ranking Republican member of that committee, Congressman BARBER CONABLE, and others who have had a strong interest in this legislation in the House.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief description of the bill.

There being no objection, the description was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ENTERPRISE ZONES

PRESENT LAW

There are no general rules targeting special tax treatment on the basis of geography, although there are limited targeting rules in the case of mortgage subsidy bonds and Puerto Rico and U.S. possessions. Present-law tax incentives such as the targeted jobs credit, investment credit, capital gains exclusion, and tax exemption for interest on industrial development bonds are generally available to taxpayers who satisfy the criteria that pertain to each provision.

PROPOSAL

The proposal is to authorize the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development to designate up to 25 areas per year, for a period of 3 years, as "enterprise zones." These zones would then qualify for certain Federal tax treatment. Areas would be nominated by State and local governments and would have to meet certain criteria of economic distress and population, have a continuous boundary, and receive a commitment from the State and locality to take a course of action designed to remove impediments to economic development in the area.

Once designated, enterprise zones would receive the following Federal tax relief:

Additional investment credit of 3 to 5 percent for personal property and 10 percent for real property for capital investment in the zone.

10 percent credit to employers for increases paid to zone employees over the previous year, at a maximum of 2½ times the employer's FUTA wage base.

Credit to employers for wages paid to disadvantaged zone employees, equal to 50 percent of wages paid to such employees (not counting Federal subsidies for job training). This credit would be available for 7 years and drop 10 percent per year beginning in the fourth year.

5 percent credit to zone employees for income earned in zone employment, maximum $450 per employee.

Capital gains tax would not be imposed on the gain from sale of any interest in a zone business or any property used in the conduct of a zone business.

Restrictions on use of ACRS for IDB-financed property, and the 1987 sunset of the small issue exemption, would not apply with respect to IDB's used to finance zone small business.

In addition, zones would be given preference in establishing Foreign Trade Zones, and Zones could qualify for limited Federal regulatory relief. Federal contributions would last 20 years with a 4-year phaseout.

REVENUE EFFECT

$1.3 billion, FY 1985-1987 (assumes 1-1-85 starting date for tax incentives)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me just highlight what would happen once you designate a certain area an enterprise zone so that as we discuss this maybe everybody in America will know what we are talking about in the first place. The term "enterprise zones" probably does not mean much to anyone.

I would just suggest what would happen. We would authorize the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development to designate up to 25 areas per year, for a period of 3 years, as "enterprise zones." These zones would then qualify for certain special Federal tax treatment. In other words, HUD, in concert with State and local officials, would pick out an area, let us say in Philadelphia, or New York, or Los Angeles; Chicago; Topeka, KS; wherever, and designate a certain area of 20, 30, 60, 100 blocks, whatever, as an enterprise zone. Once these have been nominated by the State and local governments and after they meet certain economic distress and population criteria and receive a commitment from the State, and once they are designated they would receive the following Federal tax relief:

Additional investment credits of 3 to 5 percent for personal property and 10 percent for real property for capital investment in the zone. In other words, if you move inside the zone with your business, you are going to get a more favorable investment tax credit treatment.

The 10-percent credit to employers for increases paid to zone employees over the previous year, to a maximum of 2½ times the employer's FUTA wage base. This is another incentive for the employer to move into the zone and get, in effect, a wage subsidy through a 10-percent credit.

There would also be a credit to employers for wages paid to disadvantaged zone employees, equal to 50 percent of the wages paid to such employees, not counting Federal subsidies for job training. And this credit would be available for up to 7 years and drop 10 percent per year beginning in the fourth year.

There is going to be a 5-percent credit to zone employees for income earned in zone employment. That is another incentive, another, in effect, subsidy to the Tax Code to help those in those areas.

Capital gains tax would not be imposed on the gain from sale of any interest in a zone business or any property used in the conduct of a zoned business.

Restrictions on the use of ACRS for IDB-financed property and the 1987 sunset of the small issue exemption would not apply with respect to IDB's used to finance zone small business.

In addition, zones will be given preference in establishing foreign trade zones, and zones could qualify for limited Federal regulatory relief. Federal contributions would last 20 years with a 4-year phaseout.

The revenue effect for fiscal year 1985 through 1987 is estimated at $1.3 billion, assuming we have an effective date, starting date of January 1, 1985.

So, Mr. President, for all those reasons, I am introducing this bill.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2914

To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for the establishment of enterprise zones, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; AMENDMENT OF 1954 CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Enterprise Zone Act of 1984".

(b) AMENDMENT OF 1954 CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

It is the purpose of this Act to provide for the establishment of enterprise zones in order to stimulate the creation of new jobs, particularly for disadvantaged workers and long-term unemployed individuals, and to promote revitalization of economically distressed areas primarily by providing or encouraging—

(1) tax relief at the Federal, State, and local levels;

(2) regulatory relief at the Federal, State, and local levels; and

(3) improved local services and an increase in the economic stake of enterprise zone residents in their own community and its development, particularly through the increased involvement of private, local, and neighborhood organizations.

TITLE I—DESIGNATION OF ENTERPRISE ZONES

SEC. 101. DESIGNATION OF ZONES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Chapter 80 (relating to general rules) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subchapter:

"Subchapter D—Designation of Enterprise Zones

"Sec. 7891. Designation.

"SEC. 7891. DESIGNATION.

"(a) DESIGNATION OF ZONES.—

"(1) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this title, the term 'enterprise zone' means any area—

"(A) which is nominated by one or more local governments and the State or States in which it is located for designation as an enterprise zone (hereinafter in this section referred to as a 'nominated area'), and

"(B) which the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, after consultation with—

"(i) the Secretaries of Agriculture, Commerce, Labor, and the Treasury; the Director of the Office of Management and Budget; and the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, and

"(ii) in the case of an area on an Indian reservation, the Secretary of the Interior, designates as an enterprise zone.

"(2) LIMITATIONS ON DESIGNATIONS.—

"(A) PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS.—Before designating any area as an enterprise zone and not later than 4 months following the date of the enactment of this section, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall prescribe by regulation, after consultation with the officials described in paragraph (1)(B)—

"(i) the procedures for nominating an area under paragraph (1)(A),

"(ii) the parameters relating to the size and population characteristics of an enterprise zone, and

"(iii) the manner in which nominated areas will be compared based on the criteria specified in subsection (d) and the other factors specified in subsection (f).

"(B) TIME LIMITATIONS.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall designate nominated areas as enterprise zones only during the 36-month period beginning on the later of—

"(i) the first day of the first month following the month in which the effective date of the regulations described in subparagraph (A) occurs, or

"(ii) January 1, 1985.

"(C) NUMBER OF DESIGNATIONS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may not designate—

"(I) more than 75 nominated areas as enterprise zones under this section, and

"(II) more than 25 nominated areas as enterprise zones during the first 12-month period beginning on the date determined under subparagraph (B) and each subsequent 12-month period.

"(ii) MINIMUM DESIGNATION IN RURAL AREAS.—Of the areas designated under clause (i), at least one-third must be areas—

"(I) which are within a local government jurisdiction or jurisdictions with a population of less than 50,000 (as determined under the most recent census data available),

"(II) which are outside of a metropolitan statistical area (within the meaning of section 103A(l)(4)(B)), or

"(III) which are determined by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, after consultation with the Secretary of Commerce, to be rural areas.

"(D) PROCEDURAL RULES.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall not make any designation under paragraph (1) unless—

"(i) the local government and the State in which the nominated area is located have the authority—

"(I) to nominate such area for designation as an enterprise zone,

"(II) to make the State and local commitments under subsection (d), and

"(III) to provide assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development that such commitments will be fulfilled,

"(ii) a nomination therefor is submitted in such a manner and in such form, and contains such information, as the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall by regulation prescribe,

"(iii) the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development determines that any information furnished is reasonably accurate, and

"(iv) the State and local governments certify that no portion of the area nominated is already included in an enterprise zone or in an area otherwise nominated to be an enterprise zone.

"(3) NOMINATION PROCESS FOR INDIAN RESERVATIONS.—In the case of a nominated area on an Indian reservation, the reservation governing body (as determined by the Secretary of the Interior) shall be deemed to be both the State and local governments with respect to such area.

"(4) NOMINATION PROCESS FOR CERTAIN AREAS LOCATED OUTSIDE RESERVATIONS.—An Indian tribal government may nominate an area described in subsection (c)(2)(C)(iii), in conjunction with the local government and the State in which such area is located, for designation as an enterprise zone.

"(b) PERIOD FOR WHICH DESIGNATION IS IN EFFECT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any designation of an area as an enterprise zone shall remain in effect during the period beginning on the date of the designation and ending on the earliest of—

"(A) December 31 of the 24th calendar year following the calendar year in which such date occurs,

"(B) the termination date designated by the State and local governments as provided in the nomination submitted under subsection (a)(2)(D)(ii), or

"(C) the date the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development revokes such designation under paragraph (2).

"(2) REVOCATION OF DESIGNATION.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, after consultation with the officials described in subsection (a)(1)(B), may revoke the designation of an area if the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development determines that the local government or the State in which it is located is not complying substantially with the State and local commitments under subsection (d).

"(3) DESIGNATION SHALL NOT TAKE EFFECT UNLESS INVENTORY OF HISTORIC PROPERTIES.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1)—

"(A) within 60 days after the date of the designation of an area as an enterprise zone (determined without regard to this paragraph), the State or local government of such area shall submit to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development an inventory of historic properties within such area, and

"(B) the date of such designation shall not be earlier than the date on which such inventory is submitted.

"(c) AREA AND ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may make a designation of any nominated area under subsection (a)(1) only if it meets the requirements of paragraphs (2) and (3).

"(2) AREA REQUIREMENTS.—A nominated area meets the requirements of this paragraph if—

"(A) the area is within the jurisdiction of the local government,

"(B) the boundary of the area is continuous, and

"(C) the area—

"(i) has a population, as determined by the most recent census data available, of at least—

"(I) 4,000 if any portion of such area (other than a rural area described in subclause (I) or (III) of subsection (a)(2)(C)(ii)) is located within a metropolitan statistical area (within the meaning of section 103A(1)(4)(B)) with a population of 50,000 or more, or

"(II) 1,000 in any other case,

"(ii) is entirely within an Indian reservation (as determined by the Secretary of the Interior),

"(iii) is—

"(I) nominated by the local government and State government of such area and by an Indian tribal government, and

"(II) located entirely within a radius of 50 miles from any point on the border of the reservation over which such Indian tribal government has jurisdiction, or

"(iv) is located in Alaska—

"(I) within the jurisdiction of an Indian tribal government, or

"(II) within a muncipality at least 50 percent of the resident population of which (as determined by the 1980 census of the United States) consists of Indians, Eskimos, or Aleuts.

"(3) ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS.—For purposes of paragraph (1), a nominated area meets the requirements of this paragraph if the State and local governments in which it is located certify and the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, after such review of supporting data as he deems appropriate, accepts such certification, that—

"(A) the area is one of pervasive poverty, unemployment, and general distress,

"(B) the area is located wholly within the jurisdiction of a local government which is eligible for Federal assistance under section 119 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as in effect on the date of the enactment of this section, and

"(C) one of the following criteria is met—

"(i) the unemployment rate, as determined by the appropriate available data, was at least 1½ times the national unemployment rate for that period, or

"(ii) the poverty rate (as determined by the most recent census data available) for each populous census tract (or where not tracted, the equivalent county division as defined by the Bureau of the Census for the purpose of defining poverty areas) within the area was at least 20 percent for the period to which such data relates, or

"(iii) at least 70 percent of the households living in the area have incomes below 80 percent of the median income of households of the local government (determined in the same manner as under section 119(b)(2) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974), or

"(iv) the population of the area decreased by 20 percent or more between 1970 and 1980 (as determined from the most recent census available).

"(4) SPECIAL AREAS OUTSIDE RESERVATIONS.—For purposes of this section, any area described in paragraph (2)(C)(iii) which is designated by an Indian tribal government shall be treated as meeting the requirements of paragraph (3) if any area within the reservation over which such tribal government has jurisdiction meets the requirements of paragraph (3).

"(5) WAIVER UNDER CERTAIN CIRCUMSTANCES.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may waive the requirements of paragraph (3)(B) for one area in each State if no area in such State otherwise meets the requirements of paragraph (3)(B).

"(d) REQUIRED STATE AND LOCAL COMMITMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—No nominated area shall be designated as an enterprise zone unless the local government and the State in which it is located agree in writing that, during any period during which the area is an enterprise zone, such governments will follow a specified course of action designed to reduce the various burdens borne by employers or employees in such area.

"(2) COURSE OF ACTION.—The course of action under paragraph (1) may be implemented by both such governments and private nongovernmental entities, may be funded from proceeds of any Federal program, and may include, but is not limited to—

"(A) a reduction of tax rates or fees applying within the enterprise zone,

"(B) an increase in the level of efficiency of local services within the enterprise zone, for example, crime prevention,

"(C) actions to reduce, remove, simplify, or streamline governmental requirements applying within the enterprise zone,

"(D) involvement in the program by private entities, organizations, neighborhood associations, and community groups, particularly those within the nominated area, including a commitment from such private entities to provide jobs and job training for, and technical, financial or other assistance to, employers, employees, and residents of the nominated area, and

"(E) mechanisms to increase the equity ownership of residents and employees within the enterprise zone.

"(3) LATER MODIFICATION OF A COURSE OF ACTION.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may by regulation prescribe procedures for modifying a course of action under paragraph (1) following designation.

"(e) SPECIAL AREAS OUTSIDE RESERVATIONS.—A nominated area described in subsection (c)(2)(C)(iii) may be designated an enterprise zone only if the Secretary determines that a substantial portion of the benefits of such designation will accrue to the members of the Indian tribe that nominated such area.

"(f) PRIORITY OF DESIGNATION.—In choosing nominated areas for designation, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall give special preference to the areas with respect to which the strongest and highest quality contributions described in subsection (d)(2) have been promised as part of the course of action, taking into consideration the fiscal ability of the nominating State and local governments to provide tax relief. The Secretary shall also give preference to—

"(1) the nominated areas with respect to which the nominating State and local governments have provided the most effective and enforceable guarantees that the proposed course of action under subsection (d) will actually be carried out during the period of the enterprise zone designation,

"(2) the nominated areas with high levels of poverty, unemployment, and general distress, particularly the areas—

"(A) which are near areas with concentrations of disadvantaged workers or long-term unemployed individuals, and

"(B) with respect to which there is a strong likelihood that residents of the area described in subparagraph (A) will receive jobs if the area is designated as an enterprise zone,

"(3) the nominated areas the size and location of which—

"(A) will primarily stimulate new economic activity, and

"(B) minimize unnecessary tax losses to the Federal Government,

"(4) the nominated areas with respect to which private entities have made the most substantial commitments in additional resources and contributions, including the creation of new or expanded business activities, and

"(5) the nominated areas which best exhibit such other factors determined by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development as are—

"(A) consistent with the intent of the enterprise zone program, and

"(B) important to minimizing the unnecessary loss of tax revenues to the Federal Government.

"(g) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this title—

"(1) GOVERNMENTS.—If more than one government seeks to nominate an area as an enterprise zone, any reference to, or requirement of, this section shall apply to all such governments.

"(2) STATE.—The term 'State' shall also include Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Northern Mariana Islands, and any other possession of the United States.

"(3) LOCAL GOVERNMENT.—The term 'local government' means—

"(A) any county, city, town, township, parish, village, or other general purpose political subdivision of a State,

"(B) any combination of political subdivisions described in subparagraph (A) recognized by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and

"(C) the District of Columbia.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of subchapters for chapter 80 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Subchapter D—Designation of Enterprise Zones"

SEC. 102. EVALUATION AND REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

Not later than the close of the fourth calendar year after the calendar year in which the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development first designates areas as enterprise zones under section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, and at the close of each fourth calendar year thereafter, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall prepare and submit to the Congress a report on the effects of such designation in accomplishing the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 103. INTERACTION WITH OTHER FEDERAL PROGRAMS.

(a) TAX REDUCTIONS.—Any reduction of taxes under any required program of State and local commitment under section 7891(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall be disregarded in determining the eligibility of a State or local government for, or the amount or extent of, any assistance or benefits under any law of the United States.

(b) COORDINATION WITH RELOCATION ASSISTANCE.—The designation of an enterprise zone under section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall not—

(1) constitute approval of a Federal or federally assisted program or project (within the meaning of the Uniform Relocation Assistance and Real Property Acquisition Policies Act of 1970 (42 U.S.C. 4601)), or

(2) entitle any person displaced from real property located in such zone to any rights or any benefits under such Act.

(c) COORDINATION WITH ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY.—Designation of an enterprise zone under section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall not constitute a Federal action for purposes of applying the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 4341) or other provisions of Federal law relating to the protection of the environment.

TITLE II—FEDERAL INCOME TAX INCENTIVES

Subtitle A—Credits for Employers and Employees

SEC. 201. CREDIT FOR ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYERS.

(a) CREDIT FOR INCREASED ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYMENT AND EMPLOYMENT OF DISADVANTAGED WORKERS.—Subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to business related credits) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 42. CREDIT FOR ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYMENT.

"(a) IN GENERAL.— For purposes of section 38, the amount of the enterprise zone credit determined under this section for any taxable year shall be an amount equal to the sum of—

"(1) 10 percent of the qualified increased employment expenditures of the taxpayer for the taxable year, and

"(2) the economically disadvantaged credit amount of the taxpayer for such taxable year.

"(b) QUALIFIED INCREASED EMPLOYMENT EXPENDITURES DEFINED.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified increased employment expenditures' means the excess of—

"(A) the qualified wages paid or incurred by the employer during the taxable year to qualified employees with respect to all enterprise zones, over

"(B) the base period wages of the employer with respect to all such zones.

"(2) LIMITATIONS AS TO QUALIFIED WAGES TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—

"(A) DOLLAR AMOUNT.—The amount of any qualified wages taken into account under paragraph (1) for any taxable year with respect to any qualified employee may not exceed 2.5 times the dollar limitation in effect under section 3306(b)(1) for the calendar year with or within which such taxable year ends.

"(B) APPLICATION WITH ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED CREDIT AMOUNT.—Qualified wages shall not be taken into account under paragraph (1) if such wages are taken into account in determining the economically disadvantaged credit amount under subsection (c).

"(3) BASE PERIOD WAGES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'base period wages' means, with respect to any enterprise zone, the amount of wages paid to employees during the 12-month period preceding the earlier of—

"(i) the date on which the enterprise zone was designated as such under section 7891, or

"(ii) the date on which the enterprise zone was designated as such under any State law enacted after January 1, 1981, which would have been qualified wages paid to qualified employees if such designation had been in effect for such period.

"(B) RULES OF SPECIAL APPLICATION.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)—

"(i) subsection (e)(1) shall be applied by substituting '12-month period' for 'taxable year' each place it appears, and

"(ii) the dollar limitation taken into account under paragraph (2)(A) in computing qualified wages shall be the amount in effect under section 3306(b)(1) for the calendar year with or within which the taxable year for which the amount of the credit under subsection (a) is being computed ends.

"(c) ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED CREDIT AMOUNT.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'economically disadvantaged credit amount' means the sum of the applicable percentage of qualified wages paid to each qualified economically disadvantaged individual.

"(2) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'applicable percentage' means, with respect to any qualified economically disadvantaged individual, the percentage determined in accordance with the following table:

"If the qualified wages are paid for services performed:	The applicable percentage is:
Within 36 months of starting date	50
More than 36 months but less than 49 months after such date	40

"If the qualified wages are paid for services performed:	The applicable percentage is:
More than 48 months but less than 61 months after such date	30
More than 60 months but less than 73 months after such date	20
More than 72 months but less than 85 months after such date	10
More than 84 months after such date	0

"(3) STARTING DATE; BREAKS IN SERVICE.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) STARTING DATE.—The term 'starting date' means the day which the qualified economically disadvantaged individual begins work for the employer within an enterprise zone.

"(B) BREAKS IN SERVICE.—The periods described in the table under paragraph (2) (other than the first such period) shall be extended by any period of time—

"(i) during which the individual is unemployed, and

"(ii) by any period of time before the designation of the area as an enterprise zone under section 7891 during which the individual is employed by the employer while the area is designated as an enterprise zone under State law enacted after January 1, 1981.

"(d) QUALIFIED WAGES DEFINED.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the term 'qualified wages' has the meaning given to the term 'wages' by subsection (b) of section 3306 (determined without regard to any dollar limitation contained in such section).

"(2) REDUCTION FOR CERTAIN FEDERALLY FUNDED PAYMENTS.—For purposes of this section, the wages paid or incurred by an employer for any period shall not include the amount of any federally funded payments the employer receives or is entitled to receive for on-the-job training of such individual for such period.

"(3) SPECIAL RULES FOR AGRICULTURAL AND RAILWAY LABOR.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, rules similar to the rules of section 51(h) shall apply with respect to services described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 51(h)(1).

"(e) QUALIFIED EMPLOYEE DEFINED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified employee' means an individual—

"(A) at least 90 percent of whose services for the employer during the taxable year are directly related to the conduct of the employer's trade or business located in an enterprise zone, and

"(B) who performs at least 50 percent of his services for the employer during the taxable year in an enterprise zone.

"(2) EXCEPTION FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH RESPECT TO WHOM TARGETED JOBS CREDIT IS ALLOWED.—The term 'qualified employee' shall not include an individual any portion of whose wages is taken into account by the employer for the taxable year in computing the amount of the targeted jobs credit under section 51(a).

"(f) QUALIFIED ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUAL.—

"(1) For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified economically disadvantaged individual' means an individual—

"(A) who is a qualified employee,

"(B) who is hired by the employer during the period a designation under section 7891 is in effect for the area in which the services which qualify such individual as a qualified employee are performed, and

"(C) who is certified as—

"(i) an economically disadvantaged individual,

"(ii) an eligible work incentive employee (within the meaning of section 51(d)(9)), or

"(iii) a general assistance recipient (within the meaning of section 51(d)(6)).

"(2) ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUAL.—For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'economically disadvantaged individual' means any individual who is certified by the designated local agency as being a member of a family which had a combined family income (including the cash value of food stamps) during the 6 months preceding the month in which such determination occurs which, on an annual basis, was equal to or less than the sum of—

"(i) the highest amount which would ordinarily be paid to a family of the same size without any income or resources in the form of payments for aid to families with dependent children under the State plan approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act for the State in which such individual resides, plus,

"(ii) the highest cash value of the food stamps to which a family of the same size without any income or resources would be paid aid to families with dependent children under such State plan in the amount determined under clause (i).

Any such determination shall be valid for the 45-day period beginning on the date such determination is made.

"(B) SPECIAL RULE FOR FAMILIES WITH ONLY 1 INDIVIDUAL.—For purposes of clause (i) of subparagraph (A), in the case of a family consisting of only one individual, the 'highest amount which would ordinarily be paid' to such family under the State's plan approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act shall be an amount determined by the designated local agency on the basis of a reasonable relationship to the amounts payable under such plan to families consisting of two or more persons.

"(3) CERTIFICATION.—Certification of an individual as an individual described in paragraph (1)(C) shall be made in the same manner as certification under section 51.

"(g) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) APPLICATION TO CERTAIN ENTITIES, ETC.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, rules similar to the rules of subsections (f) and (i) of section 51, section 52, and section 30(f)(3) shall apply.

"(2) PERIODS OF LESS THAN A YEAR.—If designation of an area as an enterprise zone under section 7891 occurs, expires, or is revoked on a date other than the first or last day of the taxable year of the taxpayer, or in the case of a taxable year of less than 12 months—

"(A) the limitation specified in subsection (b)(2)(A), and the base period wages determined under subsection (b)(3), shall be adjusted on a pro rata basis (based upon the number of days), and

"(B) the reduction specified in subsection (d)(2) and the 90 percent and 50 percent tests set forth in subsection (e)(1) shall be determined by reference to the portion of the taxable year during which the designation of the area as an enterprise zone is in effect.

"(3) SPECIAL RULE IF PERIOD OF ZONE EXTENDS MORE THAN 15 YEARS.—For purposes of applying section 39 to business credit carryovers determined under subsection (a) or section 46(a), if the number of taxable years during the period—

"(A) beginning with the taxable year after the unused credit year, and

"(B) ending with the taxable year in which the designation of the enterprise zone expires under section 7891, exceeds 15, then such number shall be substituted for '15', such number plus 3 shall be substituted for '18', and such number plus 2 shall be substituted for '17' each place they appear in section 39(a).

"(h) PHASEOUT OF CREDIT.—In determining the amount of the credit for a taxable year under subsection (a) with respect to qualified wages paid or incurred for services performed in an enterprise zone—

"(1) the following percentages shall be substituted for '10 percent' in subsection (a)(1):

"(A) 7.5 percent in the earlier of—

"(i) the taxable year which includes the date which is 21 years after the date on which such enterprise zone was designated under section 7891, or

"(ii) the taxable year which includes the date which is 4 years before the date (if any) on which such enterprise zone ceases to be a zone under section 7891(b)(1)(B),

"(B) 5 percent in the next succeeding taxable year,

"(C) 2.5 percent in the second next succeeding taxable year, and

"(D) zero thereafter, and

"(2) the amount determined under subsection (a)(2) shall be reduced by—

"(A) 25 percent in the case of the taxable year described in paragraph (1)(A),

"(B) 50 percent in the next succeeding taxable year,

"(C) 75 percent in the second next succeeding taxable year, and

"(D) 100 percent thereafter.

"(i) EARLY TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT BY EMPLOYER IN CASE OF QUALIFIED ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS, ETC.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, if the employment of any qualified economically disadvantaged individual with respect to whom qualified wages are taken into account under subsection (a) is terminated by the taxpayer at any time during the 270-day period beginning on the date such individual begins work for the employer, the tax under this chapter for the taxable year in which such employment is terminated shall be increased by an amount (determined under such regulations) equal to the credit determined under subsection (a) and allowed under section 38 for such taxable year and all prior taxable years attributable to qualified wages paid or incurred with respect to such employee.

"(2) SUBSECTION NOT TO APPLY IN CERTAIN CASES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to—

"(i) a termination of employment of an employee who voluntarily leaves the employment of the employer,

"(ii) a termination of employment of an individual who, before, the close of the period referred to in paragraph (1), becomes disabled and therefore is unable to perform the services of such employment, unless such disability is removed before the close of such period and the employer fails to offer reemployment to such individual,

"(iii) a termination of employment of an individual, if it is determined under the applicable State unemployment compensation law that the termination was due to the misconduct of such individual, or

"(iv) a termination of employment of an individual due to a substantial reduction in the trade or business operations of the employer.

"(B) CHANGE IN FORM OF BUSINESS, ETC.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the employment relationship between the employer and an employee shall not be treated as terminated—

"(i) by a transaction to which section 381(a) applies, if the employee continues to be employed by the acquiring corporation, or

"(ii) by reason of a mere change in the form of conducting the trade or business of the taxpayer, if the employee continues to be employed in such trade or business and the employer retains a substantial interest in such trade or business.

"(3) SPECIAL RULE.—Any increase in tax under paragraph (1) shall not be treated as tax imposed by this chapter for purposes of determining the amount of any credit allowable under this subpart.".

(b) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—Section 38(b) (defining current year business credit) is amended by striking out "plus" at the end of paragraph (3), by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof ", plus", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) the enterprise zone credit determined under section 42(a).".

(c) NO DEDUCTION ALLOWED.—Section 280C (relating to disallowance of deductions for certain expenses for which credits are allowable is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) RULE FOR ENTERPRISE ZONE CREDITS.—No deduction shall be allowed for that portion of the wages or salaries paid or incurred for the taxable year which is equal to the amount of the credit determined under section 42. This subsection shall be applied under a rule similar to the rule of the last sentence of subsection (a).".

(d) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 42. Credit for enterprise zone employment.".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984.

SEC. 202. CREDIT FOR ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to nonrefundable personal credits) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 26. CREDIT FOR ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYEES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a qualified employee, there is allowed as a credit against the tax imposed on such employee by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to 5 percent of the qualified wages for the taxable year.

"(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) QUALIFIED EMPLOYEE.—The term 'qualified employee' means an individual—

"(A) who is described in section 42(e)(1), and

"(B) who is not an employee of the Federal Government, of any State or local government, or any political subdivision of a State or local government.

"(2) QUALIFIED WAGES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified wages' has the meaning given to 'wages' under subsection (b) of section 3306, except that such wages—

"(i) must be attributable to services performed for an employer with respect to whom the employee is a qualified employee, and

"(ii) may not be taken into account to the extent such wages exceed 1½ times the dollar limitation specified in such subsection.

"(B) EXCEPTION.—The term 'qualified wages' does not include any compensation received from the Federal Government, any State or local government, or any political subdivision of a State or local government.

"(c) PHASEOUT OF CREDIT.—In determining the amount of the credit for any taxable year under subsection (a) with respect to qualified wages paid to qualified employees for services performed in an enterprise zone, the following percentages shall be substituted for '5 percent' in subsection (a):

"(1) 3¾ percent in the taxable year in which the date which is—

"(A) 21 years after the date on which such enterprise zone was designated under section 7891 occurs, or

"(B) if earlier, the date 4 years before the date the zone designation is to expire;

"(2) 2½ percent in the next succeeding taxable year;

"(3) 1¼ percent in the second next succeeding taxable year; and

"(4) zero thereafter.".

(b) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—Subpart C of part III of subchapter A of chapter 61 (relating to information regarding wages paid employees) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 6054. REPORTING OF ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYEE CREDITS.

"Every employer shall furnish to each employee who is a qualified employee of the employer (within the meaning of section 26(b)(1)) a written statement showing the amount of qualified wages (within the meaning of section 26(b)(2)) paid by the employer to such employee. The statement required to be furnished pursuant to this section shall be furnished at such time, shall contain such other information, and shall be in such form as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe. When required by such regulations, a duplicate of any such statement shall be filed with the Secretary.".

(c) PENALTIES.—

(1) Subparagraph (A) of section 6652(a)(1) (relating to failure to file information returns) is amended—

(A) by striking out "or" at the end of clause (v), and

(B) by inserting after clause (vi) the following new clause:

"(vii) section 6054 (relating to reporting of enterprise zone employee credits),".

(2) Section 6674 (relating to fraudulent statement or failure to furnish statement to employee) is amended by striking "or 6053(b)" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof ", 6053(b), or 6054".

(d) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1) The table of sections for subpart C of part III of subchapter A of chapter 61 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 6054. Reporting of enterprise zone employee credits.".

(2) The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 26. Credit for enterprise zone employees.".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984.

Subtitle B—Credits for Investment in Tangible Property in Enterprise Zones

SEC. 211. INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT FOR ENTERPRISE ZONE PROPERTY.

(a) AMOUNT OF CREDIT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 46(a) (relating to amount of investment tax credit) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (2), by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) in the case of enterprise zone property, the enterprise zone percentage.".

(2) ENTERPRISE ZONE PERCENTAGE DEFINED.—Section 46(b) (relating to determination of percentages) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) ENTERPRISE ZONE PERCENTAGE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—

"For purposes of this paragraph—

"In the case of enterprise zone expenditures with respect to:	The enterprise zone percentage is:
Zone personal property (within the meaning of section 48(s)(3))	5
New zone construction property (within the meaning of section 48(s)(4))	10

"(i) For the taxable year described in section 42(h)(1)(A), 3.75 and 7.5.

"(ii) For the next succeeding taxable year, 2.5 and 5.

"(iii) For the second next succeeding taxable year, 1.25 and 2.5.

"(iv) For any subsequent taxable year, zero.

"(C) REGULAR PERCENTAGE NOT TO APPLY TO CERTAIN PROPERTY.—For purposes of this section, the regular percentage shall not apply to any enterprise zone property which, but for section 48(s)(1), would not be section 38 property.".

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 48(o) (defining certain credits) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) ENTERPRISE ZONE CREDIT.—The term 'enterprise zone credit' means that portion of the credit allowable by section 38 which is attributable to the enterprise zone percentage.".

(c) DEFINITIONS AND TRANSITIONAL RULES.—Section 48 (relating to definitions and special rules) is amended by redesignating subsection (s) as subsection (t) and by inserting after subsection (r) the following new subsection:

"(s) ENTERPRISE ZONE PROPERTY.—For purposes of this subpart—

"(1) TREATMENT AS SECTION 38 PROPERTY.—In the case of enterprise zone property—

"(A) such property shall be treated as meeting the requirements of subsection (a), and

"(B) paragraph (3) of subsection (a) shall not apply to such property.

"(2) The term 'enterprise zone property' means property—

"(A) which is—

"(i) zone personal property, or

"(ii) new zone construction property,

"(B) not acquired (directly or indirectly) by the taxpayer from a person who is related to the taxpayer (within the meaning of section 168(e)(4)(D)), and

"(C) acquired and first placed in service by the taxpayer in an enterprise zone during the period the designation as a zone is in effect under section 7891.

"(3) ZONE PERSONAL PROPERTY DEFINED.—The term 'zone personal property' means property which is—

"(A) 3-year property;

"(B) 5-year property;

"(C) 10-year property; and

"(D) 15-year public utility property, which is used by the taxpayer predominantly in the active conduct of a trade or business within an enterprise zone. Property shall not be treated as 'zone personal property' if it is used or located outside the enterprise zone on any regular basis.

"(4) NEW ZONE CONSTRUCTION PROPERTY DEFINED.—The term 'new zone construction property' means 15-year real property, 18-year real property, or low-income housing which is—

"(A) located in an enterprise zone,

"(B) used by the taxpayer predominantly in the active conduct of a trade or business within an enterprise zone, and

"(C) either—

"(i) the construction, reconstruction, or erection of which is completed by the taxpayer during the period the designation as a zone is in effect under section 7891, or

"(ii) acquired during such period if the original use of such property commences with the taxpayer and commences during such period.

In applying section 46(c)(1)(A) in the case of property described in subparagraph (C)(i), there shall be taken into account only that portion of the basis which is properly attributable to construction, reconstruction, or erection during such period.

"(5) REAL ESTATE RENTAL.—For purposes of this section, ownership of residential, commercial, or industrial real property within an enterprise zone for rental purposes shall be treated as the active conduct of a trade or business in an enterprise zone.

"(6) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection, the terms '3-year property,' '5-year property,' '10-year property,' '15-year real property,', '18-year real property', '15-year public utility property', and 'low-income housing', have the meanings given such terms by section 168.

"(7) CROSS REFERENCE.—

"For extension of carryover period for enterprise zone credit, see section 42(g)(3).".

(d) RECAPTURE.—Subsection (a) of section 47 (relating to certain dispositions, etc., of section 38 property) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) SPECIAL RULES FOR ENTERPRISE ZONE PROPERTY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If, during any taxable year, property with respect to which the taxpayer claimed an enterprise zone credit—

"(i) is disposed of, or

"(ii) otherwise ceases to be section 38 property with respect to the taxpayer, or

"(iii) is removed from the enterprise zone, converted, or otherwise ceases to be enterprise zone property (other than by the expiration or revocation of the designation as an enterprise zone), the tax under this chapter for such taxable year shall be increased by the amount described in subparagraph (B).

"(B) AMOUNT OF INCREASE.—The increase in tax under subparagraph (A) shall equal the aggregate decrease in the credits allowed under section 38 and determined under section 46(a)(4) (or any corresponding provision of prior law) for all preceding taxable years which would have resulted solely from reducing the expenditures taken into account with respect to the property by an amount which bears the same ratio to such expenditures as—

"(i) the number of taxable years that the property was held by the taxpayer, bears to

"(ii) the applicable recovery period for earnings and profits under section 312(k).".

(e) BASIS ADJUSTMENT TO REFLECT INVESTMENT CREDIT.—Paragraph (3) of section 48(q) (relating to basis adjustment to section 38 property) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR QUALIFIED REHABILITATION AND ENTERPRISE ZONE EXPENDITURES.—In the case of any credit determined under section 46(a) for—

"(A) any qualified rehabilitation expenditure in connection with a qualified rehabilitated building other than a certified historic structure, or

"(B) any expenditure in connection with new zone construction property (within the meaning of section 48(s)(4)), paragraphs (1) and (2) shall be applied without regard to the phrase '50 percent of'.".

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to periods after December 31, 1984, under rules similar to the rules of section 48(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Subtitle C—Repeal of Capital Gains Tax

SEC. 221. CORPORATIONS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Paragraph (2) of section 1201 (relating to alternative tax for corporations) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) a tax of 28 percent of the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the net capital gain, over

"(B) the qualified enterprise zone net capital gain of the taxpayer for the taxable year.".

(b) DEFINITION OF QUALIFIED ENTERPRISE ZONE NET CAPITAL GAIN.—Section 1201 is amended by redesignating subsections (b) and (c) as subsections (c) and (d) and by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) QUALIFIED ENTERPRISE ZONE NET CAPITAL GAIN.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified enterprise zone net capital gain' means the amount of net capital gain for any taxable year determined by taking into account only gains and losses which are—

"(A) attributable to the sale or exchange of qualified enterprise zone property, and

"(B) properly allocable only to periods during which such property is qualified enterprise zone property.

"(2) SPECIAL RULES RELATING TO INTERESTS IN BUSINESSES.—

"(A) CERTAIN GAINS AND LOSSES NOT TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—In determining the amount of qualified enterprise zone net capital gain for any taxable year under paragraph (1), there shall not be taken into account any gains or losses attributable to the sale or exchange of an interest in a qualified enterprise zone business to the extent such gain or losses are attributable to—

"(i) any property contributed to such qualified enterprise zone business during the 12-month period before such sale or exchange,

"(ii) any interest in any business which is not a qualified enterprise zone business, or

"(iii) any intangible property to the extent not properly attributable to the active conduct of a trade or business within an enterprise zone.

"(B) PERIODS FOR WHICH GAINS AND LOSSES ALLOCABLE.—For purposes of determining under paragraph (1)(B) gains or losses properly allocable to an interest in a qualified enterprise zone business, there shall only be taken into account the taxable years of such business during which it meets the requirements of paragraph (3)(B).

"(3) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) The term 'qualified enterprise zone property' means—

"(i) any tangible personal property used by the taxpayer predominantly in an enterprise zone in the active conduct of a trade or business within such enterprise zone,

"(ii) any real property located in an enterprise zone used by the taxpayer predominantly in the active conduct of a trade or business within such enterprise zone, and

"(iii) any interest in a corporation, partnership, or other entity if, for the two most recent taxable years of such entity—

"(I) ending before the date of disposition of such interest, and

"(II) beginning after the date of the designation as an enterprise zone of the area in which such entity is engaged in the active conduct of a trade or business, such entity was a qualified enterprise zone business.

"(B) QUALIFIED ENTERPRISE ZONE BUSINESS.—The term 'qualified enterprise zone business' means, with respect to any taxable year, any person—

"(i) actively engaged in the conduct of a trade or business within an enterprise zone during such taxable year,

"(ii) with respect to which at least 80 percent of such person's gross receipts for such taxable year are attributable to the active conduct of a trade or business within an enterprise zone, and

"(iii) substantially all of the tangible assets of which are located within an enterprise zone during such taxable year.

"(C) REAL ESTATE RENTAL.—For purposes of this subsection, ownership of residential, commercial, or industrial real property within an enterprise zone for rental shall be treated as the active conduct of a trade or business in an enterprise zone.

"(D) PROPERTY REMAINS QUALIFIED AFTER ZONE DESIGNATION CEASES TO APPLY.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The treatment of property as qualified enterprise zone property under subparagraph (A) shall not terminate when the designation of the enterprise zone in which the property is located or used expires or is revoked.

"(ii) EXCEPTIONS.—Clause (i) shall not apply after the first sale or exchange of property occurring after the designation expires or is revoked.".

SEC. 222. TAXPAYERS OTHER THAN CORPORATIONS.

Subsection (a) of section 1202 (relating to deduction for capital gains) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) DEDUCTION ALLOWED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If for any taxable year a taxpayer other than a corporation has a net capital gain, there shall be allowed as a deduction from gross income an amount equal to the sum of—

"(A) 100 percent of the lesser of—

"(i) the net capital gain, or

"(ii) the qualified enterprise zone net capital gain (as defined in section 1201(b)), plus

"(B) 60 percent of the excess (if any) of—

"(i) the net capital gain, over

"(ii) the amount of the net capital gain taken into account under subparagraph (A).".

SEC. 223. MINIMUM TAX.

Paragraph (9) of section 57(a) (relating to tax preference for capital gains) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) For purposes of this paragraph, gain attributable to qualified enterprise zone net capital gain (within the meaning of section 1201(b)) shall not be taken into account.".

SEC. 224. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this subtitle shall apply to sales or exchanges after December 31, 1984.

Subtitle D—Rules Relating to Industrial Development Bonds

SEC. 231. INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BONDS.

(a) LIMITATION ON ACCELERATED COST RECOVERY DEDUCTION NOT TO APPLY TO ENTERPRISE ZONE PROPERTY.—Subparagraph (C) of section 168(f)(12) (relating to limitations on property financed with tax-exempt bonds) is amended by inserting "or which is placed in service as enterprise zone property (within the meaning of section 48(s))" after "section 103(b)(4)(A)".

(b) TERMINATION OF SMALL ISSUE EXEMPTION NOT TO APPLY.—Subparagraph (N) of section 103(b)(6) (relating to termination of small issue exemption after December 31, 1986) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(iv) EXCEPTION FOR ENTERPRISE ZONE FACILITIES.—This subparagraph shall not apply to any obligation which is part of an issue substantially all of the proceeds of which are used to finance facilities within an enterprise zone if such facilities are placed in service while the designation as such a zone is in effect under section 7891.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to obligations issued after December 31, 1984, in taxable years ending after such date.

Subtitle E—Sense of the Congress With Respect to Tax Simplification

SEC. 241. TAX SIMPLIFICATION.

It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of the Treasury and his delegates should in every way possible simplify the administration and enforcement of any provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 added to, or amended by, this Act.

TITLE III—REGULATORY FLEXIBILITY

SEC. 301. DEFINITION OF SMALL ENTITIES IN ENTERPRISE ZONES FOR PURPOSES OF ANALYSIS OF REGULATORY FUNCTIONS.

Section 601 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (5); and

(2) striking out paragraph (6) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(6) the term 'small entity' means—

"(A) a small business, small organization, or small governmental jurisdiction within the meaning of paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) of this section, respectively; and

"(B) any qualified enterprise zone business; any governments which designated and approved an area which has been designated as an enterprise zone (within the meaning of section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) to the extent any rule pertains to the carrying out of projects, activities, or undertakings within such zone; and any not-for-profit enterprise carrying out a significant portion of its activities within such a zone; and

"(7) the term 'qualified enterprise zone business' means any person, corporation, or other entity—

"(A) which is engaged in the active conduct of a trade or business within an enterprise zone (within the meaning of section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954); and

"(B) for whom at least 50 percent of its employees are qualified employees (within the meaning of section 42(e) of such Code).".

SEC. 302. WAIVER OR MODIFICATION OF AGENCY RULES IN ENTERPRISE ZONES.

(a) Chapter 6 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by redesignating sections 611 and 612 as sections 612 and 613, respectively, and inserting the following new section immediately after section 610:

"§ 611. Waiver or modification of agency rules in enterprise zones

"(a) Upon the written request of the governments which designated and approved an area which has been designated as an enterprise zone under section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, an agency is authorized, in order to further the job creation, community development, or economic revitalization objectives of the zone, to waive or modify all or part of any rule which it has authority to promulgate, as such rule pertains to the carrying out of projects, activities or undertakings within the zone.

"(b) Nothing in this section shall authorize an agency to waive or modify any rule adopted to carry out a statute or Executive order which prohibits, or the purpose of which is to protect persons against, discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, marital status, national origin, age, or handicap.

"(c) A request under subsection (a) shall specify the rule or rules to be waived or modified and the change proposed, and shall briefly describe why the change would promote the achievement of the job creation, community development, or economic revitalization objectives of the enterprise zone. If a request is made to an agency other than the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the requesting governments shall send a copy of the request to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development at the time the request is made.

"(d) In considering a request, the agency shall weigh the extent to which the proposed change is likely to further job creation, community development, or economic revitalization within the enterprise zone against the effect the change is likely to have on the underlying purposes of applicable statutes in the geographic area which would be affected by the change. The agency shall approve the request whenever it finds, in its discretion, that the public interest which the proposed change would serve in furthering such job creation, community development, or economic revitalization outweighs the public interest which continuation of the rule unchanged would serve in furthering such underlying purposes. The agency shall not approve any request to waive or modify a rule if that waiver or modification would—

"(1) directly violate a statutory requirement (including any requirement of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1060; 29 U.S.C. 201 et seq.)); or

"(2) be likely to present a significant risk to the public health, including environmental health or safety, such as a rule with respect to occupational safety or health, or environmental pollution.

"(e) If a request is disapproved, the agency shall inform the requesting governments in writing of the reasons therefor and shall, to the maximum extent possible, work with such governments to develop an alternative, consistent with the standards contained in subsection (d).

"(f) Agencies shall discharge their responsibilities under this section in an expeditious manner, and shall make a determination on requests not later than 90 days after their receipt.

"(g) A waiver or modification of a rule under subsection (a) shall not be considered to be a rule, rulemaking, or regulation under chapter 5 of this title. To facilitate reaching its decision on any requested waiver or modification, the agency may seek the views of interested parties and, if the views are to be sought, determine how they should be obtained and to what extent, if any, they should be taken into account in considering the request. The agency shall publish a notice in the Federal Register stating any waiver or modification of a rule under this section.

"(h) In the event that an agency proposes to amend a rule for which a waiver or modification under this section is in effect, the agency shall not change the waiver or modification to impose additional requirements unless it determines, consistent with standards contained in subsection (d), that such action is necessary.

"(i) No waiver or modification of a rule under this section shall remain in effect for a longer period than the period for which the enterprise zone designation remains in effect for the area in which the waiver or modification applies.

"(j) For purposes of this section, the term 'rule' means (1) any rule as defined in section 551(4) of this title or (2) any rulemaking conducted on the record after opportunity for an agency hearing pursuant to sections 556 and 557 of this title.".

(b) The table of sections for such chapter is amended by redesignating the items relating to sections 611 and 612 as sections 612 and 613, respectively, and inserting the following new item immediately after the item relating to section 610:

"Sec. 611. Waiver or modification of agency rules in enterprise zones.".

(c) Section 601(2) of such title is amended by inserting "(except for purposes of section 611)" immediately before "means.".

(d) Section 613 of such title, as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section, is amended by—

(1) inserting "(except section 611)" immediately after "chapter" in subsection (a); and

(2) inserting "as defined in section 601(2)" immediately before the period at the end of the first sentence of subsection (b).

SEC. 303. COORDINATION OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS IN ENTERPRISE ZONES.

Section 3 of the Department of Housing and Urban Development Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall—

"(1) promote the coordination of all programs under his jurisdiction which are carried on within an enterprise zone designated pursuant to section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

"(2) expedite, to the greatest extent possible, the consideration of applications for programs referred to in paragraph (1) through the consolidation or forms or otherwise; and

"(3) provide, whenever possible, for the consolidation of periodic reports required under programs referred to in paragraph (1) into one summary report submitted at such intervals as may be designated by the Secretary.".

TITLE IV—ESTABLISHMENT OF FOREIGN-TRADE ZONES IN ENTERPRISE ZONES

SEC. 401. FOREIGN-TRADE ZONE PREFERENCES.

(a) PREFERENCE IN ESTABLISHMENT OF FOREIGN-TRADE ZONES IN REVITALIZATION AREAS.—In processing applications for the establishment of foreign-trade zones pursuant to an Act entitled "To provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes", approved June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 998), the Foreign-Trade Zone Board shall consider on a priority basis and expedite, to the maximum extent possible, the processing of any application involving the establishment of a foreign-trade zone within an enterprize zone designated pursuant to section 7891 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(b) APPLICATION PROCEDURE.—In processing applications for the establishment of ports of entry pursuant to an Act entitled "An Act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and fifteen, and for other purposes", approved August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. 609), the Secretary of the Treasury shall consider on a priority basis and expedite, to the maximum extent possible, the processing of any application involving the establishment of a port of entry which is necessary to permit the establishment of a foreign-trade zone within an enterprise zone (as so designated).

(c) APPLICATION EVALUATION.—In evaluating applications for the establishment of foreign-trade zones and ports of entry in connection with enterprise zones (as so designated), the Foreign-Trade Zone Board and the Secretary of Treasury shall approve the applications to the maximum extent practicable, consistent with their respective statutory responsibilities.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, today we are reintroducing the Enterprise Zone Employment and Development Act, legislation which I believe responsibly deals with the problems of joblessness by enlisting the help of the private sector. The enterprise zone concept has gathered impressive bipartisan support over the past 4 years and has the support of many State and local governments. Indeed, the legislation has some 260 cosponsors in the House of Representatives.

I first introduced the enterprise zone concept to the Senate over 4 years ago. Since that time, the legislation has been refined with the help of business groups, local governments, and urban groups. In 1981 enterprise zone legislation was first discussed on the Senate floor and, as a result, some important modifications were made. In 1982, it was reported by the Finance Committee, but unfortunately there was not time to act on it in the lameduck session. The full Senate first passed enterprise zone legislation the following year, in 1983. And, most recently the Senate passed enterprise zones earlier this year as part of the Deficit Reduction Act.

Unfortunately, as happened in 1983, the conferees did not include enterprise zones in the conference report on the Deficit Reduction Act. But, unlike 1983, the conferees came very close to accepting a compromise on enterprise zones. During the conference, it was a question of whether to talk about enterprise zones at all. Now, by focusing attention on enterprise zones alone, we can take clear and concentrated action on this important initiative.

Even though we are now experiencing double digit unemployment, there is a real need for enterprise zones. As the economy turns around, more and more Americans are going back to work, but the need for enterprise zones will be increasingly evident in areas of structural unemployment—where jobs have been lost to changing industries more than to a sagging economy. Areas such as Minnesota's Iron Range, where the jobless have been stung by the ravages of structural unemployment, can use the boost the enterprise zones can provide.

In simple terms the supporters of enterprise zones view the problem of joblessness like this: There are no jobs because there are not enough opportunities in the areas that need them the most. Enterprise zones would encourage job creation through a Federal/local package of tax breaks and other incentives for businesses which locate in a designated zone.

There are many problems faced by businesses wishing to locate in enterprise zones that cannot be corrected by the Federal Government alone. Such problems as crime, weak infrastructure support, and city taxes remain barriers to business development. These serve as a double whammy when you consider that a prospective business already faces the usual problems of tax burdens, startup capital and technical expertise.

Enterprise zones address these problems by combining incentives provided by the Federal Government with those of local governments. That an area shows signs of high unemployment, poverty, or outmigration is not enough to qualify it for an enterprise zone designation. The local government must also assemble a package of tax and other incentives that meet the particular problems of the area. Moreover, the award of an enterprise zone will be granted on a competitive basis to test local commitment. That could include any number of things, such as improved infrastructure support, reduction of local taxes, relaxation of local regulations, managerial assistance and technical help.

These local contributions are then matched by Federal tax breaks, such as the elimination of capital gains taxes for business investment in the area, significant reductions in income taxes, and tax credits for wages paid to previously unemployed workers. This local/Federal package addresses the problems that all small businesses face as well as the particular problems of a business located in a depressed area.

Enterprise zone legislation should be aimed primarily at small business because it creates the vast majority of new jobs. In the past 10 years nearly 20 percent of new private-sector employment has come from businesses with 20 or fewer employees. Eighty percent of new jobs have been created by businesses with less than 100 employees.

My faith in business goes much deeper than statistics. My experience as a businessman has shown me that small businesses offer an increased opportunity for rapid advancement when compared with larger corporations. People at the lower end of the wage scale are not so easily lost in the shuffle; the small businessperson is far more involved with the lives of his or her employees. A worker's qualities, problems, family, and ambitions do not easily escape the boss' notice. Getting in on the ground floor of a small business is a very effective method of advancement, but most important, it stands in stark contrast from welfare.

But, to get in on the ground floor, a small business must have a foundation. This legislation provides small businesses with many advantages which will enable them to build a solid foundation. Some of these advantages are: tax credits for zone employees; tax credits for zone employers; investment tax credits for zone property; elimination of capital gains taxation; industrial development bonds; and tax simplification and regulatory flexibility. These and other incentives contained in the legislation, will give small businesses good reasons to locate in an enterprise zone.

Our Nation long ago accepted the responsibility of taking care of those who cannot take care of themselves. We have spent a lot of money doing just that. Unfortunately, we have not been as wise as we have been generous in meeting this responsibility. Today, our social welfare obligations cost the Government nearly half of the Federal budget. One economist estimates that if we would just give to the poor all the money we spend on programs for them, we would raise all Americans above the poverty level.

Clearly we need a new approach in assisting our poor and jobless. The current antipoverty programs do provide crucial services but they do not, on their own, appear to achieve any lasting good. They are for the most part stopgap policies that address the symptoms but not the causes of poverty. They have failed to provide any meaningful opportunity for advancement.

In fact, the present system has trapped many of our poor in a self-perpetuating cycle of poverty. Instead of offering the poor a chance to pull themselves and their families out of poverty, the present programs unwittingly trap recipients in a self-perpetuating quagmire of poverty from which even the most enterprising have trouble emerging.

The answer is not spending more Government money. The answer is jobs—jobs in the private sector. Although that remedy is easily prescribed, the method toward that cure is not. One means is through enterprise zones.

I do not contend that enacting the enterprise zone legislation alone will solve our present unemployment problems. But it can and should be part of the solution.

Mr. President, I believe it is important to take note of the fact that State and local governments have already exhibited remarkable enthusiasm for the enterprise zone idea. Twenty-four States have already enacted enterprise zone legislation, or established an administrative enterprise zone program. State and local governments have already displayed considerable creativity in their freestanding enterprise zone efforts. Indeed, my State of Minnesota has designated 12 State enterprise zones.

Under Minnesota's State law, enterprise zones are designated in areas of economic hardship based on the concentration of substandard housing and poverty levels, the decline in market value of commercial and industrial property, median State per capita nonfarm income, and areas of the highest unemployment. Minnesota's enterprise zones must have a continuous boundary, are limited to 400 acres, and must meet population requirements. Enterprise zone incentives are available for 7 years, but no business may receive benefits for more than 5 years. While the total dollar value of State incentives are subject to limitations, localities have discretion to use a mix of incentives. One of the major State incentives is the elimination of State sales tax on construction materials or equipment purchased for use in the zone.

Federal enterprise zone legislation encourages these efforts. It not only provides an important and necessary complement to State and local activities; it acts as a synergistic ingredient in that mix of activities essential to making enterprise zones successful. This is an excellent opportunity to demonstrate both intergovernmental and public/private partnerships in action. This is a fresh, promising approach to dealing with problems of structural unemployment and revitalizing distressed areas in our Nation's cities and rural towns.

Mr. President, now is the time for action on enterprise zones. We need to put aside politics and personalities and work together for enterprise zones in a concentrated, bipartisan manner. I am very pleased that the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator DOLE, is joining me in actively and aggressively pursuing this important initiative. His legislative skill and resourcefulness are great assets in this endeavor. I urge my colleagues to join us in this effort.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, what are we waiting for? With all the talk of a new industrial policy and eliminating the underclass, Congress has had before it legislation designed to permanently change many of the poorest areas of our country. This legislation, S. 863, would allow for the creation of enterprise zones throughout our Nation. As a cosponsor of S. 863, I am pleased that it has passed the Senate twice in the 98th Congress. However, I am incredulous as to why House Democrats consistently refuse to accept this or any similar compromise package that truly would help our Nation's inner cities.

Mr. President, I rise today as an original cosponsor of new legislation to establish enterprise zones. I praise Chairman DOLE for his leadership and for continually fighting to enact this vital legislation. The bill introduced today is identical to the enterprise zone legislation that passed the Senate Finance Committee as part of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, H.R. 4170. Despite the President's urgings, and 259 cosponsorships in the House, the Democratic leadership in the House refused to entertain enterprise zone legislation in H.R. 4170.

This is especially frustrating since enterprise zones have a proven track record. Today, 24 States have decided not to wait for the Federal Government and have enacted their own enterprise zone legislation. State legislators have been surprised by the effectiveness of enterprise zones in creating both new businesses and new jobs.

These programs have been so effective that both the Wall Street Journal and the New York Times sing the praises of enterprise zones. If the editorial boards of these two papers can agree, there is no reason why the House and the Senate cannot reach an accommodation on enterprise zones. This is particularly important because the Federal tax burden is so much larger than State and local tax burdens. Without Federal enterprise zone legislation, State actions will not reach their highest potential.

The bill introduced today would establish 50 urban and 25 rural enterprise zones. A total of 25 would be designated each year for 3 years by the Secretaries of HUD and Agriculture. To qualify, an area would have to have chronic unemployment and poverty, as well as population decline. In short, only the most distressed regions could qualify as enterprise zones.

Once designated an enterprise zone, an area would receive special State and local tax breaks in addition to specific Federal tax subsidies. The Federal tax incentives would include industrial development bond financing, special investment tax credits for newly acquired personal property and new construction in an enterprise zone, jobs tax credits, and no capital gains tax on the profits received from investments in businesses within enterprise zones. These incentives would result in the hiring of the chronic unemployed and the startup of businesses within areas of urban and rural blight.

New York State has numerous areas that would benefit from enterprise zone legislation. These include sections of New York City, Long Island, and upstate New York. Every State in the Union would benefit from enterprise zone legislation.

Some claim that enterprise zones would cost too much in lost revenue given our high budget deficit. However, I caution Members about believing the revenue loss numbers now associated with enterprise zone legislation. The Congressional Budget Office and Treasury Department have not counted the secondary impact of tax incentives. That is, this bill would create new jobs, thus leading to higher tax revenues. This revenue impact is not calculated.

Mr. President, I urge all Members of the Senate to support this enterprise zone legislation and work for its enactment. I really think it is important for us to act on this legislation again this session.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I rise today to voice my support for and cosponsorship of the Enterprise Zone Act of 1984.

The purpose of the Enterprise Zone Act of 1984 is to provide for the establishment of urban and rural enterprise zones in order to stimulate the creation of new jobs, particularly for disadvantaged workers and long-term unemployed individuals. The bill will promote the revitalization of economically distressed areas by providing or encouraging tax and regulatory relief at the Fedeal, State, and local levels and improved local services.

Mr. President, urban decay is not a new problem. The vast array of Government spending programs to revitalize inner core areas reflect public concern over the crisis in blighted areas in American cities. Federal programs also exist to reverse the lack of economic activity in rural America. Despite the billions of dollars appropriated for combating crime, poverty, and homelessness in these distressed areas, however, the problems remain unsolved.

Recognizing the failure of past public efforts to combat urban and rural decay, many now believe, including the administration and the sponsors of the Enterprise Zone Act of 1984, that the key to revitalizing these areas lies in improving the opportunity for commercial expansion in distressed areas. Such is the goal of the Enterprise Zone Act of 1984 by offering both tax incentives and regulatory relief within designated zones plagued by depressed economic activity.

Mr. President, enterprise zone legislation has passed the Senate twice during the current Congress, only to be derailed by the House of Representatives. I hope the House will stop playing the partisan, election year political game and will join the Senate in fighting the problem of the deteriorating plight of many neighborhoods and rural areas across the country by enacting the Enterprise Zone Act of 1984.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I strongly support the reintroduction of the Enterprise Zone Act of 1984 by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ].

The purpose of this bill is to provide for the establishment of urban and rural enterprise zones in order to stimulate the creation of new jobs, particularly for disadvantaged workers and long-term unemployed individuals. This legislation will promote the revitalization of economically distressed areas by providing or encouraging tax and regulatory relief at the Federal, State, and local levels and improved local services.

This legislation has now passed the Senate on two occasions, on the dividend and interest withholding bill in 1983 and on the Deficit Reduction Act earlier this year. This legislation has over 40 cosponsors in the Senate and over 260 cosponsors in the House of Representatives.

I have made a number of trips throughout the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to areas which would qualify for enterprise zone designations, including the Huntington Park West section of Philadelphia, which I visited last year, American Street Corridor in Philadelphia which Senator DOLE and I visited last month, Erie, Pittsburgh, Johnstown, Altoona, Wilkes-Barre, and Scranton. The problems of chronic unemployment, poverty, and disinvestment, population loss and physical deterioration are common throughout these enterprise zone areas.

There is tremendous need for stimulating our economy in depressed areas and for providing new job opportunities. Nowhere is this need more acute than in our central cities and poor rural areas.

The enterprise zone concept has been supported almost unanimously wherever it has been considered. However, this legislation has languished for more than a year, despite the endorsement of the Reagan administration and numerous House and Senate Members. Based on conversations I have had with Senator DOLE, I am optimistic that this legislation, if passed as a separate bill, can be shepherded through the House of Representatives.

Specifically, the legislation introduced today will allow State and local governments to nominate areas for enterprise zones, which will be approved by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development after consultation with a number of other parties. Up to 25 zones may be designated during each 12-month period for a total of 75 zones over the 3-year period in the bill.

This legislation sets forth certain eligibility requirements for those zones, including prevasive poverty, unemployment, and general distress. State and local governments must take action concurrently with the Federal Government to reduce taxes, increase the level of efficiency in local services, simplify government requirements, increase private assistance, or provide mechanisms to increase equity ownership of residents and employees in the zone.

Enterprise zone employers are eligible to claim a tax credit on wages paid to disadvantaged individuals working in the zone and any increase in annual wages paid to all employees working in the zone. Qualified employees are also entitled to a nonrefundable tax credit equal to 5 percent of qualified wages for the taxable year. An additional investment tax credit is allowed for certain capital investments in enterprise zones. This legislation also eliminates taxes on long-term capital gains. Finally, the bill provides for a greater regulatory flexibility in these zones, including a waiver of certain agency rules in these zones, and requires the Foreign Trade Zone Board to expedite the establishment of foreign trade zones in these areas.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate Finance Committee and the full Senate to take expeditious action on this measure in the remaining days of this session, so that it will stand an opportunity of passing the House of Representatives.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

HERE'S WHY THE REAGAN ADMINISTRATION HAS NEGOTIATED NO NUCLEAR ARMS AGREEMENTS WITH THE U.S.S.R.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on July 6 I wrote to the Secretary of State and other State Department officials soliciting their views on our relations with the Soviet Union, and our posture on negotiating nuclear arms control agreements. On August 3 the Administration responded. Assistant Secretary of State Tapley Bennett wrote that the Administration has engaged in arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union. But the Soviet Union has broken off the discussions—not just once, but twice. The Administration argues that it initiated talks with the Soviet Union on Strategic Arms Reduction [START]. It also claims credit for initiating the Intermediate Nuclear Force [INF] talks with the Russians. In the administration's view the only reason we are not negotiating with the Soviet Union is because they refuse to talk. President Reagan has repeatedly declared his intention to negotiate with the Soviet Union on nuclear arms control without conditions. "Everything is on the table." We will talk with them about whatever they wish.

Mr. President, all of us in this U.S. Senate are patriotic Americans. All of us love this country. Few if any of us trust the communist cabal that dominates and dictates to the Russian people. We obviously do not bring unbiased, objective attitudes to any difference between the President of the United States and the government of any other country, especially the Government of the Soviet Union. We are hometown fans. We are for the home team. That means we are for the President when he deals with the Russians whenever we possibly can be.

With this patriotic bias in mind, let us examine the State Department letter of explanation of our present arms control difficulties with the Russians. The State Department letter cites the President's address of June 4 in Dublin, Ireland, when he called for:

First, reduction of levels of armaments; second, efforts to reduce tensions and find peaceful solutions to regional disputes, and, third, proposals to expand bilateral cooperation between the two superpowers. The letter cites the Soviet walkout of the INF and START talks. It says:

We accept their proposal to meet in Vienna without any preconditions, while reaffirming our interest in discussing ways to resume the nuclear arms dialogue.

So how can any good American patriot criticize that stance? Well, Mr. President, let us face it. There is a peculiarity of timing involved here. Here we have the first President of the United States in more than 50 years and in the incumbency of the last nine Presidents who has not met with the Soviet leaders. Here we have the first President since Eisenhower who has not been able to secure any kind of nuclear arms agreement with the Soviet Union. Here we have the first President of the United States that has denounced the Soviet Union root-and-branch as an evil empire.

Now, how about the timing? The President sings his sweet song of international harmony: "everything is on the table," and so forth, just a few months before an election. He does so at a time when polls show overwhelming support in this country for the United States and the Soviets negotiating an end to the nuclear arms race. This is a time when any meeting between the President and the Soviets for that purpose would clearly enhance the President's chances of reelection.

Now consider what the President's negotiating posture includes and excludes. Everything is really not on the table. He would propose in START that the Soviet Union agree with the United States to reduce land based intercontinental missiles on both sides. As an American I am for that. It is nice work if we can get it. But do not hold your breath. We have less than 25 percent of our nuclear striking force—our nuclear warheads—in land based missiles. The Soviet Union has more than 70 percent in that mode. Apply a zero option here and the Soviets lose nearly three-quarters of their deterrent. We keep three-quarters of ours. In any reasonable negotiation on this issue, they lose. We win. So I am for it. Let us do it. But I would not hold my breath until the Soviets agree that they will negotiate on this basis.

How about the INF talks? There again. No sensible American could disagree that what we propose would serve our interest richly. If they remove their land-based missiles that can reach Western Europe, we will agree not to deploy our own intermediate land-based missiles in Europe directed at Russia. A zero option in this case would mean we would have to take no action whatsoever, while they would have to dismantle hundreds of missiles already deployed. Wonderful! As an American I can shout "Hooray." And there is an added fillip here. We tell the Russians to withdraw their missiles from Europe. But we insist that the French and the British continue to retain their intermediate missiles that can reach all of European Russia. As an American I like that. But, again, I would hardly expect Russian leaders to be lured to the bargaining table with that kind of bait.

There is another prime reason why the Soviets will not waltz into that bargaining room. In the judgment of this Senator both superpowers would benefit by stopping the heart of the arms race. That means keeping the agreement this country and Russia specifically promised in both the 1963 test ban treaty and the 1974 treaty limiting underground nuclear weapons explosions to 150 kilotons. In those treaties, both parties promised—I repeat, promised—to negotiate a total end to nuclear weapons testing. Our top seismologists tell us we could verify that kind of agreement to prevent any tests that might have military significance. Everything may be on the table. But the President has specifically ruled out negotiation on a total test ban treaty. And there is more excluded from the table. The President has also refused in advance to negotiate an end to a "Star Wars" or antisatellite agreement. Such an agreement together with an end to nuclear weapons testing would close down the most likely avenue for stepped-up Soviet-United States nuclear arms competition. On this we know the Russians will talk. The President has said he will not.

Mr. President I ask unanimous consent that the letter from Assistant Secretary of State Tapley Bennett to which I have referred be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, August 3, 1984.

Hon. WILLIAM PROXMIRE,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR SENATOR PROXMIRE: On behalf of Secretary Shultz, let me thank you for the thoughtful views on U.S.-Soviet relations which you expressed in your letters to the Secretary, Deputy Secretary Dam, former Under Secretary Eagleburger, and Assistant Secretary Burt. I would be pleased to provide the Department's views on the topic, and I hope that my comments address the concerns which you raised.

United States relations with the U.S.S.R. have indeed been troubled in recent years. A variety of Soviet actions—most prominently, the invasion and occupation of Afghanistan, the Soviet-inspired repression in Poland, the continuing Soviet military buildup, and the worsening human rights situation in the U.S.S.R.—have limited prospects for a satisfactory relationship.

United States policy toward the Soviet Union is grounded in a realistic appraisal of the challenges posed to the West by Moscow. We start from the premise that neither the interests of our country nor of the international community will be served if we fail to recognize the areas of disagreement between the United States and the U.S.S.R. or fail to state frankly our concerns about Soviet behavior.

Renewed military, political and economic strength is also a prerequisite to an effective policy toward the Soviet Union. We believe we have made significant progress in redressing the military imbalances that were allowed to emerge over the past two decades, in bolstering relations with key Allies and friends, and in setting the United States on the path toward economic recovery.

It is on this basis that we have sought to engage the Soviets in a process of dialogue and negotiation aimed at finding concrete solutions to some of the problems that divide us. We recognize that the United States and the Soviet Union share a common interest in avoiding war, reducing tensions, and lowering the levels of armaments possessed by both sides. Accordingly, each superpower has the responsibility to seek peaceful solutions in the areas of disagreement.

In an address to a joint session of the National Parliament of Ireland on June 4, the President described a number of the initiatives which the Administration has advanced in its dialogue with the Soviets. These initiatives fall into three categories: proposals to reduce the levels of armaments and minimize the risk of war; efforts to reduce tensions in volatile regions of the globe and to find peaceful solutions to regional disputes; and proposals to expand the scope of bilateral cooperation between the two superpowers.

Despite the Soviet walkout from INF and the Soviet refusal to return to START, the Administration remains patient and hopeful that the Soviets will relax their rigid posture so that effective and verifiable agreements can be concluded soon. The President has reiterated on many occasions his desire to renew negotiations with the U.S.S.R. In his Dublin address, for example, he declared, "We are prepared to negotiate tomorrow if the Soviets so choose." We believe that it is now up to the Soviets to demonstrate an equal commitment to arms control. In this regard, we welcome the Soviet offer to begin arms control talks on "preventing the militarization of outer space" in Vienna this September. We have advised the Soviets that we accept their proposal to meet in Vienna without any preconditions, while reaffirming our interest in discussing ways to resume the nuclear arms dialogue.

While arms reduction issues remain of primary importance on the U.S.-Soviet agenda, we also have been attentive to the need for progress on the other problem areas in our bilateral relationship. We have sought to engage the U.S.S.R in discussions of the situations in some of the world's volatile regions—such as Afghanistan, southern Africa, and the Persian Gulf—in order to minimize the dangers of U.S.-Soviet confrontation and to support efforts to find diplomatic solutions.

Human rights is another basic area of concern on the bilateral agenda, and we have consistently called for the Soviet Union to fulfill the human rights commitments which it has undertaken by signing the Helsinki Accords and other international agreements. The current treatment of Dr. Andrei Sakharov and his wife, Yelena Bonner, is especially disturbing, and we have forcefully expressed our concerns to the Soviet government in public and in private. We will continue pressing the Soviet Union for an end to the brutal treatment of the Sakharovs and for a substantial and lasting improvement in the Soviet human rights picture.

We have also pursued discussions with the Soviet Union on a range of bilateral topics, including the opening of new consulates, increasing cultural and scientific exchanges, and expanding nonstrategic trade. These were outlined by the President in his speech of June 27 at the Smithsonian Conference on U.S.-Soviet exchanges. And on July 17, the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. reached an agreement providing for important technical improvements to the Moscow-Washington Direct Communications Link, the so-called "hotline."

In sum, we are actively pursuing a wide range of diplomatic efforts designed to bring about a more cooperative relationship with the U.S.S.R. I hope that the information I have provided here provides a clearer image of the efforts made by the Administration toward this end. As far as differences in approach to the Soviet Union between the Carter and Reagan administrations are concerned, I have served both administrations but would consider this a question more properly left to the historians.

In developing a policy toward the Soviet Union, we have worked to shape a realistic one, deserving of bipartisan support. The complexity of U.S.-Soviet relations and arms control does not lend itself to prediction. Nonetheless, our current policy, with its emphasis on productive and realistic dialogue, would seem to offer the best prospect for establishing a stable and mutually beneficial relationship with the Soviet Union.

Sincerely,

W. TAPLEY BENNETT, Jr.,
Assistant Secretary,
Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs.

KHMER ROUGE: A WORLD DEPICTED IN "1984"

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, recent warfare between the Vietnamese occupation troops and the Cambodian resistance forces, reminds us of the condition of the nation of Kampuchea just 8 years ago.

Upon taking control in 1975, the Khmer Rouge established a nightmarish world similar to that depicted in George Orwell's "1984."

The Khmer Rouge had a vision of a completely egalitarian society—the ideal Communist state—in which exploiting and exploited classes were eradicated.

Private property and ownership and all private means of production would be totally destroyed.

According to Khmer Rouge ideology, city dwellers were unproductive citizens, parasites of society, exploiting elitists. They were puppets of American imperialism.

As a result, the entire population, including the sick and the dying in hospitals, were forced out at gunpoint to the country side.

This evacuation policy would lead to the second phase of purification, the discarding of "rotten fruit." Those liquidated included military and police officers and personnel serving under the previous regime, civil servants, and the bourgeois element, including professionals, merchants, shopkeepers, and foreigners.

In the book "1984," the government attempted to brainwash enemies of the state through the concept of "doublethink." If it was unsuccessful, the prisoner was executed.

In Kampuchea, the Khmer Rouge revolutionaries used the same technique. They stated that when a man has been spoiled by a corrupt regime he could not be reformed. He must, therefore, be physically eliminated from society.

The Khmer Rouge used slogans reminiscent of the book "1984," such as "What is infected must be cut out," to justify mass slaughter.

As in Orwell's book "1984," the Khmer Rouge had the equivalent to Big Brother, called Angka Loeu.

Angka Loeu was a faceless, shadowy divinity, exercising power over all people. The Khmer Rouge devoted themselves to it body and soul.

The Khmer Rouge boasted that Angka Loeu was everywhere and knew everything. As the Khmer Rouge put it, "Angka Loeu has eyes like a pineapple; it can see everything." It was a crime to hide any secret from Angka Loeu. The punishment was execution.

Like characters in Orwell's "1984," the Khmer Rouge used "newspeak." People were taken away to be executed were simply told by the police that, "We are sending you to Angka Loeu," or "Angka Loeu wants to see you."

All symbols of the old society were eliminated. Buddhist temples, Christian churches, and Muslim mosques were systematically destroyed. So were consumer goods and all books, archives, official documents, and historical records.

Like the citizens of Oceania in the book "1984," the Cambodians were completely cut off from the past or any contacts with the outside world.

Angka Loeu, like Orwell's Big Brother, aimed to control the people through their thoughts and their identities.

The victims were helpless and incapable of questioning anything.

As Orwell's "1984" was, so also was the Khmer Rouge in Cambodia. The latter, however, was nonfictional.

The actions of the Khmer Rouge regime are another painful reminder that genocide did not disappear with Adolf Hitler.

Preventing more genocides like Cambodia's is one more reason the Senate should ratify the Genocide Convention.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In accordance with the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business.

S. 2915—FEDERAL MERIT SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill to provide for a Federal Merit Scholarship Program. I am pleased to have Senators PELL, CHILES, and KENNEDY join me in introducing this legislation.

Since the spring of last year, when the President's National Commission on Excellence in Education reported to the Nation that our education system was in crisis, that it was "A Nation at Risk," many of us in Congress have been earnestly applying ourselves to the task of finding solutions to the crisis our education system, at all levels, faces.

At the end of June, we finally passed the math/science bill and sent it back to the House, which had passed it over a year ago. That bill is now on the President's desk. It is the only new initiative we in Congress have developed to deal with the educational crisis that all the experts tell us exists in American education.

The math/science bill addresses one specific set of problems identified in the reports on our educational system which have been issued in the last 18 months. It deals with the problem of encouraging mathematics and science education, by focusing on efforts to increase the quality of mathematics and science instruction. It primarily provides funds which will assist State and local education agencies in providing teacher training, retraining, and in-service training in mathematics and science.

While the reports on our educational system underlined for us the crisis which exists in mathematics and science education programs, the reports signaled many more problem areas. Besides efforts to strengthen the commitment and competency of mathematics and science teachers, the reports tell us that language teachers, social science teachers, and humanities teachers—indeed all teachers—also need to be encouraged. The reports tell us that student test scores need to be raised, that graduation requirements need to be toughened, that more homework needs to be assigned, that educational agencies need to consider lengthening the school day and the school year. The reports target these areas for improvement and many more. The majority of these recommendations can be categorized as recommendations to improve the quality and the excellence of American education.

While many of the recommendations in the reports are geared to actions which must be taken at the State and local level, and States and localities all over the country are taking steps to implement needed reforms, all the reports underline that there is a significant role for the Federal Government to play in addressing the crisis. The reports all recommend initiatives to promote excellence in education. The math/science bill thus is one small part of the congressional excellence response to the crisis in our educational system.

My bill is another modest, but nevertheless vital, Federal response to that crisis.

The bill, which would set up a Federal Merit Scholarship Program, recognizes that the Federal Government must do more to encourage excellence in our educational system. The majority of Federal education programs are aimed at asssuring access to and the promotion of a quality education, a very important Federal role and one which I wholeheartedly support. But there are few Federal programs aimed solely at promoting excellence in education and, specifically, the nurturing and recognition of gifted and talented students.

The bill addresses this point. It has its genesis in the "Jobs for the Future" report produced and endorsed by the Democratic Conference and introduced in the Senate last month as the Economic Competitiveness and Cooperation Act, S. 2795.

The bill would provide an authorization of $8 million each for fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988, for the creation of a Federal Merit Scholarship Program to be administered by the Secretary of Education.

The scholarships would be open to graduates of any public or private secondary school who have been admitted for enrollment at an institution of higher education. The scholarships would be based entirely on merit—they would go to students who have demonstrated outstanding academic achievement and who show promise of continued academic achievement. The scholarships would be awarded for a period of 1 academic year for the first year of study. My bill stipulates that 10 scholarships, at a stipend level of $1,500 each, are to be awarded in each congressional district, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia.

The Secretary of Education will administer the program. But the responsibility for the development of criteria for the awards selection, and the awards selection, will rest at the State level, in the State education agencies.

Let me close, Mr. President, by saying that this proposal is a departure from our traditional Federal approach of needs-based programs. And that, of course, goes to the heart of the matter before us today in this bill. I believe, as do many of my colleagues, that there is a legitimate Federal role in encouraging and rewarding excellence in education at all levels. This proposal does that.

It is a small step, a very discrete Federal program, which would create a limited number of awards—honors—for students who have achieved a high degree of excellence in their high school careers. It is my hope and expectation that the potential of receiving these awards will spur students to do better, to strive to excel.

Mr. President, in 1969, I established the Robert C. Byrd Scholarship Recognition Award Program for West Virginia students. Set up originally with my own funds, I award each and every valedictorian from every graduating class of every secondary school—public, private, and parochial in the State of West Virginia a U.S. savings bond in recognition of his or her achievements. My own program is a very modest recognition of the achievements of gifted and talented students in West Virginia. But as modest as it is, my experience with this merit program in West Virginia has convinced me that there is a legitimate role for Government in rewarding and encouraging excellence in education.

The bill I offer today on behalf of myself and the distinguished Senators already mentioned—PELL, CHILES, and KENNEDY—is somewhat more substantial. I ask all my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to help me in creating what I believe is a needed and appropriate Federal effort to recognize and nurture America's gifted and talented students.

Mr. President, I send to the desk the bill about which I have been talking and ask for its appropriate referral.

I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The text of the bill follows:

S. 2915

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Merit Scholarship Act".

SEC. 2. (a) Part A of title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (hereafter in this title referred to as "the Act") is amended by redesignating subpart 6 as subpart 7 and by inserting after subpart 5 the following new subpart:

"Subpart 6—Federal Merit Scholarships

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 419A. It is the purpose of this subpart to establish a Federal Merit Scholarship Program to promote student excellence and achievement and to recognize exceptionally able students who show promise of continued excellence.

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 419B. For the purpose of this subpart—

"(1) the term 'secondary school' has the same meaning given that term under section 198(a)(7) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; and

"(2) the term 'State' means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

"SCHOLARSHIPS AUTHORIZED

"SEC. 419C. (a) The Secretary is authorized, in accordance with the provisions of this subpart, to make grants to States to enable the States to award scholarships to individuals who have demonstrated outstanding academic achievement and who show promise of continued academic achievement.

"(b) Scholarships under this section shall be awarded for a period of one academic year for the first year of study at an institution of higher education.

"(c) A student awarded a scholarship under this subpart may attend any institution of higher education.

"ALLOCATION AMONG STATES

"SEC. 419D. From the sums appropriated pursuant to section 419K for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall allocate to each State having an agreement under section 419E—

"(1) $1,500 multiplied by the number of individuals in the State eligible for merit scholarships pursuant to section 419G (b), plus

"(2) $10,000, plus 5 percent of the amount to which a State is eligible under clause (1) of this section.

"AGREEMENTS

"SEC. 419E. The Secretary shall enter into an agreement with each State desiring to participate in the merit scholarship program authorized by this subpart. Each such agreement shall include provisions designed to assure that—

"(1) the State educational agency will administer the merit scholarship program authorized by this subpart in the State;

"(2) the State educational agency will comply with the eligibility and selection provisions of this subpart;

"(3) the State educational agency will pay to each individual in the State who is awarded a merit scholarship under this subpart $1,500 at an awards ceremony in accordance with section 419I; and

"(4) the State educational agency will use the amount of the allocation described in clause (2) of section 419D for administrative expenses, including the conduct of the awards ceremony required by section 419I.

"ELIGIBILITY OF MERIT SCHOLARS

"SEC. 419F. (a) Each student awarded a scholarship under this subpart shall be a graduate of a public or private secondary school and must have been admitted for enrollment at an institution of higher education.

"(b) Pursuant to criteria established by the Secretary, each student awarded a scholarship under this subpart must show promise of continued academic achievement.

"SELECTION OF MERIT SCHOLARS

"SEC. 419G. (a) The State educational agency is authorized to establish the criteria for the selection of merit scholars under this subpart.

"(b) The State educational agency shall adopt selection procedures which are designed to assure that ten individuals will be selected from among residents of each congressional district in a State (and in the case of the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico not to exceed ten individuals will be selected in such district or Commonwealth).

"STIPENDS AND SCHOLARSHIP CONDITIONS

"SEC. 419H. (a) Each student awarded a merit scholarship under this subpart shall receive a stipend of $1,500 for the academic year of study for which the scholarship is awarded.

"(b) The State educational agency shall establish procedures under which a merit scholar awarded a scholarship under this subpart establishes that the scholar is maintaining satisfactory proficiency and devoting full time to the course of study for which the scholarship was awarded.

"AWARDS CEREMONY

"SEC. 419I. (a) The State educational agency shall make arrangements to award merit scholarships under this subpart at a place in each State which is convenient to the individuals selected to receive such scholarships. To the extent possible, the award shall be made by Members of the Senate and Members of the House of Representatives (by the Delegate in the case of the District of Columbia and the Resident Commissioner in the case of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico) who represent the State, Commonwealth, or District, as the case may be, from which the individuals come.

"(b) The selection process shall be completed, and the awards made prior to August 1 in each year.

"CONSTRUCTION OF NEEDS PROVISIONS

"SEC. 419J. Nothing in this subpart, or any other Act, shall be construed to permit the receipt of a merit scholarship under this subpart to be counted for any needs test in connection with the awarding of any grant or the making of any loan under this Act or any other provision of Federal law relating to educational assistance.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 419K. There are authorized to be appropriated $8,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988 to carry out the provisions of this subpart.".

(b)(1) Section 419 of the Act is redesignated as section 420.

(2) Section 420 of the Act is redesignated as section 420A.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator BYRD along with Senators CHILES and PELL in cosponsoring the Federal merit scholarship bill. I would also like to commend Senator BYRD for his continued efforts in support of our Nation's young people and higher education.

This bill will encourage students of high academic achievement to further their education by providing individual $1,500 scholarships for 1 academic year. It is most fitting that we recognize the academic strengths of our Nation's youth and reward their talents by promoting studies at institutions of higher learning. These intellectual endeavors of our young people are worthy of highest praise and encouragement for these individuals promise to be future leaders in our country.

While we continue to maintain our high commitment to providing access to education for needy students, we should also use Federal resources to encourage excellence. In my judgment, this bill does an excellent job of achieving this objective. The Federal merit scholarship bill provides nonrenewable scholarships based solely on merit. The recipients will be students of any pubiic or private secondary school who have been admitted for enrollment at an institution of higher learning. These awards which will be offered in each congressional district, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico, will be awarded based on criteria established by each State educational agency.

This idea of Federal merit scholarships is not a new one and has received much thoughtful attention by many educational organizations and congressional education experts. Provisions for such a scholarship program were contained in the Economic Competitiveness and Cooperation Act and we have incorporated many of the suggestions we received into the current bill.

I encourage my colleagues to join me in supporting this worthwhile endeavor.

POSTAL CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am concerned about recent actions by the U.S. Postal Service which appear to be inflammatory and provocative. As we all know, the Postal Service and the Postal Unions are presently in the midst of contract negotiations. The 1979 Postal Service Reorganization Act spells out very clearly how these negotiations are to take place and in what context a decision is to be made. The Postal Service appears to be thwarting these procedures by recent announcements that it plans to reduce the pay of new hires before completing negotiation process set by law.

This is bad policy and sends a message to postal workers that the system doesn't work. Mr. President, I believe the system can work and must give it that opportunity. Therefore, I urge Postmaster General Bolger to withdraw his proposal for a pay cut for new hires.

At the same time, I caution postal workers to also abide by the rules as set out in the Postal Service Reorganization Act. The unions must discourage any talk of strikes and show good faith in the system. The system can work and all parties must give it that opportunity.

The House version of the supplemental appropriation bill contains an amendment prohibiting the Postal Service from making the changes proposed by Postmaster Bolger. I urge the Postmaster General to withdraw these proposals and prevent the necessity of congressional action.

DRUG ABUSE IN THE MILITARY

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, a recent Washington Post article points out, yet again, how prevalent drug abuse is within our military forces.

It is reported in this article that more than 70 military personnel and civilians were arrested by military authorities after a 3-month drug investigation at Fort Belvoir, VA, Fairfax County police, and the FBI were also involved in this action. Called "Operation Cleansweep," the charges resulting from these arrests ranged from possession of small amounts of marijuana to possession with intent to sell.

This action was taken as part of a Defense Department effort to crack down on drug use among military personnel. This investigation, begun by the military in April, led as well to the arrest of a number of civilians who had been dealing both marijuana and cocaine. Quantities of LSD, Valium, and other drugs were also seized in this raid.

Mr. President, we in America have, bar none, the finest fighting forces in the world. We cannot allow our military personnel to be corrupted and eventually destroyed by illicit drugs. We must remain diligent in our efforts to educate our young soldiers to the potential dangers of drug abuse—dangers that can often have more damaging results than those found on the battlefield.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article entitled "70 Are Arrested at Fort Belvoir," dated July 12, 1984, in the Washington Post, be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

70 ARE ARRESTED AT FORT BELVOIR—DRUG PROBE BEGAN IN APRIL

(By Anndee Hochman and Charles Fishman)

More than 70 military personnel and civilians were arrested this week after a three-month drug sweep at Fort Belvoir by military authorities, Fairfax County police and the FBI, officials reported yesterday.

Fort Belvoir officials arrested 62 military personnel on the base in Fairfax County Monday and Tuesday, most on charges involving possession of small amounts of marijuana. It was the culmination of what military officials called "Operation Cleansweep." The military charges ranged from simple possession to possession with intent to sell, according to Lt. Col. John Ooley, spokesman for the post.

Ooley said the crackdown on drugs was the largest at Fort Belvoir in at least four years, and involved the use of undercover officers, dogs trained to sniff out drugs and searches of personnel as they entered the gates of the base.

The arrests were said to be part of the Defense Department's effort to crack down on drug use among military personnel, an effort that has led the services to conduct widespread, but unannounced urine tests for drug usage and to quickly discharge those suspected of using drugs.

Officials said the Fort Belvoir arrests were designed to have a deterrent effect. "We want to make it known that drug trafficking on Fort Belvoir is not going to be an easy thing to do," Ooley said.

The military investigation, begun in April, led to civilian suppliers and resulted in the arrest of eight Fairfax County residents, county police said. In addition, two other Fairfax County residents were arrested at Fort Belvoir Monday by the FBI and charged with possession and sale of cocaine on federal property, according to the FBI.

Law enforcement officials said a total of $19,000 worth of drugs was seized, the bulk of it marijuana, but it also included $5,000 worth of cocaine from one civilian, and small quantities of LSD, Valium and other drugs.

The Fort Belvoir investigation drew anger and denunciation from the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML) and the American Civil Liberties Union.

"We're outraged," said Kevin Zeese, national director of NORML. "We think it's crazy. When the officers' club continues to sell martinis, to be ruining someone's life and career for possession of small amounts of marijuana is ridiculous."

Although military officials declined to say how much marijuana was taken from base personnel, Ooley said the investigation yielded "no large amounts from one individual" Law enforcement officials said $14,000 worth of marijuana would be about 30 pounds.

Zeese said that while the number of arrests in the Fort Belvoir operation seemed large, anti-drug sweeps in the military "are not unusual."

"It can't be a very rational attitude for the military to be that uptight about a soldier smoking a joint," said Arthur Spitzer, legal director for the American Civil Liberties Union in the national capital region. "Our view is that use of marijuana ought to be decriminalized," said Spitzer. "We don't think it's a very wise allocation of society's law-enforcement resources."

Ooley said most of the military personnel arrested would not ultimately face court-martial or discharge, but would be disciplined administratively.

Officials said yesterday that it was not clear which of the 62 would be court-martialed. Fort Belvoir officials said it would be "a matter of weeks" before such decisions were made in individual cases.

All 62 soldiers arrested will be restricted to their units—a curtailment of privileges that permits them to attend only meals, chapel and work—until the investigation is completed, according to Sgt. Thomas Tiernan, a base spokesman.

Tiernan said the drug sweep began in April "to support the drive to eliminate drug use among soldiers." Fairfax County police joined the effort in June.

REDUCING THE FEDERAL DEFICIT

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, a shadow looms conspicuously and threateningly over our current economic recovery—the shadow of massive Federal budget deficits. If the budget deficit is allowed to continue its growth, long-term economic recovery will be very difficult, if not impossible. Many leading economists believe that if drastic measures are not taken to curtail these deficits our economy could be plunged back into a recession accompanied by soaring interest rates, rising inflation and the return of double-digit unemployment. Congress and the administration must confront the Federal deficit problem soon and forceably or risk jeopardizing our economic future. The Deficit Reduction Act, recently enacted by Congress, provided a $19 billion downpayment on the deficit, but clearly did not go far enough.

According to the latest forecasts by the Congressional Budget Office, the deficit will continue to grow for the foreseeable future. The deficit for 1984 is estimated to be $172 billion, for 1985 it is expected to be $178 billion, and by 1989 it is estimated to grow to a staggering $263 billion. To put these figures in perspective, if you had 200 billion dollars' worth of $1 bills and stacked one on top of the other, when completed they would be more than 14,000 miles high. Even more sobering is the fact that the national debt is now close to $1.5 trillion.

With many Americans enjoying prosperity under current economic conditions why should we be concerned with Federal budget deficits? Contrary to what many people believe, the massive deficits help determine how Americans are working, how much the value of the dollar is eroded by inflation, and how difficult it is for consumers and businesses to get credit.

The Federal Government must finance deficit spending in the same way an individual or business does, by competing for available funds in the money market. Historically, the Federal Government has absorbed about one-quarter of the money and credit available for investment. This has resulted in 75 percent of the total being available for use by the private sector. However, in recent years the Federal Government has taken more and more of the money and credit available for investment in order to finance its deficits. This means that less money has been left over for private investments in plant, equipment, housing, research, technology, new businesses, and consumer goods. If the current trend of high deficits continues, the Government will absorb one-half to two-thirds of the pool of money available for investment in the coming years.

The result of the Government taking such a large portion of this pool is that interest rates get pushed higher and higher since there is greater competition for available capital.

An alternative to Government borrowing to pay its debts is for it to create more money. However, the result of this policy, as we have seen in the past, is higher inflation. When inflation rises there is little incentive to save, resulting in scarce capital available for businesses to expand and, finally interest rates begin to rise. With higher interest rates comes higher unemployment.

In order to reduce the Federal deficit, the Government must bring discipline to the spending process. This can be achieved in a number of ways.

First, Congress must approve a constitutional amendment mandating a balance Federal budget. The deficits being amassed by the Federal Government have been structurally embedded into the economy. Clearly, Congress and the administration no longer has the ability or willpower to spend only what it takes in. In fact, since 1961, the Federal Government has experienced 22 deficits and only 1 surplus.

The first piece of legislation I introduced in the Senate was a constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget. Since that time, it has continued to be one of my highest legislative priorities. During the 97th Congress, the Senate approved the amendment, but, unfortunately, the House failed to act upon it.

I remain convinced that the administration and Congress simply do not have the discipline to cut Government spending and balance the budget without a constitutional amendment. The people of our Nation, after years of listening to vague promises from their elected officials, have lost faith in the ability of Congress to do what is necessary to balance the budget. I believe the balanced budget amendment will restore the American people's confidence in the Government and the economy and reimpose the spending constraints that our Founding Fathers originally assumed.

In order to meet the challenge before us and achieve the goal of a balanced Federal budget a broad bipartisan approach is needed. The deficit is not a Democratic problem or a Republican problem—it is an American problem. I propose that Congress and the administration establish a bipartisan commission, similar to the Social Security Commission, to study the Federal budget and the approaches needed to meet our critical needs for tax and spending reforms. The commission would be comprised of representatives from all sectors of our economy and would be charged with the responsibility of evaluating proposals for reform in the budget process in terms of traditional doctrines such as fairness, simplicity, economic efficiency, and distribution to the tax burden. This would be a major undertaking but necessary for positive change.

No effort to achieve a balanced budget can be successful without cutting Federal spending, and, at the same time, raising new revenue. There are at least two actions which could be taken immediately to achieve these goals: First, through extensive tax reform and, second, through the elimination of waste and abuse within Government agencies, particularly the Department of Defense.

In recent years we have developed a tax system burdened with appalling complexities and tarnished by distrust. It is perceived by those who bear its burden as unfair. Many people say it punishes, rather than rewards, those who would work and save. As a result, our tax policies have placed our tax system into distrust.

One area ripe for reform is the maze of tax loopholes that have developed over many years to benefit special interests. These loopholes result in revenue losses attributable to special tax exclusions, exemptions or reductions from gross income, or a special credit, a preferential tax rate or a deferral of tax liability. Many of these special exemptions and exclusions are legitimate and serve an important purpose, such as the deduction for home mortgage interest. However, there are countless others which serve very little useful purpose other than to rob the Federal Treasury of needed revenue.

The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that, for fiscal year 1984, the total revenue loss from these tax loopholes will be almost $330 billion and that it will exceed $490 billion by fiscal year 1988. During this same period, deficits will remain at about $200 billion and spending will range between $800 and $900 billion. It is clear that Congress could take a major step toward reducing the Federal deficit by initiating reforms in this area of the tax law.

A second step which must be taken is the elimination of waste and abuse in the Department of Defense. It has been estimated that waste and abuse adds from 10 percent to 30 percent to military costs, resulting in millions of taxpayers' dollars being wasted each year. For example, in 1984 our defense program is expected to cost the Nation approximately $265 billion. Assuming 15 percent of this figure can be attributed to waste and abuse, the Government would be spending over $39 billion needlessly.

Reform is badly needed in the procurement of spare parts. According to the Office of Management and Budget, the Department of Defense will spend about $22 billion to purchase spare parts this fiscal year.

The list of spare parts bought by the Defense Department at grossly inflated and unjustified sums could seemingly go on forever: $36.77 for a $1.08 machine screw; $726.86 for a $7.99 electrical plug; $44 for a 17 cent lamp bulb; $112 for a microcircuit available for $2.37; $110 for a 4 cent diode. Also, contractors are frequently given a blank check to raise prices on spare parts—with the boost in prices often unbelievable. For example, three Air Force engine components rose from $6,000 each in 1981 to $45,000 each in 1982.

Sometimes, drastic cost increases spring from maintaining old equipment. In 1967, the Air Force bought 25 electronic components for its Minuteman Missile at $175 each. When 24 more were needed in 1981, the price per unit had gone all the way up to $2,470.

Another example of how the military parts procurement process does not work sits just behind the cockpit of the AWACS radar plane on the leg of a folding stool—a small plastic cap that the Air Force paid $1,118.16 for—roughly the cost of the plastic plus $1,118. It wasn't as bad as it appears, however, the supplier only billed the Air Force $916 each. The other $200 plus came from a standard defense surcharge to cover "such costs as inflation, transportation costs, special packaging, obsolescence, breakage, deterioration, pilferage, etc."

I have been pleased at recent efforts to rid the Department of Defense of waste and abuse. The 1983 Defense authorization bill includes a comprehensive program for reform of the Defense Department's procurement practices and should save taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars annually. Also, the Senate recently passed legislation to establish a competition advocate general in each agency and branch of service of the Defense Department. It will be the responsibility of the advocate general to identify opportunities that will achieve greater competition and lower prices for Defense contracts.

We must continue to search for ways to halt unnecessary spending by the Defense Department and other agencies of the Federal Government. This initiative, combined with a comprehensive reform of our tax laws, would go a long way toward reducing the Federal deficit and balancing the budget. For too long we have heard a great deal of rhetoric about the deficit, but have seen far too little action. This is a problem to which we can no longer afford to attach partisan political concerns. It is our responsibility to rise to this challenge with courage and selflessnesss and take the steps necessary to ensure a sound and secure future for our children.

BONNEVILLE POWER ADMINISTRATION BONDS

Mr. PACKWOOD. I have a question for the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee about the recently passed Deficit Reduction Act of 1984. Section 622 of the act exempts certain guarantees from the restrictions on federally guaranteed tax-exempt bonds. Among the exemptions is an exemption of guarantees on bonds—issued before July 1, 1989—by the Bonneville Power Administration pursuant to the Northwest Power Act as in effect on the date of enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1984. I understand that the phrase "as in effect on the date of enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1984" refers to the provisions of the Northwest Power Act, and not to any particular guarantee. Thus, the guarantee itself need not be in effect on the date of enactment to be exempt from the restriction. Is that correct?

Mr. DOLE. That is my understanding.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee.

DEMOCRACY IN SOUTH KOREA

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, one of the great champions of democracy and human freedom in Korea is Mr. Kim Young-Sam. In May, 1984, Mr. Kim Young-Sam and Mr. Kim Dae-Jung formed the Council for Promotion of Democracy in Korea. They were elected cochairmen of this important new organization.

The Council for Promotion of Democracy symbolizes the unity and cooperation that now exists among all the democratic forces in South Korea and abroad.

On the occasion of the anniversary of the Kwangju incident in May, Mr. Kim Young-Sam issued "A Message to the People of Korea and Friends Abroad." In that message, Mr. Kim reports that the substance of the military dictatorship in South Korea remains unchanged. Mr. Kim states that, "It is an oppressive regime which rules by deception and violence and continues to suppress our people."

He calls upon the people of South Korea to work for democracy in that country. He states:

> For some time now we have been entrapped by a violent dictatorial oppression under which we are not able to express our genuine opinions, and under which we have become accustomed to false elective processes, the fraudulence, and the violence of the political authorities. Fundamentally democracy means freedom of speech. The time has come for us to cast off our fear, open our gagged mouths and call forth a storm of speech. Such an outcry must lead to the opening of the blocked ears of the dictatorial rulers . . . Each one of us must be armed with righteous courage, and we must gather our scattered forces into one organized whole . . .
> Democracy is never something which is handed to us by someone else. Democracy is a value which we must grasp, pursue and build for ourselves. Democracy in this country will finally rest upon bedrock only when we fully prove the vastness of the strength which flows from the just conscience of a peaceful and nonviolent democratic citizenry.

Mr. President, I believe there is much to be learned from the powerful words of Mr. Kim Young-Sam, and I respectfully request that his "Message to the People of Korea and Friends Abroad" be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the message was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A MESSAGE TO THE PEOPLE OF KOREA AND FRIENDS ABROAD

(By Kim Young-Sam)

It is with anguish of heart that I greet this day of the year once again. On this day of last year I decided to put all else aside and begin an unlimited hunger strike as my last available act of service for this nation and my people, that I might help toward the revival of democracy in this land. That hunger strike resulted from my determination to participate in a humble way in the suffering of the thousands who had been killed or injured in the Kwangju Incident of May, 1980 and the agony of their families, and at the same time to serve our nation out of my fervent hope for the revival of democracy. In the end my sincere prayers were frustrated, yet within this land such persons as Hahm Sok-hon, Hong Nam-soon, Moon Ik-whan, Lee Moon-young, Ye Choon-ho, and Kim Chul joined in the struggle by participating in the hunger strike, many citizens who heard of the hunger strike sent messages of encouragement, while from abroad Kim Dae-jung and other persons of justice and conscience who love freedom and democracy sent their support and encouragement. At this time I would like to express my sincerest appreciation to all my fellow citizens both here and abroad, and to all other friends who shared their concern for my life during the hunger strike struggle, and who joined in reconfirming their ardent commitment to the cause of democracy.

Even though a number of measures taken in the ensuing year serve as window-dressing for the regime, in reality the substance of the military dictatorship remains unchanged. It is an oppressive regime which rules by deception and violence and continues to suppress our people, while no steps whatever have been taken to move this nation closer to democracy. A measure allowing expelled students to return to their campuses has merely prolonged the vicious cycle of expulsion, imprisonment and exile for students. Because the cause which motivates students to protest, the struggle for democracy, has not been permitted to progress at all. Although there have been six suspicious deaths of students forced into punitive military service recently, the so-called "suggested withdrawal from college" system which functions as a method for forcing military service continues to operate. Furthermore, the recent granting of "campus autonomy" has evoked great concern, since it appears to be no more than a preparatory step leading to even greater oppression, involving ever-increasing deception and retaliation. The government's branding students as communist sympathizers or leftists, forcibly alienating them from the ranks of the public, driving a wedge between the students and the population, is a criminal form of dividing the people for enhancing its own power, thus serving the interests of north Korean communism by weakening and undermining the anticommunist stance of our people.

The partial lifting of the ban on the activity of politicians was belated, and instead of representing a firm commitment to realize democracy, it has been nothing more than a form of political manipulation. The majority of dismissed professors, journalists and workers remain confronted with the stark reality of the struggle for economic survival. In order to prolong its own existence the present regime concocts legislation for national defense, press control and labor affairs without exhibiting the least suggestion of meaningful reform.

At this moment in time I would like to express my views and to represent my sincere and earnest appeal to all of you both here in Korea and abroad in behalf of our most lofty calling in this generation, the realization of true democracy. First, I would like to address the present government. The large-scale inhumane accidents and stupendous financial scandals involving public power which have taken place under this regime, together with such events as the Kwangju Incident and the progress through which this regime established itself, have failed to elicit any serious reflection upon these historic crimes or any indication of repentance. Futhermore, these horrible events have been the inevitable result of the insatiable lust for power of the regime. The experience of history suggests that mistakes not followed by reflection or repentance lead to further mistakes, while evil is followed by ever-greater evil. Should the present regime continue in its preoccupation with concealing its own crimes while continuing to contrive the strengthening of controls and enforcement of conformity, I must warn that this nation and its people will be drawn into greater misfortune and tragedy.

The present regime is now planning an election for representatives for a ham-strung, rubber-stamp national Assembly, providing neither for reforms in the political system in the direction of true democracy, nor equality among the citizens of the nation, nor guarantees of a free exercise of the right to vote. This "election" in name alone can serve no other purpose than the perpetuation of the extraordinary powers of the present regime, and regardless of the results, it will be used brazenly as a means to advance the so-called "legitimacy" of the regime.

I would like to declare firmly that the true meaning of the election and its legitimacy could be validated only if the election system is reformed democratically, the use of physical coercion to enforce political conformity is completely abolished, the peaceful transfer of political power is clearly guaranteed through constitutional revision, and concrete steps for democratization and its timing are clearly indicated in a firm commitment formed through the common consent of the public. Otherwise even a general election could be used as a means for underpinning the perpetuation of military dictatorship.

Furthermore, I would like to announce my readiness to share in dialogue without conditions and to cooperate with the present regime at any time if the government is willing to express its determination to do the following: (1) to return to their jobs the journalists, professors and laborers who have been fired in the wake of this government's inception and subsequent development; (2) to completely abolish the restrictions on political activity; (3) to guarantee freedom of the press; (4) to reform in a democratic direction the legal devices which have been used to inhibit democracy and agree to a timetable for democratization; (5) to determine to withdraw the military from involvement in politics and restore to it the respect and trust of the people; and (6) finally, to give evidence of a commitment to allow true popular democracy a firm footing in this land.

I would like to address the members of the press. I know only too well that the government maintains top priority for restricting the press and repressing journalists, since if the regime should grant to the people the freedom to criticize and to you of the press a guarantee of freedom, they could not maintain the government's power for a single day. I cannot help but mention that I know there are among you those who are easily discouraged under this repression of the press, and some who adjust to the situation of suppression or tend toward trying to survive. Yet I am also aware that among you there are many who suffer inwardly under these circumstances because of your journalistic ideals. Yet the maintaining of these personal ideals is not enough by itself to justify accommodation. A free press is possible only when you as journalists both preserve the ideals of a free press and also struggle to put them into practice. The press is the last bastion standing for human rights and social justice, it is the power of society to purify itself of injustice and corruption, and it is the source of common purpose and the fountain of unifying strength in society.

Thus it has been extremely unfortunate that the press has recently given the impression of fostering discord and division among our people in reporting issues related to workers and students. I know this has not been your true intention, and yet you must be more deeply aware of the vast extent of the damage inflicted upon society and the nation by reporting in this way instead of maintaining silence. You must perceive deeply the extent of the censure and mistrust which this has generated among students and your successors in our society.

I would address a word to the judiciary of this nation. You will recall that even Pilate, who passed the sentence of death by crucification upon Jesus Christ, had his own inner, personal conflicts and agonies. I know that you, too, share the kind of conflicts and agonies which troubled Pilate. But you are not called upon to present yourselves before society as troubled invididuals, rather you are expected to present yourselves as responsible persons making legal judgments according to conscience. You should know that your personal agonies and mistakes cannot be assuaged by soliloquizing that the time of harsh emergency decrees has passed because it has been replaced by the national defense and other laws limiting the freedom of speech and assembly. The judgment to apply the national defense law against students has such destructive consequences for the future life of young people in this nation that you must reflect deeply upon the implications of what you have done.

I would like to say a word to the politicians of this country who are participating in the present system. You have the habit of referring to the slogans and demonstrations of students as being "irregular politics." But you must realize that the very activities which you criticize for being outside of legitimate politics are taking place precisely because you yourselves are fulfilling neither your roles nor duties as political leaders. If student expulsions and imprisonments are not merely the consequence of students' personal demands, then it is up to you to take the lead in searching out the wider social reasons for unrest, identifying them all and finding the ways to resolve these issues. You establishment politicians, though, are fleeing from your responsibilities. In your great wisdom you claim that student power around the world is at a low ebb and that it is a disorder in society which you want to drive from our midst. But the issue of "student power" in this nation is an integral part of the quest for the normalization of parliamentary functioning. And since normalized parliamentary functioning cannot take place without democratic principles based upon the separation of the three branches of government, it is essential that you be aware of the urgency of the students' appeals. You are fond of saying that students are in need of repentance, awakening and exertion to enable them to concentrate fully upon their studies, but you assiduously avoid applying these demands to yourselves in your role as politicians. You also need ears with which to hear the cries of workers and farmers in their extremity, and mouths with which to raise your voices courageously in their behalf.

I would also address a word to the students of this land who are dedicated to right and justice. Since your ideals are pure, your spirits just, and since your ardor is directed toward the people of this land, their democratic life and their welfare. I want to speak a word of comfort to you who must suffer interrogations and inspections on the streets and public flogging through the concerted voice of all the media. You are sacrificing everything, not for your own gain, but for your people and your country. That takes real courage, and this country will survive precisely because of that coverage. Because you are there, our people are able to find hope for tomorrow. And because of the way in which you students must suffer, we can only admit that you are paying the price for the sins of this era in our land.

As one who feels a sense of responsibility for this era and our situation, I can only feel in my heart a deep sense of pain at the scorn and suffering which you are forced to endure. I only wish that there were some way in which I could have the opportunity or the strength to bear in your stead the cross which you carry. I confess that when I see reports of the way in which you must suffer abuse and hardship, I feel as though I were myself under the pain of torture. The authorities and the press of this nation are using the strategy of treating you as if you were a monolithic mass of radicals. This stratagem may well be a tactic designed to justify heavy repression on the campuses. I sincerely hope that you will not be put in the position of providing a justification for further repression, and I sincerely entreat you to exercise self-control and due caution for your safety's sake. There is little I can do, but I will gladly share in bearing the burden of the appeal that comes from your conscience.

Next I would speak a word to all of you who yearn for true democracy. For some time now we have been entrapped by a violent dictatorial oppression under which we are not able to express our genuine opinions, and under which we have become accustomed to the false elective processes, the fraudulence, and the violence of the political authorities. Fundamentally democracy means freedom of speech. The time has come for us to cast off our fear, open our gagged mouths and call forth a storm of speech. Such an outcry must lead to the opening of the blocked ears of the dictatorial rulers. The best way to prevent dictatorship and bring about democracy is to teach our dictatorial rulers to fear the strength of the people. Each one of us must be armed with righteous courage, and we must gather our scattered forces into one organized whole. Dictatorial authority seeks to divide and rule. We must not be taken in by schemes which seek to alienate students from the rest of the population, or the campuses from the military. We must judge the real situation accurately with our eyes wide open.

Democracy is never something which is handed to us by someone else. Democracy is a value which we must grasp, pursue and build for ourselves. Democracy in this country will finally rest upon bedrock only when we fully prove the vastness of the strength which flows from the just conscience of a peaceful and nonviolent democratic citizenry. If violence, division and oppression are the weapons of the present regime, our weapons must be reconciliation, unity and forgiveness. We may have nothing, and we may have no help, but history and the God of Justice are on our side. Dictatorial rule carries within it the fearful possibility of destruction, yet we believe that in the end there is hope that we will establish true democracy with our own hands. And holding fast to this best hope is indeed our strongest, final defense as we work for the day when we shall raise our cheers for democracy.

Finally, I will address a last word to myself. I am a firm believer in democracy who was not able to establish democracy in this nation even after the lesson of the assassination of Park Chung-hee in October, 1979, and who was not able to prevent the tragedy in Kwangju in 1980. I am an activist who must take to heart his responsibility to serve this nation and people without regard to personal feelings or gain. And I am not a quitter, who must willingly carry any burden which may be required in behalf of internal peace and peace on the Korean peninsula through the establishing of democracy, or in behalf of the reunification of our divided people. As long as I may live, as such a humble, but determined man I will continue my patriotic dedication to the cause of democracy.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, July 3, 1984.

KIM YOUNG SAM,
c/o Dr. Woong K. Cho,
Vicksburg, MI.

DEAR FRIEND: Thank you very much for your recent note expressing your support of my work in the Senate.

I am grateful for your comments and appreciate your taking the time to write. I hope that you will continue to share your views with me in the months ahead and look forward to working with you for the goals we share for the country.

Thank you again for your thoughtful letter.

With best wishes,
Sincerely,

EDWARD M. KENNEDY.

FORCED RELOCATION IN SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I recently received a small booklet entitled "The Myth of Voluntary Removals" published by the Transvaal Rural Action Committee in Johannesburg, South Africa. It contains a report on the policy of forced relocation of black people being implemented by the Government of South Africa; 3½ million people have already been moved from their homes, and another 2 million are still scheduled to be moved in the future.

I commend this report to everyone who cares about human dignity and human rights. This report makes absolutely clear that the South African Government's policy of forced relocation continues unabated and that the era of "voluntary removals" is nothing more than a clever public relations campaign. As the report states:

The basic question is whether sweet-talk alone is enough to convince people to leave their homes and everything they have built up and participate in their own removal . . .

In many cases it succeeds; removals become "voluntary." Not because the people concerned want to go, but because their resistance is not united enough and well organized enough to bring the force involved in removals into the open. In many cases people are terrified of challenging the State precisely because they know this will bring force into play. For different and varied reasons, some communities crumble at one of the early stages in the process of "persuasion" and another "voluntary" removal has been accomplished.

This report is important, not only because it provides us with a sharp analysis of governmental policy in South Africa with respect to forced relocation, but also because it has details of specific instances. We learn about Botlokwa in Northern Transvaal in 1979, about Mathopiestad in the Western Transvaal, about Kwa Ngema in the Eastern Transvaal and about Mogopa. As the report states:

The majority of people who have been moved have been moved as individual families, one by one off white farms or out of locations. These are the saddest and most lonely removals at all. They happen with eviction notices and endorsement-out stamps. They generally happen to people with no legal rights who cannot legally stop them. Often these people refuse to leave their houses, or they are arrested, or their houses are burnt down, but in the end they have to go.

And, once again, we are told of the brute force used by the authorities to remove the people of Mogopa.

In the early hours of 14th February, Mogopa was surrounded by armed police. At 4 a.m. the people were informed through loud hailers that they must load their possessions into trucks and go to Pachsdraai. Nobody was allowed to leave their houses. Jacob More took the police and the officials to the houses of all the leaders first. They were handcuffed and put into police vans. Their families refused to pack their possession; Government laborers did so. Women were carried into the lorries and buses. People tried to run away and children were loaded with the furniture and dispatched to Pachsdraai. All of this happened in the presence of armed policemen who had dogs at their disposal. People caught standing together outside their houses were beaten with batons. Parents became desperate to find their children and got onto the buses to Pachsdraai to go and look for them there.

The policy of forced relocation now being implemented by the Government of South Africa is abhorrent to civilized society throughout the world. We cannot be silent about such gross abuses of human dignity and human rights, and the Government of the United States should join with other nations of the world to pursue policies aimed at halting forced relocations and ultimately eliminating apartheid from the face of the Earth.

I request that this nine-page report be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE MYTH OF VOLUNTARY REMOVALS

[From TRAC—A Black Sash Project]

INTRODUCTION

After the outcry over the conditions of starvation and suffering in the Resettlement Camps of the '60s and '70s the State began to soften its methods of relocating Black people. In the last few years senior government officials have repeatedly stated that the era of forced removals is over.

In June 1983 the Deputy Minister of Development and Land Affairs, Hennie van der Walt, told the Vaderland: "I readily admit that we made mistakes in the past. So much so that black communities had to be removed by force and often resettled in critical circumstances. Our biggest mistake was that we did not undertake these resettlement actions in cooperation with the black communities. A lack of consultation between the government and the black people concerned led to numerous unfortunate incidents. In 1980, the then Commission for Co-operation and Development found that resettlement of people where only a tent, hut or bucket latrine were available was no longer acceptable. The days when police had to help load people onto trucks and the resistance which followed certain actions amongst black people are past." (Quoted in RDM, 18.11.83)

However, there have been no statements that the removal of black people from their homes to areas within the Reserves will stop. Throughout this recent period of "reform", removals have continued apace. The S.P.P. estimates that at least two million people are scheduled to be moved in the future.

But according to the State they are to be moved "nicely". A 1982 government circular sent to all officials in charge of individual removals says: "In the course of the settlement process, persons must be treated with the necessary human kindness at all times. Those being settled must be treated with respect and sympathy for their problems, and the impression must not be created that they are no longer welcome in the white areas. The sincerity and reasonableness of the Government's policy of separate development must constantly, whenever the opportunity arises, be explained and emphasized. Under no circumstances should an action be taken which would give Black persons reason to be dissatisfied." (General Circular No. 2 1982, pp 43 & 44.)

Clearly this is part of a "hearts and minds" campaign. The State has ushered in the era of "Voluntary Removals". How successful will this new approach be? The basic question is whether sweet-talk alone is enough to convince people to leave their homes and everything they have built up and participate in their own removal.

Recent events in the Transvaal show that it is not. They also show that the sweet-talk runs out very early in the process of "persuasion"—in fact as soon as there is any sign of resistance. The State follows a fairly set pattern in dealing with communities under threat of removal. The stages of this pattern involve an escalating use of force. If the Community crumbles at the first attempt to divide it the removal issue becomes lost in a confusion of "leadership splits", "tribal disputes" and "voluntary removals". Co-operation and Development has kept its hands clean (publicly anyway) and can sigh sadly at the Blacks' propensity to squabble amongst themselves. However, if the gentle nudgings of parked bulldozers, no pensions, no passes, smashed schools and no water are ignored, and the people still refuse to move, the gloves come off. The community is given a D-day and told, that on that day, they will be moved.

It is at this point that the issue is recognized as a "Forced Removal" and factors such as local and international support and pressure come into play. It is precisely this arena the State wishes to avoid for its removal programme. In many cases it succeeds; removals become "voluntary". Not because the people concerned want to go, but because their resistance is not united enough and well organised enough to bring the force involved in removals into the open. In many cases people are terrified of challenging the State precisely because they know this will bring force into play. For different and varied reasons some communities crumble at one of the early stages in the process of "persuasion" and another "voluntary" removal has been accomplished.

THE STAGES OF PERSUASION

1. The timing

Communities first learn that they are under threat of removal when it is announced to them by the local Commissioner and Pretoria officials at a specially called meeting. If there is an immediate strong negative reaction these officials may disappear for years and only return when there is evidence that the community is in a weak position, or there is some evidence of a split in the community. The example of Mogopa illustrates this well. The people boast about the number of officials they sent scampering over the years and the way in which they managed to preserve the status quo. However, in September 1981 the tribe voted to despose their headman, Jacob More, for corruption and failing to respond to tribal discipline. The local Commissioner refused to accept their decision and created a furore by saying, "I as a white man and Magistrate of this whole area say Jacob More will rule until he dies." (As an agent of the State President who is Paramount Chief of all Blacks, he was legally quite within his powers in making this statement). A Commission of Enquiry was set up to investigate the headman's financial dealings, hundreds of men came to give evidence over several weeks and during this time the Pretoria officials returned and informed the people they would have to move. There was the customary outcry and refusal. But this time the officials did not go away. They stayed to "negotiate" with Jacob More.

A similar thing happened in Botlokwa in the Northern Transvaal in 1979. An area ruled by 3 chiefs was scheduled to be moved. Two of the chiefs were vehemently opposed to the removal, the third was scared and out of his depth. The government started with him.

With the vast number of South Africans still to be moved the State can afford to bide its time in any particular case and get busy in those areas where there are weaknesses in the community.

2. Divide and rule

2.1 Setting up your partner

The State places a lot of emphasis on "consultation" these days. It doesn't really matter what happens in the consultation as long as it is seen to occur. However, it is obviously much easier for the Government if their partners in consultation are friendly. To this end, in virtually every black spot removal, the person recognised by the State as "chief" is offered all sorts of perks on condition that he co-operates.

In Mathopiestad in the Western Transvaal the chief was offered a big house previously occupied by a White farmer. He was also offered proper accommodation for all his extended family at Onderstepoort if he agreed to move there. He did agree, and shortly afterwards died of an undiagnosed stomach complaint in mysterious circumstances.

The people of the semi-rural location at Badplaas were ordered to move on Wednesday, 11 January, this year. The area designated for them is a tin toilet town thirty kilometres away. It has none of the now usual brick schools and clinics. The people were told they would get a R200 "parting gift" from the Public Resort at Badplaas, but no compensation for their houses or improvements. Their chief, on the other hand, was offered a White farm of his choice for the use of himself and his royal kraal, on condition that he did not obstruct the removal of the villagers to the tin toilet town in Ka-Ngwane. (He is Johannes Dlamini, a senior Swazi chief and ex-homeland leader). He refused the offer and not one Badplaas resident complied with the removal deadline of 11 January 1984.

At Mogopa the removal was negotiated secretively, behind closed doors, between Co-operation and Development officials and the deposed headman and some of his cohorts, named a "planning committee". The Mogopa people applied to their lawyers to have the meetings made open to the villagers. But this never happened. Then in June 1983 bulldozers smashed the schools and churches at Mogopa and some of the houses. A minority moved to Pachsdraai. All the facilites at Pachsdraai were given to the deposed headman and his "planning committee" to allocate. They allocated themselves the White farm houses there. The doors and window frames and roofing materials from the smashed schools at Mogopa are now in a big shed in the deposed chief's yard at Pachsdraai. Mogopa was bought communally in 1913 and divided equally between the buyers, now the allocation of all the fields and grazing land at Pachsdraai is controlled by Jacob More, a man deposed because of his corrupt use of the tribe's resources.

There are many places where Co-operation and Development officials cannot find leaders prepared to negotiate the removal and so set up certain individuals as their consulting partners. An example of this strategy is shown in the Kwa Ngema story. Kwa Ngema is a very fertile and beautiful black spot in the Eastern Transvaal. A certain Stuurman Ngema was given the land in 1904 by King Edward the Seventh. Since then his heirs and successors have lived there as a large extended family with tenants who hire some of the land from them. As privately owned land Kwa Ngema is not part of the tribal authority system and the system of chiefdom does not apply to it. A loose system operates whereby a member of the family is chosen to be a representative in dealings with outsiders. If this person is seen as unsatisfactory, he is changed. This happened in 1982. One Gabriel Ngema, the family's representative, was rejected by the family because of his willingness to negotiate the removal of Kwa Ngema. He was then replaced by the Ngema Committee, chaired by Moses Ngema. Both Gabriel and the Ngema Committee went to the Magistrate in Wakkerstroom to inform him of the change of leadership. There then began a long battle. Co-operation and Development officials continued to deal with Gabriel, for example in numbering houses and organising buses "to view the new area". The Ngema Committee has proved its community support to officials in numerous general meetings. Again and again all assembled say: "We support the Ngema Committee, not Gabriel; we are not prepared to move."

In September last year, Co-operation and Development sent a Government ethnologist to Kwa Ngema. He decided that "Gabriel Ngema is the successor of the late Stuurman and, therefore, the Government has no other option but to deal with him alone". This is not how Alfred Ngema, the oldest person at Kwa Ngema, sees the situation: "Gabriel is not a chief, and they are wrong when they say that if our chief leaves we must also go. Gabriel's role was that of being a watchman, the same as a security guard at a firm. I don't remember a single case of a security guard selling a firm. Even that role of being a watchman he no longer has. We threw him out in 1982 and he knows that very well. That is why he wants to move, he wants to ruin everyone here because he has no power over us since his position as a watchman was cancelled. He has never been a chief in any way. They know he was put to one side by the people. Let him go in a bus by himself on the 15th to those new places he wants to see." Gabriel Ngema died in February 1984. As yet there has been no indication from the State as to what its next step will be.

The most recent, and one of the most disturbing examples of the setting up of leaders is taking place in Driefontein at the moment. Driefontein is the black spot in the Eastern Transvaal where the resistance leader Saul Mkhize was shot dead when police arrived at a community meeting on April 2 last year.

After his death Koornhof had a meeting with representatives form Driefontein. He met not only the Council Board of Directors (Saul Mkhize's committee), but also Steven Msibi and his committee which had been ousted by the community in December 1982. Koornhof urged to two groups to come together and form a "Planning Committee" to negotiate with the government. On 4 June the Chief Commissioner went to Driefontein and held a meeting there in an attempt to establish the committee. He was informed that the people were not prepared to elect such a committee, or participate in it. After that meeting there was a long silence from Co-operation and Development with no officials visiting the area or dealing with leaders of any description. Then on 27 February this year an unidentified government official accompanied by 4 policemen, held a meeting in Driefontein. Three chiefs from the wider Piet Retief area were invited, as were some people from Iswepe and Piet Retief. A member of the Council Board of Directors of Directora sat in on the meeting, which was on their land. The member reports that the official told the chiefs to recruit Driefontein people to be their followers. The Driefontein Committee is furious. They have never been governed by chiefs, nor did they invite these people to have a meeting on their land.

Thus we see how when a true leader is killed, and a discredited leader refuses to cooperate, new leaders are made.

The process of dividing communities by setting up, bribing and manipulating leaders is generally effective, from the State's point of view. The question of whether to resist or to collaborate splits families down the middle. Once a "leader" has agreed to move and the new area has been bought and developed by the State, the resisters, even if they are in the vast majority, are utterly insecure. It is a primary necessity for the State that someone agree to go somewhere. Then that somewhere can be developed and the physical removal set in progress. This explains the strong focus and convoluted manoeuvering around the leadership issue.

But there are other methods of dividing communities.

2.2 Legals and illegals

An unknown number of the locations of country towns have been moved and are under threat of removal at present. Field work is just beginning to uncover the vast scale of these removals. Sometimes the whole location is meant to go into a nearby homeland (e.g., Badplaas); in other cases a kernel of people is to be retained in a model township and the rest endorsed into a homeland. This is the situation in the Eastern Transvaal township of Leandra where the "legals" are going to live in a model township and the "illegals" are to be sent to Kwa Ndebele. The township is a settled community and the people there say that there are no "illegals" but right now Administration Board officials are sorting Section 10 (1) a and b people from the rest.

2.3 Landlords and tenants

Virtually all Black spots are densely populated. This is because they provide a haven for Blacks evicted from white towns and farms. Sometimes these people live as farming tenants and sometimes as refugee-guests, "squatters" in Government terminology. Officials often try to drive a wedge between these people and the original occupants who have title to the land. In some cases, they offer the landless access to land in the new area, for example, a high proportion of the Mogopa people who moved to Pachsdraai were landless. In other areas they moved the tenants before the landlords, for example, at Matjakaneng near Brits. This leaves a few now vulnerable landowners to be dealt with at leisure.

2.4 Men and women

Officials often visit the threatened areas during the week while the men are away at work. They end up dealing with the people left at home—the very old, the very young, and women. Often the women ask the officials to return at an arranged time over the weekend and they refuse. This can work both ways. In Mogopa it appears that many women agreed to move. In Makgato (Northern Transvaal) the women picked up spades and picks and drew a line between themselves and the officials and said: "You cross this line by your own decision". They didn't.

2.5 One at a time

The majority of people who have been moved have been moved as individual families, one by one off white farms, or out of locations. These are the saddest and most lonely removals of all. They happen with eviction notices and endorsement-out stamps. They generally happen to people with no legal rights who cannot legally stop them. Often these people refuse to leave their houses, or they are arrested, or their houses are burnt down, but in the end they have to go.

Late last year all the people in Driefontein and Kwa Ngema got individual letters from Co-operation and Development asking them to visit the magistrate in Wakkerstroom. Oddly enough, this strategy was short-lived—on arrival in Wakkerstroom the Magistrate refused to see them.

2.6 Stratification

The 1982 Government Circular which has already been quoted lays down the conditions under which people will be "resettled". Those who own land and have urban rights are to get tarred roads and lots of taps. Those with more tenuous rights get less and less. At the bottom of the pile are evicted farm workers, who get dumped in the veld with nothing. What this means in practice is that some people may be moved to make way for others further up the hierarchy.

The Kwa Ngema people have a deed of gift which shows that the farm Kaffir-Locatie is made for their occupation. Black spot dwellers such as they are meant to be moved to equal land with equal resources, and they have been offered Lochiel as their new area. But there are already people at Lochiel who have been living there for close on a century. This community has no title deeds. They have been told that they are going to be moved into KaNgwane to make way for the Ngema people who want their land! The Lochiel people would leave behind their land, on which new schools would be built for the Ngema people, but no new schools would be given to the Lochiel people in KaNgwane.

These divisions have a debilitating and disorganizing effect on communities under threat of removal. But in all the communities we know about, people have continued to resist despite all attempts to divide them.

When the attempts to divide fail to get rid of the people the State brings the next stage of "persuasion" into play.

3. Restrictions in the threatened area

3.1 Prohibiting meetings

In many cases the people resisting removal are not allowed to hold public meetings to discuss their situation and plan their response—even when these meetings are on their own land. At Mgwali in the Eastern Cape the only public means of communication is through church services. Saul Mkhize was shot dead on Easter weekend last year while addressing an open air meeting at Driefontein. The meeting was "illegal" because he had not applied to the magistrate for permission. (An earlier application for permission had been granted on condition that only "Landowners in Driefontein will attend the meeting".)

Recently at Kwa Ngema a meeting of residents held under a roof, in the school was told to disperse because the Magistrate had not been applied to in advance.

3.2 Creating slums

In some cases communities have been resisting removal for over 10 years—and in these years the facilities in the area, such as schools and roads and clinics, are not extended or maintained by the local authorities. In Driefontein people collected money to improve the roads and gave this to the Wakkerstroom Commissioner. No improvements have been made and in bad weather it is impossible to drive from one end of Driefontein to the other. Critically sick people have to be carried out. In Huhudi in the Northern Cape, the residents have tried to take things into their own hands, but no one is allowed to so much as add a room to a house or fix a broken wall. This strategy is particularly effective in urban areas. Families have to squash more and more people into already over-crowded houses because no new ones are being built. In desperation people move away from the urban areas to nicely laid out areas on Trust Farms adjoining homelands.

The East Rand Administration Board has not had the "finances available" to provide housing on the Reef, but has just built a model township at Ekangela in Kwa Ndebele near Bronkhorstspruit for Section 10 people who will have to commute 90 kilometres to work and lose their urban rights in the process. People are moving there, some we spoke to said they had been on housing waiting lists for many years. During that time they were squashed into township houses with other families. Poorer people, who don't have rights and come from white rural areas go to a less fancy place, Hartebeesfontein, near Brits, where the lucky get a tin shack, the less lucky a tent, and most a bit of veld.

3.3 Cutting off services

The degeneration of the place where people live influences some people to go elsewhere, but I don't know of any case where it has persuaded people to move en masse. Those remaining can now expect that their existing services will be cut off.

In Mogopa, for example, pensions were not paid, annual labour contracts were not stamped, the bus service was cut off, and the shop owner's licenses were not renewed. In early January 1984, the Mogopa Committee managed to correct most of these problems by confronting the local magistrate at various times. It now appears that he conceded to lull them into a false sense of security so that no one would expect the predawn police blitz and forced removal on 14 February.

There is an ongoing battle in Driefontein to get pensions paid and young people issued with reference books, and no easy solution is in sight.

If the community refuses to move after a non-representative "leader" and a small band of followers have left, the schools and churches used by those remaining behind are smashed down.

When Jacob More left Mogopa to go to Pachsdraai in the middle of last year only about 10 families went with him. (Because all his negotiations with the State thus far had been secret, very few people knew what was going on). After this rather feeble exodus a new effort was made to convince people to leave. It was during this time that women were approached during the week and told that they must agree to have their houses numbered. The majority refused, but some agreed. Lorries came to fetch them, and bulldozers smashed their houses as they left, then the bulldozers moved onto the schools and the churches. Officials took the engines from the water pumps away and the story goes that Jacob More threw diesel in their remaining water. The bulldozer was left camped next to the demolished school.

The same thing happened at Makgato in 1979. There the people were able to run away and stay in neighbouring villages when the officials came. After their houses were smashed down they came back to rebuild them. Eventually they won a reprieve from the Government and Makgato is now a settled flourishing community once again.

4. D-day

If the cutting-off of services doesn't work, the government brings the use of force a little closer. The Badplaas people are meant to have moved a year ago, but not one person has left. So in November 1983 Co-operation and Development brought a removal squad and camped it at the entrance of the location. Scores of lorries, houses and tractors are lined up next to the tents where Co-operation and Development labourers sleep. Notices were issued to the villagers that they must move by 11 January. Still they didn't go. Instead the international press converged on Badplaas on 11th January and nothing happened.

The same D-Day tactic flopped in Mogopa. There the villagers took legal action to have the removal squad which was parked on their land removed—on grounds of trespass. They were successful, but immediately the camp was dismantled, they received an Order signed by the State President and Dr. Koornhof that they must leave Mogopa by 29th November 1983 and never return there. The Commissioner who read the Order told them if they didn't leave then they would be loaded up and moved by force.

There was an international outcry and church leaders, political groups, students, The Black Sash, and press camped at Mogopa waiting for the police and trucks to arrive. Needless to say they changed their plans, and did not come, then.

5. The waiting game

What does the State do once they have smashed the schools, stopped the transport, cut off the water, threatened force—and people still refuse to move? One of the most effective things it does is to do nothing. It waits. There is a limit to how long people can live without schools, without pensions, without migrant labour contracts and with daily uncertainty about their future. If it is a matter of who can sit it out, the State is the more likely winner.

After the June demolitions in Mogopa, families began to drift off. Not to Pachsdraai and the hated Jacob More, but to relatives in Bethanie and on the Reef. This meant that they received no compensation, either for their land, with its white owned diamond mine or for their houses and all the communal improvements their families had contributed to since 1913. It makes the removal easier for the state. (One wonders why Pachsdraai cost R8 million, according to Koornhof.)

However, in early December the Mogopa villagers met together and decided that they would take joint action to rebuild Mogopa. They installed a new pump and collected money to start building a new school. People stopped leaving. In January they went to the Commissioner about the pension and pass problems, and managed to solve these. On the 9th January they began rebuilding the school and fixing the roads. Men and women left their jobs to work full-time on the reconstruction of Mogopa. Within a month the school was finished. Everyone was convinced they would be left in peace. Hadn't Louis Nel (Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs) told them in front of the foreign press that they would not be thrown out into the street? Hadn't Koornhof said that the era of forced removals was over? But, more immediate than any other reason—hadn't they suffered enough?

Through their great courage and hard work the Mogopa people had won the waiting game. So the Government had to act.

6. Brute force

In the early hours of 14th February, Mogopa was surrounded by armed police. At 4 a.m. the people were informed through loud hailers that they must load their possessions into trucks and go to Pachsdraai. Nobody was allowed to leave their houses. Jacob More took the police and the officials to the houses of all the leaders first. They were handcuffed and put into police vans. Their families refused to pack their possessions; Government labourers did so. Women were carried into the lorries and buses. People tried to run away and children were loaded with the furniture and dispatched to Pachsdraai. All of this happened in the presence of armed policemen who had dogs at their disposal. People caught standing together outside their houses were beaten with batons. Parents became desperate to find their children, and got onto the buses to Pachsdraai to go and look for them there.

No outsiders were allowed into Mogopa. The press, diplomats, priests, lawyers and members of The Black Sash, were turned back at the entrance to Mogopa. Those who managed to sneak in through back ways were caught and charged. The police initially said Mogopa was an "Operational Area" but subsequently corrected this; they said that since it was Black land, no whites were allowed to enter—excepting the police, of course, and the white farmers who had free access in and out to buy the people's livestock at a tenth of its value.

CONCLUSION

So here we are, back in the era of forced removals. But we must realize that we never left it. Force underlies every step of the "process of persuasion". To talk about "Voluntary Removal" is a contradiction in terms. Dr. Koornhof's own words indicate the contradiction. He said in Parliament in February 1983;

"I therefore want to tell the honourable members that when they rise to their feet here and try to make everyone believe the falsehoods which they wish to bruit abroad about thousands of people who are going to be moved, as was said again this afternoon, when they also imply that those are forced removals then they do not know what they are talking about."

Yet, significantly, in the same speech he said: "I am on record as stating that the Government and I will do everything possible to abolish the forced removal of people as far as practicable and possible."

There are laws remaining on our Statute Books which make talk of reform and voluntary removals utterly ridiculous. There is the 1927 Black Administration Act which states that the State President may order any black tribe or black person or group of blacks to move from any area to any other area. This law takes no account of any process of expropriation, compensation or negotiation. In the Mogopa case lawyers argued that the order must be discussed by Parliament before it could be executed. The Supreme Court rejected their argument and the lawyers were refused leave to appeal against this judgement.

There is also the Black Prohibition of Interdicts Act of 1956, in terms of which Black people have no common law right to apply for a interdict to stop a removal, whether the removal be legal or not.

There are too many laws like these for us to be able to list them here. They are described in Volume I of the Surplus People's Project Report on forced removals.

However unequal the struggle in terms of the law, in terms of the State's access to military and police force, and its access to money and resources, people continue to resist removal. They know too much about the lives of the three and a half million people already moved to accept the same fate meekly. (This means that over ten percent of the population has already been moved and if the process is ever completed one in every five South Africans will have been moved.)

The Mogopa people have lost their land, their diamonds and a great deal of their livestock and furniture, yet they continue to resist the Government's plans for them. Within a month they had left the hated Pachsdraai and gone to settle in Bethanie, the home of their paramount chief. Because no one is allowed to enter Mogopa now the Mogopa people got special permission to go back there recently. The purpose of their visit—to break down their brand new school which was left standing there. The same people who built it went to fetch the roof and the door and window frames. They are using these to build again in Bethanie.

ROY L. WORTHINGTON: TENNESSEE MAYOR OF THE YEAR

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, cities and counties across the United States are the governments closest to the people. After all, it is at the local level that our children are educated, our neighborhoods are made safe, and our streets are kept in repair.

As the ranking Democrat on the Senate Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations and a three-term member of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, I frequently work with mayors and other local officials to find ways the Federal Government can best help them keep their communities running smoothly.

Officials from cities in Tennessee find an opportunity to sharpen their policy leadership skills and exchange ideas through participation in the municipal league. At the summer meeting of the TML, Mayor Roy L. Worthington was named the 1984 Mayor of the Year. He is now serving his third term as mayor of Manchester, TN.

The choice is a good one. Mayor Worthington is representative of the many fine leaders of local governments throughout our State. His accomplishments on behalf of the city of Manchester are many and he works well with his colleagues at the Tennessee Municipal League.

I ask unanimous consent that a front page article highlighting the career of Mayor Worthington, published in the July 9, 1984, Tennessee Town & City, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORTHINGTON IS MAYOR OF YEAR

Manchester Mayor Roy L. Worthington was acclaimed 1984 Mayor of the Year at this year's TMC Conference. Mayor Worthington, an obvious favorite of his TML colleagues, was greeted by a standing ovation when President Joe Taylor made the long-awaited announcement.

At home Roy is so popular that he was unopposed for his third consecutive term as mayor (a feat not equalled in the memory of the oldest Manchester city officials).

His accomplishments include the purchase and installation of an automated refuse collection system for residential service, a bold and cost-saving step envied by larger municipalities throughout the state. He obtained a TVA grant for an ongoing study to convert solid waste to energy. He also obtained an energy grant for a city-wide energy conservation program.

Conventioneers especially enjoyed a humorous account of how a city as small as Manchester was able to get three Interstate interchanges and how Mayor Worthington got lighting for all of them.

Mayor Worthington, a former President of the Chamber of Commerce, is actively involved in the downtown revitalization program. In 1983 he was named the Manchester C of C's Outstanding Member.

The active mayor has purchased an Emergency I fire truck and a platform fire truck, with the resultant reduction of ISO fire rating from Class 6 to Class 4—an outstanding rating for a city the size of Manchester. He was also instrumental in the purchase of a speaker system for the court house square to be used for civic activities and in emergencies.

Among the Boards Roy Worthington serves on, only a few can be mentioned in one breath: Chairman of the Governor's Tennessee Job Training Council for Coffee and surrounding counties, Chairman of the Elk River Boy Scout Council Fund Drive (bringing in 120% over the goal), Chairman of six counties in the District Ten Job Partnership, district Board member of TML for two terms, Board of Trustees of TML Insurance Pool, Board of South Central Tenn. Development District, and Board of Directors of his church.

Worthington, who is responsible, along with the governor, for initiating "Manchester Time to Shine Day," toured Manchester, England in July 1983, with a hometown choral group, the Westwood Singers.

He is also vitally concerned with neighbors closer to home. He has been active in the recruitment of industry for Manchester, Coffee County and other areas of Tennessee. A joint water system with Tullahoma has been completed during his administration and he serves as a member of the Tri-County L&N Railroad Committee with the goal of maintaining an operating railroad from Tullahoma to Sparta.

For the TML membership at large he has been equally active, attending Board functions with regularity and consistency, making the trips with vigor and evident interest whenever called upon.

Worthington, a widower, may be hedging his bets lest he one day lose a mayoral election. Each week he commutes to Nashville to attend classes at the YMCA Law School. Could he, perhaps, be eyeing yet another award in the not too distant future: "City Attorney of the Year?"

RECEIPT BY JUANITA THORNTON OF THE PRESIDENT'S PRIVATE SECTOR INITIATIVE COMMENDATION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, today I would like to recognize an exceptional native South Carolinian, Ms. Juanita Thornton on her receipt of President Reagan's Private Sector Initiative Commendation. This award is presented to distinguished citizens who provide exemplary volunteer service for the people of our Nation.

Mr. President, Ms. Thornton is a native of Columbia, SC and has served as a trustee of Allen University, her alma mater. As a schoolteacher in the Washington, DC, public school system, Ms. Thornton spent 15 years teaching the youth of our Nation's Capital and became the volunteer head of the D.C. Commission on Aging in 1978. Since accepting this position she has instituted many successful programs aimed at providing the elderly with a better livelihood and a stronger voice regarding the events which affect their daily lives. Additionally, through the commission, she started a program which teaches illiterate older Americans how to read and write. Her remarkable efforts have resulted in greater involvement by the elderly in the proceedings of their local government.

Ms. Thornton has also served older citizens by fighting to keep utility rates down in the District and to increase the number of nursing homes available to the elderly.

Mr. President, earlier this year, Ms. Thornton was honored by the Washingtonian magazine as one of the "1983 Washingtonians of the Year" for her exceptional efforts to make the Nation's Capital a better city. I commend Ms. Thornton for her extraordinary volunteer service to the community and for her many achievements.

THE COMBINATION OF JONATHAN SCHELL AND PRESIDENT REAGAN

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I recently had the pleasure of reading an article by Philip W. Buchen in which Mr. Buchen points out that Jonathan Schell and President Reagan have one thing in common: They are both deeply committed to abolishing all nuclear weapons from the face of the Earth.

I, too, believe quite strongly that we must never lose sight of this ultimate arms control goal, a goal which is clearly stated in section 2 of the Arms Control and Disarmament Act. As stated in section 6 of Senate Joint Resolution 212, which the Foreign Relations Committee passed in 1982, the United States should continue to press month after month, year after year, to achieve balanced, stabilizing reductions, looking at the earliest possible time to the elimination of all nuclear weapons from the world's arsenals.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article by Mr. Buchen, titled "The Combination of Jonathan Schell and President Reagan," be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMBINATION OF JONATHAN SCHELL AND PRESIDENT REAGAN

With "The Fate of the Earth," Jonathan Schell, a writer of engaging skill, made an earnest literary effort to improve the world's chances of avoiding a nuclear war. By his detailed and vivid account of the destructive consequences to earthly life and its environment if nations were to employ their present-day nuclear weapons, he sought to persuade his readers that without a world government which would entirely eliminate these weapons, the earth could never be safe.

About the time the book appeared in 1982, the peace movement against nuclear arms was reaching its most recent high. It too was an earnest effort to save the world from a nuclear war. Its principal method at that time was to develop political opposition against the nuclear arms policy of President Reagan's administration and its NATO allies. The effects of the Schell book and of the peace movement have been about the same. Neither has noticeably begun to relieve the world from the danger into which it has been placed by the nuclear arsenals of the major powers.

More recently, Jonathan Schell has acknowledged faults with both his book and the peace movement. He cites the pastoral letter of the American Roman Catholic bishops as typical of the movement. The strong point of the letter was its effort to raise people's moral concern over the problem of nuclear weapons. Its weakness lay in the moderate and partial solutions which the bishops urged of a nuclear freeze on the part of all nations and a pledge by each of no-first-nuclear-use. Schell was even weaker in this regard, because after alarming his readers with his account of the enormous peril of nuclear weapons, he proposed no salutary action at all for them to pursue. Instead of a plan, he had only the vision of a single government for the world which would rule out the possession and use everywhere of nuclear weapons.

Needless to say, his visionary resolution of the problem detracted from Schell's provocative analysis of the problem. Without the encouragement of an achievable and effective outcome, Schell's readers, as well as participants in the peace movement, have been left without the resolve which people need to continue confronting a problem so large and forbidding as this one.

Jonathan Schell's current book just published is The Abolition. The title relates back to abolition of slavery, but the contents relate to ridding the world of nuclear weapons. Making up for the fault he finds with his original book on the nuclear weapons problem, the author now has a goal to propose which he argues is attainable.

His goal for the world is no less than complete nuclear disarmament through international negotiations and treaties. He proposes it notwithstanding that the Harvard Nuclear Study Group in its Living with Nuclear Weapons and editors of the New York Times have concluded that no such goal could ever be achieved. He concedes also that within the peace movement as it has developed up to now, the possibility of full nuclear disarmament if mentioned at all, is treated in a perfunctory and almost casual way.

Neither of these common attitudes toward abolition of nuclear weapons deters Schell. He is impelled rather by the pointlessness of taking steps to cut back on levels of nuclear weapons if such steps are not to lead in time to eliminating completely the danger of their existence and thus of their accidental or intentional use. Schell makes his case for full nuclear disarmament without alluding directly to the precedents that the world has in reality freed itself from slavery and, more to the point, that nations have accepted as a commitment and as a real possibility the total elimination of biological and chemical weapons. These precedents do suggest that the ruling powers of the world can think practically, as Schell has proposed, of going all the way to rid the earth of such an equally evil presence as nuclear weapons.

Schell admits that out of this evil presence arises some virtue, which reassures those who accept the evil as necessary or inevitable. The virtue comes from the international stability attributable to the mutual deterrence that nuclear weapons now provide by their presence. His idea of abolition would not remove this virtue. Powerful nations would still know how to restart their construction of nuclear weapons, and even in their disarmed condition they would maintain a capacity to do so. That capacity in itself should operate as a deterrent against any armed attack which might provoke the nation attacked into reinstituting nuclear weapons as a countermeasure.

Schell makes a special effort to rally readers to his abolition proposal who would otherwise support only a partial reduction of nuclear weapons, one that would still leave in place relatively sparse nuclear arsenals like those of the British and French for a "minimum deterrence." To the surprise no doubt of all his readers, he cites both President Carter and President Reagan as true nuclear abolitionists because each has "hinted" that total nuclear disarmament and nothing less is his objective. Schell is correct about President Reagan's hint to that effect. Before an audience of students in June 1983 who had been awarded Presidential scholarships, he remarked: "I pray for the day when nuclear weapons will no longer exist anywhere on earth."

President Reagan has since that time done more than give a hint of where he places his goal for nuclear arms reduction. On May 22, 1984, the President forthrightly proclaimed: "My goal is the total elimination of nuclear weapons."

The President included this statement in his answer to a question at a news conference about the intensified fears people have over the risk of a third world war. An added part of his answer was his stated expectation that if only the Soviets would return to negotiations with the United States on the nuclear arms problem and "start down the road of mutual reduction, then they might find out what common sense it would mean to eliminate it."

In this way, the President has defined the direction in which he wants to move arms talks with the Soviets. Consistent with his announced goal, he would make any renewed negotiations but a first step toward complete nuclear disarmament. If he has intended by these words an out-and-out commitment to work for complete riddance of nuclear weapons, then the commitment is a momentous first for this President and probably a first for any leader of a nuclear-armed nation.

Furthermore, President Reagan's newly proclaimed goal for nuclear arms negotiations puts him in the abolitionist company of Jonathan Schell and also places him in the vanguard of the peace movement. It shows a determination to outdistance critics of his nuclear arms policy whose goals for nuclear disarmament are uncertain or more moderate and to set an objective which is far more worthy and appealing than theirs.

The question remains whether the President will give further signs of his remarkable commitment and will show a genuine interest in pursuing it. He had an opportunity to do so with his address on the nuclear arms problem to the Irish Parliament, but he shied away from It. One reason may have been the manner in which the press and public had received the first sign he had given just two weeks before then of his ambitious intentions for negotiations on nuclear arms reduction.

Taking part in the evening news conference, when the President had initially stated his intentions, were representatives of the major newspapers, news services, and broadcast networks. Even so, the statement went virtually unreported by the news media and seems to have evoked no public reaction. Moreover, when Senator Charles Percy asked Deputy Secretary of State Kenneth Dam at a Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on June 13, 1984, about the President's views on nuclear abolition, he responded in a gingerly manner that the President is "sympathetic" to the goal of totally eliminating nuclear weapons. This spokesman seems not yet to have learned about the President's own much bolder statement on the subject.

If the press and the public, as well as people in government who serve the President on arms control, would begin giving serious attention to the goal of total nuclear disarmament, then the President and Jonathan Schell may discover whether as nuclear abolitionists they can gain a following or whether in this respect they must remain a company of lonely visionaries.

SOCIAL SECURITY COLA, 1985

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, on July 26 the Senate overwhelmingly approved a measure which would provide that Social Security and supplemental security income beneficiaries receive a much-needed cost-of-living adjustment in January 1985. I firmly endorse the Senate's action, and hope that the House of Representatives will soon approve this measure, as well. The President has already expressed his support for this action, so Social Security retirees, the disabled, and supplemental security income beneficiaries throughout our Nation are all but assured a January COLA.

Prior to 1983, the law allowed an annual COLA for these beneficiaries every July 1, provided that the cost of living for the previous year rises by 3 percent or more. In 1983, as part of the Social Security financing package, the Congress and the President delayed the annual COLA for 6 months. While this delay translated into an actual loss in real terms, beneficiaries were willing to forgo their much-needed increase to do their part to make efforts to stabilize the then-ailing trust fund a success.

I might add that while not all provisions of the 1983 amendments were without criticism, the highest priority of the President, the Congress, and the American people was that of financial stability for this most important program. The Social Security financing amendments will remain one of the major achievements of the 98th Congress.

As part of the amendments, the assumption was made that in January 1985 the cost-of-living adjustment would be 4.7 percent at a cost to the trust fund of $8.3 billion in benefit payments. The legislation the Senate has approved allows for a January 1985 COLA of about 2.8 percent, roughly $3.3 billion less than the 1983 amendments estimated. And because, under the law, the increase in the cost of living for any year in which a January COLA increase is not given is automatically included in the next year's COLA, there is not a significant cost to the trust fund. The legislation merely provides for the increase on a timely basis. Social Security beneficiaries, by the nature of the way in which the COLA's are given, are already behind inflation. An additional year's delay would cause undue hardship to many beneficiaries.

The average monthly benefit for a single Social Security recipient is $425, and for aged couples is about $700 a month. While the January COLA would not amount to a considerable increase for these beneficiaries, it will help them to keep pace with inflation. Considering the high cost of energy, food, and health care, I believe that it is important.

In short, Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate has approved this legislation. It is a sensible and sensitive action. I would urge that the House of Representatives move swiftly to approve this measure so that the January 1985 benefit increase be ensured.

ASSISTANCE TO STATES AND LOCALITIES TO FIGHT THE WAR AGAINST DRUGS

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am pleased today to express my support of legislation to fight crime in the United States. I have joined my friend and colleague from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] in cosponsoring the State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act of 1984. This legislation will provide grants to the States to help improve the enforcement of State laws pertaining to the production, distribution, and use of controlled substances. With the alarming increase of cocaine and marijuana production and distribution we cannot turn our backs on the law enforcement officials who have to fight this battle on a day-to-day basis.

Certain of the mountainous rural areas in the State of Arkansas have beome centers for the production of marijuana and other controlled substances. Local law enforcement officials are vigorous in their efforts to fight this problem, but they are without the necessary equipment and other resources to deal with these sophisticated and dangerous individuals.

This legislation will appropriate $750 million for each of the fiscal years of 1986-90. This funding will be applied to the apprehension and prosecution of violators of State drug laws and for the eradication of illegally grown drug crops. This funding can also be applied to the expansion and construction of correctional facilities to insure that there are adequate facilities to detain the criminals that are prosecuted.

I believe a national war on drugs requires cooperation between Federal, State, and local governments. This legislation would keep the responsibility where it belongs on State and local officials to enforce State laws but it provides them resources that they desperately need to perform their duties.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KASTEN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

FOLLOWING THE BUDGET PROCESS

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, an hour from now we will have a second cloture vote on the motion to waive the Budget Act and proceed with the agriculture bill. The first cloture vote failed on Monday.

What this debate comes down to is a simple issue: Do we continue to spend without limits or do we follow the law which says that we must agree on spending limits first, and then pass our appropriations bills.

Mr. President, I often think back to the days in the early 1970's when we began to realize our spending procedures were uncontained. We took up appropriation after appropriation bill and no one added up the cost until the end of the year. And then, suddenly, when we saw the total, lo and behold, we were over.

I remember when I got on the Appropriations Committee, Senator Holland, who had been my predecessor, told me it took him 10 years to get on the Appropriations Committee, but he found that it was some of the best work he could do in the Senate. He encouraged me to try to get on the committee. I was fortunate; I got on after 2 years. The Senate was forced to allow me on the committee. But I remember, to my dismay, that the Appropriations Committee did not start off at the beginning of the year saying, "How much money do we have to spend and how do we set our priorities?" Spending just grew over the years. We had subcommittees and each one did not monkey with the other. Those people who were on the Defense Committee were there to try to get the money for defense and those people who were on the Health, Education, and Welfare Committee were trying to get money for that.

The other thing that surprised me was that the very members who would try to add money on the appropriation bill would then come to the floor and offer amendments to add even more money. Now, where I come from, back in Florida, when our appropriations committee, brought a spending bill to the floor, if somebody added one dime, we would pull that bill back and return to committee because we were not going to allow that to happen.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHILES. I will be happy to yield.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, may I suggest this. First, I have two housekeeping details I would like to take care of, and then what I would like to propose is that we bring down the unfinished business because there is a cloture vote at 12 o'clock and the order provides for the hour before that to be equally divided. I am willing to cede to the distinguished Senator from Florida the time necessary to make up his full 30 minutes, and I make that request at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair state the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER—AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the pending business.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Motion to waive section 303 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 in relation to the consideration of H.R. 5743, the 1985 agriculture appropriations bill, as reported.

The Senate resumed consideration of the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I cede to the distinguished Senator from Florida the time necessary from this side to make up the full 30 minutes allocated under the order, and I am willing to give him more than that.

The chairman of the Budget Committee is not on the floor at the present time, and for the moment I recommend that the Senator from Florida go forward, and I will be back, after taking care of some details as required.

Mr. President, I designate the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] to control the time remaining on this side on this debate.

Mr. CHILES. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I was reminiscing about the early 1970's before we passed the Budget Act.

At that time, we realized that we had started a lot of programs. We did not know what those programs were going to cost. It was easy to come to the floor and say, "This little program is only going to cost $15 million." No one said, "There is a formula in it that will cost billions before it is over."

We finally decided that we had to discipline ourselves, and that was the genesis of the Budget Act. It was an act worked on by many Members of this body, and many Members of the House contributed to it. The act has stood us in good stead.

Now, in August, we find ourselves, for the first time since we passed the act in 1974, without a budget resolution. Prior to this time, we had a resolution by June and in many years by May. Now, in August, we are beginning to pass appropriation bills. The majority leadership has scheduled action on seven appropriation bills this week, and in each one, they intend to waive the Budget Act. It means that in each instance we will not have a binding limit on spending.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I strongly commend the Senator from Florida. What he is doing now is a very important action for the integrity of this body.

The Senator is absolutely right. He pointed out that nearly 10 years ago we passed the Budget Act, which provided for the first time that we would have an overall basis for our fiscal policy, that we would try to determine what kind of fiscal policy we should have, how much we should tax, how much we could spend, and then we would determine priorities within that framework.

As I understand what the Senator from Florida is telling me—and I ask him to tell me if I am correct—is that we would proceed with a number of appropriations bills without having a budget resolution in place, which means that we are not establishing or living by any kind of framework of priorities at all. Is that right?

Mr. CHILES. The Senator from Wisconsin is exactly right.

I think he will recall, as I know the Senator from Mississippi, the distinguished former chairman of the Armed Services Committee will recall, that the first two fights on the Budget Act, after we passed a budget resolution, had to do with conference reports—one on defense authorization and the second on child nutrition.

Both of those have always been like motherhood to this body. In each instance, ordinarily, regardless of the size, no one wants to be weak on defense, and so we would vote for those numbers. And, no one wants to be weak on child nutrition, and we would vote for those numbers. But we had a budget resolution, and the chairman of the Budget Committee at that time, Senator Muskie, said:

> Heed the budget resolution. I am calling a point of order under that resolution, on the defense authorization bill, because it is too high.

Later, Senator McGovern addressed the child nutrition bill. In both instances, this body upheld that point.

I think the defense authorization bill had sort of slipped over. I do not think anybody meant it to be over but it was.

In both instances, I think the budget act served us well. In those two cases, one having to do with a domestic spending program which is very popular and the other having to do with defense, we enforced what the body had endorsed in the budget resolution.

Mr. PROXMIRE. There are two reasons why I think what the Senator from Florida is doing is important now.

No. 1, we have an absolutely unprecedented deficit that we confront. I understand that the Office of Management and Budget, the Reagan administration's spokesman on the budget, has indicated that we will have a deficit of $156 billion in 1985 and that throughout the next 6 years we will have a deficit totaling almost $1 trillion.

Mr. CHILES. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that that deficit will be around $250 billion in 1989.

Mr. PROXMIRE. That is right.

The Office of Management and Budget makes some ridiculous assumptions. Among other things, they assume that Treasury bill rates will fall from 10.5 percent, which they are now, to 5.3 percent. At the same time, they also assume a tremendous, unprecedented 6-year recovery proceeding through 1985, with the private sector borrowing more and more money and the Federal Government borrowing $156 billion or more per year for the next 6 years. Those are impossible assumptions.

It seems to me that we are much more likely to have a large deficit of the kind predicted by the Congressional Budget Office, a bipartisan office, than the kind of deficit the administration forecasts. That is one reason why it seems to me that is not a time when we should forgo the budget resolution.

The other reason is more important. As I understand it, the position the Senator from Florida is taking is that if we forgo a budget resolution now, before we act on appropriation bills, that will establish a precedent that will haunt us. It will be extremely hard in the future to impose this kind of painful discipline, this useful and necessary discipline, which we should have every year. Once we breach that, which we may do if we proceed to pass these appropriation bills without acting on the budget resolution, we are going to be foregoing a limitation of framework that would limit our spending in the future, and that is going to result in a far less responsible policy on the part of this body.

Mr. CHILES. I think the Senator from Wisconsin is correct.

The great concern I have is that our hangup in the budget conference is over the defense number, and the difference is between $299 billion which the Senate approved and $286 billion which the House approved.

The House has made an offer to the Senate conferees to split the difference at $292 billion. The Senate majority has made an offer to the House which includes a range. That range is the high of the Senate number and the low of the House number.

I ask the Senator from Wisconsin: What kind of precedent does that set, if we go to a budget conference intended to restrain spending, and say that we will let one side take their high number and the other side take their low number? What kind of precedent does that set?

Mr. PROXMIRE. That is ridiculous. It is outrageous. There is no way that kind of precedent would provide any kind of discipline as far as Congress as a whole is concerned.

Mr. CHILES. The Senator from Wisconsin understands that many times the House of Representatives wants to spend a lot more on the social programs than the Senate wants to spend. That traditionally has happened in every budget we had brought over here. How could we have stopped the House of Representatives if they wanted to say in a conference committee, "We will take our high of our social programs and you take our low, and that will be the budget conference." To me, rather than putting restraint on spending, what you are doing is allowing yourself to drift to the highest number in every instance and that would be the worst thing and the worst way to make a budget.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I understand.

Mr. CHILES. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin. He has long been an individual watch guard trying to control spending and working to establish priorities. He has always been vigilant and conscientious.

I wish to make one statement and it is on the partisanship of this matter.

A distinguished Senator whom I respect very much on the Republican side came to me yesterday and said, "I have heard at our meeting that this is all a partisan thing, that you are sort of a spear carrier for your Presidential nominee and you are doing this to embarrass us."

I replied to that friend of mine that when I started here the other day I was not exactly sure how this would work out. But I knew for sure I could not sit back any more and watch the Budget Act waived without trying to say something. When I started, I assured him I did not go see anyone on our side of the aisle or on either side of the aisle. I simply started talking about it, and then some Senators who shared my concern joined in.

This is not a matter I brought to the Democratic Caucus when this debate began. I just feel it is a proposition clear on its face. I began thinking back to what a Edmund Muskie or a Henry Bellmon would have done when they stood firm and together to defend the budget. Thank goodness they did in the initial days of this process. Muskie and Bellmon stood together when they took on the Armed Services Committee and when they took on food and nutrition. It was a bipartisan thing.

The Budget Act is neutral as far as I am concerned. But it is a restraint imposing limits established by the will of the Congress.

Both the House and Senate have passed budget. We have gone to conference. The only thing we have not done is resolve that conference. And for the life of me, I cannot accept the fact that we are so far when really we are so close.

We have had just four meetings, three of those meetings lasting less than an hour, only one of those meetings more than an hour. Moreover this Senator has had no leadership mandate to go in there and work out something, bring it back, and establish a budget.

So, it seems to me that we just sort of lost our will. We seem to have decided this act is too difficult. It is too tough. Remember, this is a very different year, we have been told. It is just too tough to do it this year. We will get back to it. We will get back to it somewhere down the line.

The Senator from Florida is very concerned that if you cannot face up to it in the tough times, you will not face it at all because something is always tough. I have never seen a time when there was not some spending program this body wanted to embrace. It is always either before an election or it is something else, and the body is tempted to leap for an attractive program.

The purpose of this whole act was to say we recognize we have to put some restraint on ourselves. We recognize we are not to totally be trusted with these good program notions out there. We have to be forced to set priorities. All of that is what the Budget Act does for us, and all of that is what it should be doing for us this year as it has done in the past years. So I hope we will see some movement. That is the only thing the Senator from Florida wants.

I do not want to hold up any bills. I just want to see some inclination to tell the budget conference committee, "stay there until you work out a fair proposition." I will be satisfied with most anything we can work out within that defense number. I do not have any magic number. It is simply a matter of coming back with a conference report. We need to do that.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I commend that distinguished Senator from Florida. He is attempting to protect the one instrument we have for controlling ourselves in relation to appropriations bills authorizing measure, and the budget.

I had considerable hand in writing the Budget Control Act. I spent one of the recesses—I believe it was the Lincoln Day recess—several years ago in working with my own staff and the staffs of other Senators, the Parliamentarian, who was Dr. Riddick at that time, and Robert Dove, our present Parliamentarian, the staff of Mr. PERCY, the staff of Mr. Muskie, and I believe the staffs of other Democrats and Republicans.

We spent all of that time working on this Budget Act, and today the Senator from Florida is calling attention to the fact that the Budget Act is being emasculated and that it ultimately will be a nonfactor if we don't stop the erosion. We will not have any control over our spending. We will just go back to the old way.

I read now from the Budget Control Act, section 301(a):

ACTION TO BE COMPLETED BY MAY 15.—On or before May 15 of each year, the Congress shall complete action on the first concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year beginning on October 1 of such year.

That is what we are talking about here, is it not, may I ask the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CHILES. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRD. The first concurrent budget resolution is now in a conference that is not being attended and not being held. Final action on the resolution was to have been completed by both Houses by May 15.

Now, what does the first concurrent resolution set forth? Again, I read from the Budget Act. The concurrent resolution shall—it does not say "may"—set forth—

(1) the appropriate level of total budget outlays and of total new budget authority;

(2) an estimate of budget outlays and an appropriate level of new budget authority for each major functional category, for contingencies, and for undistributed intragovernmental transactions, based on allocations of the appropriate level of total budget outlays and of total new budget authority;

(3) the amount, if any, of the surplus or the deficit in the budget which is appropriate in light of economic conditions and all other relevant factors;

(4) the recommended level of Federal revenues and the amount, if any, by which the aggregate level of Federal revenues should be increased or decreased by bills and resolutions to be reported by the appropriate committees;

(5) the appropriate level of the public debt, and the amount, if any, by which the statutory limit on the public debt should be increased or decreased by bills and resolutions to be reported by the appropriate committees;

(6) if required by subsection (e), the calendar year in which, in the opinion of the Congress, the goals for reducing unemployment set forth in section 4(b) of the Employment Act of 1946 should be achieved; and

(7) such other matters relating to the budget as may be appropriate to carry out the purposes of this Act.

And then, Mr. President, on page 197 of our Standing Rules of the United States Senate I read these words:

First Concurrent Resolution on the budget must—

it does not say "may"— must be adopted before legislation providing new budget authority, new spending authority, or changes in revenues or public debt limit is considered.

Now, does the agriculture appropriation bill fit into that category, may I ask the distinguished Senator?

Mr. CHILES. It fits into the category, yes, absolutely yes.

Mr. BYRD. Therefore, that resolution, according to the law, must be adopted by May 15, and it has not been adopted and the conference on that bill is not even meeting, as I understand the Senator.

So this is what he is trying to bring to the attention of the people; that we are trying to defend the act which we passed and which holds us responsible and which gives us control over the budget. But that act can be waived, and has been waived, and there is a motion to waive it in this instance. But the problem with that is, if we waive it on this bill, then there may be an attempt to waive it on all subsequent general appropriation bills, and the Budget Act goes out the window.

Why are the Senate and the House not conferring on the First Budget Resolution? It is because there is a little fight on with respect to the overall defense figures. Am I correct on that?

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. Not only is the national security being held hostage by the administration with respect to a certain weapons system, and a certain set of figures, but we are unable to go forward as directed by the Budget Reform Act. And that is important.

What will the problem be the next time?

Mr. CHILES. That is the point I tried to make earlier, I say to the distinguished minority leader. The hangup this time is over a defense number. The hangup could be over domestic spending next time. And I trust it will be if we set this precedent. We will just go forward without a number. This thing cycles. There will be somebody wanting a new social program, and they will say, "We are not to be bound by this. After all, defense was not bound by this, so why should we be bound?" And we will see restraint go out the window.

That is why I contend the Budget Act itself is neutral. It does not tilt to defense, it does not tilt to domestic spending programs. But it does provide a limit, a ceiling and a discipline. It is the only basic law which does that.

We must not abandon it at a time when we are paying $110 billion in interest, when deficits are climbing to $250 billion and when our balance of trade is over $100 billion and our dollar is so high our farmers cannot sell their goods overseas. We are paying a premium for our problems. Foreign goods come in here with a 40-percent discount because of our trade imbalance, fattened dollar, and high interest rates. For all those reasons, goodness knows, I cannot see why we would even think about bypassing the Budget Act.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I again commend the distinguished Senator from Florida on the stand that he is taking and the courage that he has displayed in his determination that the American people ought to really know what is holding up the whole process here in the Senate and in the House. I commend him for his valiant stand in support of the budget process and in support of the requirements of the Budget Act, which, as I say again, and finally, was passed in order that Congress might discipline itself, that Congress might come to grips with budget deficits and develop a trend toward lower deficits so that at some point in the future those deficits can be washed out and we can have a balanced budget.

I commend him. I shall vote with him again today against the motion to invoke cloture. I am not too sanguine about the outcome today, but the Senator's stand will be a matter of record for all to see for centuries to come.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I rise to urge the Senate to vote to invoke cloture. The bill that would be considered, if the motion to waive the Budget Act is approved, is the agriculture appropriations bill. I am sympathetic, as I know many Senators are, with the arguments that have been made about the breakdown in the budget process and the problems that are caused when the Congress fails to get together on a budget resolution or to meet the deadlines that are established in the Budget Act.

I was one of those Members of Congress who thought the passage of the Budget Act would usher in a new day of fiscal responsibility. But that just has not turned out to be the case. In the other body, there was a great deal of hope expressed when I, along with other Members of Congress, applauded the fact that the Congress for the first time would be taking a look at the overall projections of revenue and spending requirements and in one document approving broad, general category levels of spending for the next fiscal year, well in advance of the appropriation process, so that all of us would have an opportunity to get the big picture and be a real part of the making of fiscal policy.

Unfortunately, we have seen deadlines go by. We found out we could waive the Budget Act. We found out we could ignore the Budget Act. And that is unfortunate because it has dashed a lot of fond hopes. But here we are today confronted with the reality of the necessity to appropriate funds to keep the Government operating.

Is it fair to those who are administering the programs that will be funded by bills such as the agriculture appropriations bill to say:

"We are tied up here arguing about the procedural shortcomings of the process and you all will just have to excuse us for a few months while we continue to argue over what we are going to do. In the meantime, you cannot plan for next year, in the school lunch program, how many workers you are going to need, how you are going to handle the Federal funds, what level of funding is going to be available, what special grants will be available in your research department in your university in the agriculture area. Will you need to cancel graduate fellowships that are based upon the award of grants from the Department of Agriculture, or will you need to tell students you just will not know until way over into October after the year has begun?"

I do not think we should make the program administrators, the staffs at universities and colleges, local administrators of our schools, pay for the breakdown in the budget process here in the Congress. And I am not suggesting that anybody is at fault over that. I am certainly not suggesting that it is the Senator from Florida who has caused this breakdown. He has made a very valid point. I think it may have taken a little longer than necessary to make the point, and that is the reason I am rising to urge that the Senate now invoke cloture. The point has been made that we have a problem in the process and that problem needs to somehow be solved.

I hope it can be solved. And if there are reforms that can be brought up and suggested, maybe we should debate those reforms. But I am hoping that the Senators will notice that in this bill that can be considered—if cloture is invoked, and the motion of the majority leader is agreed upon—funds will be made available for the women and infant children programming, and a feeding program that is targeted to those who are least able in a time of real need to provide for their own nutrition needs. The funding level approved in this legislation will determine the level of participation in every State in the Union in this program that is so important to the health and well-being of a lot of American citizens. No State will be able to determine the level of participation until they know how much money the Congress is going to appropriate. We are nearing the end of the fiscal year.

The first of October is going to be here before we realize it. We do not have that many legislative days left between now and the beginning of this fiscal year, if we do not go on, and act on this bill now. I wish we could have acted on it last week. We could have been through conference, maybe had the President's signature on this bill, and then there would be certainty in that program along with others about how many people can be involved in the participation of these various activities that are supported by this bill. But if we do not act now, we sure enough are going to put at risk a lot of program beneficiaries, and make it uncertain at best about whether or not there would be the degree of planning, and the degree of careful management of these progams, that there would have otherwise been with the timely appropriation of funds. I hope the Senate will understand that it does matter whether or not we proceed to the consideration of this bill. It matters very much.

There is also another program in this bill—a guaranteed loan program to help farmers finance the operation of their agricultural activities. A $650 million program is in this bill, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations has instructed the subcommittee to offer an amendment to make that money available immediately upon enactment so that farmers in need of funds for refinancing and troubled loans right now can have the benefit of that program. If we continue to stretch out the consideration of this bill, and continue to put it off well into the September legislative timeframe, then we are postponing the date on which that fund will be available to some of America's troubled farmers.

This Senator is not going to be a party to the continued postponement of this bill, and put in jeopardy the lives and well-being of farm families across America whom we are trying to help with this legislation. If we had passed the bill last week when it was scheduled for consideration, if we had made the point on the Budget Act, discussed it, focused attention on it, and then moved onto the consideration of the bill, we would not be putting unnecessary pressure on farmers who would benefit from that program.

I hope Senators will notice that that program is in this bill, and it will be amended so that the money will be made available immediately upon enactment. That is not just an idle gesture by the Committee on Appropriations. We have had testimony. We have reviewed the situation.

In my State of Mississippi we had a round table meeting chaired by the Secretary of Agriculture last Friday, which was a national meeting hosted by our State to discuss farm credit programs throughout America. It is obvious that there is a need for a program of this kind. It is being included in this legislation. And the loan fund will be made immediately upon enactment. So I urge the Senators to proceed to invoke cloture so that we can get this bill passed, and go to conference so we can send it to the President for signature.

Mr. President, there is money in this bill for agriculture research. There are special grants made available to colleges, universities, and other entities throughout America who are engaged in research, trying to figure out ways to improve productivity on the farm, to develop new ways to deal with the problems of insects, weed control, and other problems that plague farmers and that directly affect the economic well-being of American agriculture.

It is important for those involved in research to be able to know in advance of the fiscal year what the funding levels are going to be for research, what special grants are going to be made available so that those who can apply can get their applications put together, and can decide on whether or not their existing resources permit them to compete for these grant funds. There will have to be some decision made about whether graduate students can be employed to do this work, whether existing staffs and faculty need to be expanded, and whether people can be rehired for the next school year.

What are we going to tell the president of the university and the dean of the school who call up and say, "What kind of research program is the Federal Government going to have this next year?" We have to say we do not know because we are talking about a budget process that we cannot figure out how to deal with. We have missed a deadline, and some are aggrieved that a conference cannot be brought together to work out a budget resolution for next year.

They say, "Haven't you already passed a few appropriation bills anyhow?" Yes, we have, but we think it is time now to stop, discuss this for a few weeks, and put this off until the next legislative period in September so that when we do get a conference between the House and the Senate on this appropriations bill and get it to the President, it will be right in time for the fiscal year to begin. But it does not matter that the school has started for a month, that the planning has had to take place about faculty, and decisions have to be made.

I say, Mr. President, that it is really unfortunate for us to put in a bind the program beneficiaries, the research scientists, the faculty and staffs at these institutions who do such a fine job, and could do a better job if the Congress were not here dillydallying around fussing over the budget process.

I am sympathetic to the problems that have been identified. I agree. We need to get this budget resolution agreed upon. I would love that. We voted for a budget resolution here in the Senate, and this bill is within the budget. That is the irony, Mr. President. This bill is within the budget. If this was a budget-busting bill, if this bill was going to force the appropriation of funds way over what the Senate had already agreed upon in this category of spending, then I could say this is a good bill to pick out, use to hold hostage, hold it up, let us talk about it for a few weeks, point to this bill and say, "This is an example of irresponsibility."

The fact is, this is an example of restraint, Mr. President, sensitivity to the programs that are being funded in it, but restraint. The funding level is $292 million below current level funding and current program levels. We are trying, some say, to hold the line and let us not spend next year more than we spent this year. Some talked about a budget freeze or a spending freeze. Well, in these programs, we are spending less next year if this bill is passed than will be spent this year in the operation of these same programs. So it is an example of restraint. The administration supports passage of the bill because it is within the levels of funding that it thinks are reasonable. So I hope the Senate will vote to invoke cloture.

Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, Senator STENNIS.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding at this time to me. I want to first commend the Senator from Florida, Senator CHILES, for the amazing and splendid work that he has done over the years as the minority representative of the Budget Committee.

Mr. President, without deserving any credit at all, I have rigidly and consistently supported the Budget Act in every detail and every particular as I understood it all the way through.

I was a coauthor of it, to begin with. I did what I could to help sponsor it. I voted for the act. I not only supported it in every way, but I was the first victim of it. I had the authorization bill for the military. We miscalculated on some items that we did not think it covered. It was, therefore, above the budget allowance. We had our hand called and lost the vote.

Well, that is a good way to learn.

Right on down the line I have supported, even until now, this procedure. It is a tragic situation, as I see it, for us to be here now on the 8th day of August and not have a budget resolution passed so we will know just what it is that the Budget Committee, backed by the Congress, has for a budget limitation. Nevertheless, we are here. We cannot recall the time. We are faced with just a few short weeks of operation here. We are going to recess, of course, for the Republican Convention. That is customary and in keeping with our system.

We have to move someday, and that day, I have decided, is now, as much as I regret it, as much as I hate to create a precedent. It will just have to be a precedent to some degree. I believe it will be an excusable precedent, though, and will not kill the Budget Committee resolution system. The system must live.

The House has already passed 10 of the 13 appropriations bills without any budget resolution. I do not say that critically. I am just stating the fact. All except three have already been disposed of.

Our committees in the Senate have been working religiously, the authorizing committees, the Appropriations Committees. We have seven appropriations bills which have passed the Senate. Now we come down to one of the fundamentals.

Also today we have on the docket a supplemental appropriations bill, which, as the Members know, carries certain necessary matters, certain necessary items, which have to be taken care of even before this budget year is out at the end of September. Those matters absolutely must be taken care of.

My votes in the committee have been in line with what I have said. I have, in effect, begged that we work harder toward the matter of getting a budget resolution, rather than having to meet the situation as we are up against it now. We just do not have any more time. We do not have any further choices, as I see it, for delaying this matter, even though I highly commend the Senator from Florida not only for the quality of his work but the splendid judgment he has shown, and his willingness to get out and be shot at, so to speak, legislativewise.

But time has run out. We have been here since January 23. We cannot recall any of that time. We must act.

It is no easy thing for me to vote for cloture under any circumstance, but I am going to vote for cloture today and any other day that is necessary now, for the current year, in passing necessary appropriations bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. STENNIS. I again thank the Senator for the time he has granted me.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his comments. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CHILES. How much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four and a half minutes.

Mr. CHILES. And how much time has the other side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. CHILES. I thank the Chair.

I want to say to my good friend the junior Senator from Mississippi he has a fine agriculture bill. It does good for lots of folks and for my State. He has pointed out to me that it has about $900 million for Florida. There are a lot of people in my State who would like that money.

It does good for Mississippi. It does good for all the States. I have tried to point out many times in this debate I do not take issue with this particular bill.

I want to say to the distinguished senior Senator from Mississippi I thank him very much for his kind words. He has been very stalwart in his support for discipline on spending both as a member of the Appropriations and as a supporter of the Budget Act.

I think he puts his finger on it. There is no real reason, other than this is a political year, why we should not have had the budget resolution, why we should not have brought that bill out of conference. Then there would have been no reason for the Senator from Florida to be on his feet.

I understand what is happening here. I have had a number of my friends come up and say, "We think you are right in what you say. It is going to be hard for us to go home and explain this to a farmer. He does not understand the workings of the Budget Act. He will wonder what in the world are we doing holding up the farm bill."

Obviously, my concern also is for that farmer. But if we do not have some spending restraints, we are not helping that farmer. If you look at what we have been able to sell overseas as opposed to what we were able to sell a few years ago, you will see it has been going down. Farmers in my State are going bankrupt because they do not have that overseas market. Why not? Because the dollar is so high. Why is the dollar so high? Because our interest rate is so high. That interest rate is so high because our deficit is so high.

The best thing in the world we can do for our farmer is to control our spending. He would then be able to get his credit. Again, he is put out of business because he cannot get credit.

There is a 40-percent discount at work here on our soybeans for example, as opposed to someone else, because of the high cost. That same thing can be said for citrus and everything else.

Mr. President, I suspect that cloture is going to be invoked here, but I hope we have been able to cast light on the problem. There will be other appropriations bills coming up. All of them, of course, do some good for somebody, but there must be some kind of spending restraint or we risk abandoning the entire budget process. That is what the Senator from Florida is not willing to see—this go by without at least trying to do something about it, without at least trying to raise some caution flags about the danger of ignoring it.

Very quickly, if we were instructed to go to that conference committee and to stay there until we came back with a result, we could get the job done. Then there would be no holdup on any of these bills and we would have spending restraint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, during my remarks I mentioned that this agriculture appropriations bill would be below current levels of funding. I mentioned the figure of $292 million. That was the difference between the funding levels in this bill and the spending levels of fiscal year 1984, assuming the President's requested supplementals were approved by the Congress.

The supplemental appropriations bill which has been reported contains additions to those requests, and if approved by Congress the 1984 funding level will be $400 million over the level of appropriations authorized by this bill.

Therefore, Mr. President, I suggest that that correction be made. I was advised by staff that those additions had been made to the supplemental appropriations bill. That is another reason to say that this bill is well within the allocation limit and well within the budget this year. Mr. President.

I urge Senators to vote to invoke cloture.

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am voting against invoking cloture on the point of order because I believe it is essential that we make a stand now to defend the integrity of the budget process, which is one of the tools that the Congress has available to it to keep spending under control and to reduce interest rates. Certainly the budget process has its faults, but it is illogical for us to have a balanced budget as a goal and then let one of the mechanisms which is already law and available to us, and which is designed to monitor revenues and outlays, fall into disuse.

I recognize the importance of the fiscal year 1985 agricultural appropriation bill to the farmers of our country, and I would like to see the Senate turn soon to its consideration. However, by voting to continue debating the question of waiving the Budget Act, I am joining with others to impress upon the leadership of the Senate the need to arrive at an agreement on the first budget resolution for fiscal year 1985. The Congress should have passed this resolution by May 15. Continued failure to act upon the final version of this resolution will make budget discipline harder to achieve and higher deficits and higher interest rates more likely.

The farmers of this country know all too well the disastrous effects of high deficits and high interest rates on the commodities they try to sell abroad and on the money they try to borrow here at home. By standing firm now and opposing the attempt to invoke cloture, it is my hope that it may soon be possible to have both a conference report on the first budget resolution for fiscal year 1985 and an agriculture appropriations bill for fiscal year 1985, both of which would be to the benefit of the American farmer.●

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, let me just say this: Without a budget resolution, when the agriculture bill comes to the floor, any amendment can be offered to that bill and no point of order can be called on that amendment. If somebody decides, "I think food stamps ought to be twice as big," or, "I think the child nutrition program ought to be twice as big," or, "I think the supplemental payment to farmers ought to be twice as big," any amendment can be offered because there is no spending ceiling on that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 12 noon having arrived, under the previous order, pursuant to rule XXII, the clerk will state the motion to invoke cloture.

The bill clerk read as follows:

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the Baker motion to waive section 303(a) of the Budget Act for consideration of H.R. 5743, an act making appropriations for Agriculture, rural development, and related agencies programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes, as reported.

Senators Howard Baker, Ted Stevens, Alphonse D'Amato, Mark Andrews, Mack Mattingly, Frank H. Murkowski, Charles McC. Mathias, Strom Thurmond, Thad Cochran, Bob Dole, Mark Hatfield, Bob Kasten, Paul Trible, Bob Packwood, Rudy Boschwitz, and John H. Chafee.

VOTE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the call of the roll has been waived. The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on the Baker motion to waive section 303(a) of the Budget Act for consideration of H.R. 5743 shall be brought to a close? The yeas and nays are required under the rule. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. McCLURE] is necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 68, nays 30—as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 213 Leg.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 68, the nays are 30. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER—AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I urge Senators to remain on the floor. I think there may be a rollcall vote right away.

I inquire of the distinguished Senator from Florida how long he would be prepared to speak before we might have a vote on this matter.

Mr. CHILES. I do not think I will be more than 4 or 5 minutes, probably less.

Mr. BAKER. I urge Senators to be present.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, the Senate has expressed its will and voted cloture. We are now on the motion to waive the Budget Act. I point out that this is a different vote.

A number of Senators have said, "I don't feel that I should vote for cloture" or, "I am concerned about cloture." But what we have now on this vote is a motion to waive the Budget Act, which, in effect, is to say: "We don't care whether we have a budget or not. It is not necessary. We don't care whether we have any spending restraint. We will take up these appropriations bills without any kind of restraint, so that they will not be open to any point of order." Any amendment can be offered to this bill, in any amount, and no one can raise that point of order.

The motion to waive is saying that we are ready to abandon the restraint in the Budget Act, in spite of the law that says we must have a budget resolution before we pass appropriation bills, and in spite of the fact that every year before this year we have had a budget act by June.

This year, because it is a tough year, it is different. It is a year divisible by four, we do not have a budget resolution, and now we are going to say there is no need for the conference to complete its work. The budget conference has had four meetings. Only one lasted an hour, and the other three lasted much less than that. We have not had a meeting in the last couple of months. We are sitting by idly. We can be instructed at any time to go to conference, have that meeting and come out with a resolution, so that we will have some spending restraint.

I urge Senators to look at what they are doing, because this is a vote that says, "I don't care about spending. I don't care whether we do something to restrain those deficits and those interest rates and everything else we have."

We have the CBO figures that show that interest is going to go to $220 billion in the next 5 years. It is now $110 billion. It is the fastest growing program we have. It is going to be almost as big as defense within 5 years. It is like "Pac-Man"; it is eating everything else. No matter what program you favor, your program is being shrunken by the interest that is eating it up.

This is an up-and-down choice we have as to whether we want to waive the Budget Act. I urge the Senate not to waive it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I remind Senators that this bill is $400 million below this fiscal year's spending levels for the same programs. It is an example of restraint, and it is well within the budget allocation, and I urge Senators to vote for the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

The question is on agreeing to the motion. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. McCLURE] are necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

NOT VOTING—3

Bentsen	Goldwater	McClure

So the motion to waive the Budget Act was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1984

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the pending business.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 6040) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 3615

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send a technical amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration, and I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be set aside for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS], proposes an amendment numbered 3615 on page 54, lines 8 and 9, strike "S. Con. Res. 122" and insert "Senate Concurrent Resolution 122, Ninety-Eighth Congress, agreed to June 29, 1984."

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, this describes Senate Concurrent Resolution 122 with specificity so there is no misunderstanding.

I ask for the immediate adoption of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS].

The amendment (No. 3615) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3616

(Purpose: To appropriate additional funds to the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation)

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the Senator from Maryland has an amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be set aside for the consideration of the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES], for himself and Mr. MATHIAS, proposes an amendment numbered 3616.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 21, between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

NEIGHBORHOOD REINVESTMENT CORPORATION

For an additional amount for the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation, $500,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, this amendment, which I sent to the desk on my behalf, and on behalf of Senator MATHIAS, makes it possible for the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation to carry out a mutual housing demonstration project located in the Baltimore City neighborhood of Govans. The Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation at the direction of Congress in the 1980 Housing Act initiated a mutual housing demonstration program as a way to bring affordable and quality housing to lower income neighborhoods.

This initiative has been greeted with general approval as an innovative and significant way to provide affordable and accessible housing to lower income neighborhoods. This amendment would enable this demonstration project to move forward.

I urge its acceptance by the Senate.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, the Baltimore Mutual Housing Association is an innovative housing ownership, production, and financing program. It has completed 8 townhouses with another 25 under way on a a 7-acre site in the Govans neighborhood of Baltimore. The ultimate development of the site will include 100 housing units.

The project is completely owned by the association with the residents having a life tenancy in their units. This mixed income project has a privately subscribed subsidy which pays about half the debt service on the project thereby keeping rents within the ability of neighborhood residents to pay. Tenants pay a one-time membership fee in the association of $2,100 to $2,500 and monthly fees ranging from $300 to $350 depending on the size of the unit and their income.

The association will retain appreciation profits to finance future production of units. Thus, the BMHA is assisting neighborhood residents to remain in their neighborhood at modest rent levels while gradually generating seed money from equity in the project to finance additional moderate income housing.

This mutual housing project grew out of the highly successful Neighborhood Housing Services Program, which brings together area lenders and residents to reinvest in their own housing in stable neighborhoods overlooked by financial institutions. The result has been rehabilitated and newly constructed housing, increased home ownership by neighborhood residents, and stable communities.

In the case of Baltimore mutual housing, a broad array of local public and private resources have been brought to bear on the Govans neighborhood. A consortium of local lenders has places permanent financing on the project. The city of Baltimore issued bonds to finance the project. The State of Maryland has granted $50,000 to the project along with making the low-interest construction loan. And local private contributions are mounting up for the debt service subsidy; $200,000 has been raised toward the $500,000 goal for this fund. Tenant membership fees and city-funded roads and utilities construction on the site represent an equity investment.

So the project is a microcosm of public and private contributions and cooperation toward a common good—the continued stability of a city neighborhood.

The amendment before us today will ensure Federal participation in the project through the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation, the parent organization of Neighborhood Housing Services. With this amendment, the Federal partnership in this project will be joined. I urge my colleagues' adoption of this amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, this amendment has been discussed with both the majority and minority managers. It is acceptable, and we are prepared to vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES].

The amendment (No. 3616) was agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the bill is open for amendment. We hope that Senators will come, and offer their amendments. It will be very convenient to all concerned if we could go to third reading now. But I do not think that is possible. But it would be appropriate to have some of these amendments offered at this time. We will have a brief quorum call. I would be prepared to go to third reading, if no one wants to offer their amendments.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUMPHREY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, there does not seem to be any Senator who is ready to offer an amendment. I am going to soon call for third reading and pass this bill and move on to other business of the Senate. We have alerted Senators. Senators have chosen not to come to present the amendments. I do not want to be here at quarter of 12 tonight with everyone demanding time to present amendments when no one could find it convenient to offer an amendment at a decent hour.

I am going to suggest to the leadership that we give Senators a reasonable period of time to offer amendments, and hopefully Senators who do have amendments will come to the floor within that period of time, after which I will rise and at least attempt to get third reading of the bill. Therefore, I put the Senate on notice. We are all busy people, but we need to move on to the business of the Senate.

The Senator from Hawaii, who is representing the minority side of the aisle, the ranking member of our Committee on Foreign Operations, Senator INOUYE, assents to this timely notice the committee is giving to Members of the Senate. I do hope we can get Senators to the floor quickly and dispose of this bill.

Mr. INOUYE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. INOUYE. I am prepared to arrange for a time limitation on my amendment. As my distinguished chairman is aware, I have an amendment to delete the amount set aside for military assistance to El Salvador. This matter has been discussed and debated on several occasions, and I believe most Members of the Senate are well aware of the issues involved.

I am prepared to agree to a half-hour time limit, 15 minutes on each side. But I would prefer to have my subcommittee chairman here and agree to that.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator for his very magnanimous gesture of trying to expedite handling of this bill. I was aware that the Senator wished to offer an amendment, and I expect to support it.

If I understand the Senator correctly, he is willing to engage in a time limit of a half hour, equally divided. I will check that out with the chairman of the subcommittee and very soon get back to the Senator from Hawaii. I thank him for the offer.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be temporarily laid aside, so that other amendments may be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3612

(Purpose: To provide for program enhancement at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Undersea Research Program at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington)

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 3612 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], for himself and Mr. EAST, proposes an amendment numbered 3612.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 7, line 6, strike out "$8,530,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,330,000".

On page 7, line 10, before the period insert ": Provided further, that $800,000 shall be available for program enhancement at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Undersea Research Program at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington".

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared on both sides.

This amendment would provide an additional $800,000 to the section of H.R. 6040 dealing with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration for the purpose of program enhancement of the NOAA National Undersea Research Program at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

The Southeastern Undersea Research Facility [SURF] Program operates under the aegis of the Southeastern Consortium for Undersea Research Efforts [SECURE] which is led by the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. The objective of the SURF and SECURE Program is to provide a unique undersea research program and facility to accomodate a wide range of marine science needs. The Southeastern Consortium consists of academic and research institutions and government agencies from North Carolina, Virginia, South Carolina, and Georgia. Researchers from across our country can and do benefit from the program and capabilities available at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Under the NOAA Regional Undersea Research Program, other research centers have been established. The Caribbean Regional Hydrolab Program is operated by the West Indies Laboratory of Farleigh Dickinson University and is situated on St. Croix, U.S. Virgin Islands. The Hawaii Undersea Research Laboratory is operated by the University of Hawaii and is located on the island of Oahu at Makapuu Point. The Western Regional Undersea Laboratory Program is being developed by the University of Southern California at the Santa Catalina Marine Science Center, located off the coast of California. The University of Connecticut is developing its program at Avery Point.

Mr. President, the specific objectives of these cooperative regional research programs are sound and important to our national well being and our future. These specific objectives are to:

First, acquire basic scientific information about the marine ecology and environments in U.S. coastal waters.

Second, broaden support of research efforts requiring advanced undersea facilities and capabilities.

Third, enhance ability of researchers to successfully complete selected undersea tasks and to extend classical land based laboratory scientific methods and capabilities to the seafloor.

Fourth, ensure continuity of effort and long-range funding for otherwise infeasible in-situ research efforts.

Fifth, provide training and facilities to develop a body of scientific personnel who are skilled in the use of underwater laboratory facilities and advanced undersea research techniques.

Sixth, strengthen academic relations with NOAA in accomplishing marine research.

IMPORTANCE OF MARINE RESEARCH

Mr. President, during World War II I was stationed for a time at Wilmington, NC. Our national experience during World War II demonstrated the necessity of our Nation maintaining and developing a sound maritime policy and maritime capabilities second to none. Since World War II, however, many aspects of our maritime capability have been neglected particularly in the area of our merchant marine and naval construction. The Soviets have systematically developed their marine policy and capabilities across the board and are now challenging not only ourselves but the West and free world in general. The Soviets have developed impressive marine research and oceanographic capabilities. It is high time that we in these United States devote more attention to marine research.

Mr. President, throughout our history we have been a seafaring people. This was particularly true during our colonial days and during the early days of our Republic. Later, our national attention moved to developing the West as a new horizon to pioneer. Since the 1960's, our national attention has moved to pioneering in space and this has been truly worthwhile and has provided our Nation with a vast development of scientific knowledge and technology.

Today, the time has come to begin to devote more attention and resources to the development of marine science and research and to our oceanic capabilities generally notwithstanding our strong and necessary commitment to space which should continue to grow. An appropriate commitment to marine science and research can inspire young people from across our land to pursue careers related to the seas. In short, it is time for a national reengagement with the seas at all levels.

Mr. Gilven M. Slonim, president of the Oceanic Educational Foundation expressed this point well in an article published by the Naval Institute. Mr. Slonim wrote:

> First, the resumption of U.S. oceanic leadership calls for public education, for the seas still remain distant to the thinking of most people. The finest U.S. minds, honed through centuries of seafaring must mold enlightened policy. How well the nation rises to the challenge of the sea will depend ultimately upon the enlightenment, determination, and direction of policy drivers; thus, maritime supremacy depends upon how well our people understand the sea and every aspect of its influence upon the human condition. The United States must invest its energies and ingenuity, as well as additional resources, to implement a program for oceanic education to sharpen its citizens' understanding of the world's oceans. Their new knowledge will enrich their sense of the destiny of this nation—which manifestly remains oceanic.

Mr. President, I am proud of the efforts of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, as all North Carolinians are, in the development and promotion of marine science and research. The marine sciences department at the university is a fine facility and attracts students from across these United States. The institute of marine biomedical research is truly a unique facility which is pioneering research at the frontiers of marine science. The Southeastern Undersea Research Facility Program is providing important research capabilities available to researchers from all over the United States. The demand on the time of the research vessel Seahawk from our national scientific community has been such that an additional research vessel is needed to accommodate the rapidly increasing demand for additional capabilities and research time at sea.

It is for this reason, Mr. President, that I have offered this amendment to provide funding for program enhancement for the NOAA National Undersea Research Program at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article by Mr. Gilven M. Slonim which appeared in the Naval Institute "Proceedings" in October 1983 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

[From Proceedings, October 1983]

UNDERSTANDING THE SEA

(By Gilven M. Slonim)

When Jimmy Carter—the first oceanically educated president—proclaimed his Middle East doctrine, emphasizing U.S. determination to defend its vital interests in the Persian Gulf, the press lost no time in finding its Achilles' heel: lack of sealift capability. And the recent withdrawal of competitive incentives in the U.S. Merchant Marine promises to reduce our sealift availability, despite the sharp decline in the number of U.S.-flagships. In each foregoing instance, where was the policy direction? How did oceanic understanding temper these decisions? And where were the policy incentives to sustain the U.S. posture as a secure, determined, prosperous, and respected Free World power? Such gross oceanic errors have hardly been confined to one administration, or even to one party. They are part and parcel of the oceanic "knowledge-gap" that has arisen from the lack of public oceanic education.

Today, largely through Secretary of the Navy John Lehman's driving foresight, the administration of President Ronald Reagan is committed to building the 600-ship Navy required to regain our maritime supremacy. But fleet readiness depends upon a vibrant, competitive merchant marine for control of the seas. And right now, the United States is largely dependent upon foreign bottoms. Citizens and leadership alike, insensitive to the implications of this condition, are seemingly unable to muster the resolve to formulate a strong maritime policy. Every effort to draft a far-reaching policy over the past quarter century has bogged down. Only a dynamic program to create a constituency for public oceanic education can move the U.S. policy process off dead center. The current policy dilemma recalls Seneca's observations written half a century before Christ: "Our plans miscarry, because we have no aim. When a man does not know what harbor he is making for, no wind is the right wind." His lesson is still unheeded; the nation must train its sights oceanward to gain the pattern of seafaring thought that purposeful policy requires.

One's thoughts return to 1934, when policy emerged to meet a critical maritime challenge. This was the year when the Vinson-Trammel Act laid the keelblocks for the "two-ocean Navy." Two years later, President Franklin D. Roosevelt's spectacular policy leadership sparked the most impressive shipbuilding effort ever witnessed in U.S. history. During World War II, the people and leadership of America knew the grand design to defeat the Axis powers. As participants, they willingly accepted the sacrifices necessary for a nation at war.

In the ensuing years, the United States became the world's greatest maritime power, and the lesson was evident: policy incentives were forged in advance of the crisis. But impending crises alone should not stimulate policy. Through policy, a major power formulates national objectives and then blueprints its future. Unfortunately, from its pinnacle of maritime preeminence, the United States—in the absence of such policy—has plummeted to rock-bottom as a maritime power.

Today, the U.S. naval and commercial fleets encounter mounting global confrontation as the Soviets drive relentlessly to control the seas. Yet our citizens remain oblivious to this disparity between maritime policies of the superpowers. Our current policy remains indifferent to the needs of America. The University of Virginia—in concert with the Oceanic Educational Foundation—has launched an oceanic education program designed to give our citizens the "sea legs" they need for the 21st century. The ultimate objective is to give students at all levels of schooling as firm an understanding of the world's oceans as they now have of its land masses.

The United States requires long-range policies to replace its "seat of the jeans" reaction to crises. We must develop wholly new forms of long-range planning that will involve not merely a handful of technocratic experts, but millions of sea-oriented citizens as well. It would be comforting to place the entire policy burden on one person's shoulders; unfortunately, the wisdom of Solomon, the strength of Atlas, or the vision of Pericles are rarely found in one human—no matter how gifted.

Therefore, oceanic policy acumen must gain widespread knowledge through meeting the public educational imperative. The glaring vacuum within the U.S. education system requires rectification so as to provide citizens with understanding as to their stake in the world ocean. Nowhere in the $100 billion educational process is oceanic education found. What is required is a cadre of teachers competent and motivated to teach sea-oriented subjects. There must be multidisciplinary curricula to bring the world ocean to life in classrooms throughout the land; world ocean texts are the third need on this critical list. National oceanic policy depends upon an enlightened citizenry competent enough to participate in the policy process. Although many within our government cling to the illusion that national maritime policy exists, the regrettable fact is that, in the absence of an enlightened citizenry, the United States remains rudderless and without oceanic policy direction. Yet at no other point in U.S. history has the compelling need for continuity of policy been driven home more dramatically by world events.

What, then, is this policy that has remained elusive throughout all these years? Simply stated, policy may be defined as the democratic process whereby a nation establishes long-term goals, together with incentives to accomplish them. Through policy, a nation seeks long-view potential while moving toward its national objectives. Forging and implementing policy entails an orchestration of effort by the executive and congressional branches, and the public sector. For without public support, policy falters. In the United States, this iron triangle must foster the dynamics of oceanic enterprise. We must work toward building these major pillars of national long-range, comprehensive policy.

First, the resumption of U.S. oceanic leadership calls for public education, for the seas still remain distant to the thinking of most people. The finest U.S. minds, honed through centuries of seafaring, must mold enlightened policy. How well the nation rises to the challenge of the sea will depend ultimately upon the enlightenment, determination, and direction of its policy drivers; thus, maritime supremacy depends on how well our people understand the sea and every aspect of its influence upon the human condition. The United States must invest its energies and ingenuity, as well as additional resources, to implement a program for oceanic education to sharpen its citizens' understanding of the world's oceans. Their new knowledge will enrich their sense of the destiny of this nation—which manifestly remains oceanic.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I am prepared to accept the amendment of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina. I think the University of North Carolina has done especially good work with respect to its association with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. If there is a part of the budget that needs more funding, it is the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am pleased to announce that this amendment has been cleared on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3612) was agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3617

(Purpose: To add $21.7 million for "Training and employment services", for the period July 1, 1984 through June 30, 1985, which shall be for the renovation and repair of job corps facilities and equipment replacement)

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO], for himself and Mr. HATCH, Mr. REIGLE, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. MOYNIHAN, and Mr. HOLLINGS, proposes an amendment numbered 3617:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING ADMINISTRATION

TRAINING AND EMPLOYMENT SERVICES

SEC. . For an additional amount for "Training and employment services", $21,700,000 to be available for obligation for the period July 1, 1984, through June 30, 1985, and which shall be for the renovation and repair of Job Corps facilities and equipment replacement.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment to add $21.7 million for the repair and renovation of Job Corps facilities and the replacement of antiquated equipment.

Job Corps is one of the Nation's most cost effective and essential job training and employment programs. It places 50 percent of all enrollees in jobs or in the military and another 25 percent into further training or college; 107 residential Job Corps centers across the Nation serves more than 60,000 disadvantaged young people, 90 percent of whom are high school dropouts in need of a change of home environment.

The Job Corps has an impressive record, but the residential facilities have deteriorated badly and aging equipment has not been replaced. Annual appropriations of $585.6 million avaliable for each fiscal year since 1981 have failed to include inflationary adjustments or additional funds to meet the rising costs of replacement or repair generated by normal deterioration of facilities and equipment.

Funds appropriated for the Job Corps barely have been sufficient to maintain the job slot level and to remove life safety deficiencies such as lack of fire exits, smoke detectors, or proper ventilation of hazardous fumes in center buildings. There are no funds for greatly needed facility repairs, renovations, and equipment replacement.

A supplemental appropriation of the Job Corps is urgently needed at this time so that facility repairs and equipment replacement, as well as plumbing, electrical, and fire protection corrections to eliminate code violations, can be undertaken at centers throughout the country. The maintenance of adequate facilities and equipment is central to the success of the Job Corps. Young people who participate in the Job Corps are often referred to the program because of an unsatisfactory home environment and poor school performance. Where Job Corps facilities are in disrepair, it is difficult to encourage corps members to stay in the program.

Ordinary youth programs, without the residential component provided by Job Corps, are hampered in their effectiveness by absenteeism. Programs that do not have the residential component of Job Corps often lose young people to the streets—to youth gangs, drugs, crime—such programs must fight an up-hill battle against the influence of poor home and community environments.

This amendments is not an attempt to expand the program: it literally will keep it from falling apart. The Federal Government has invested more than $1 billion in federally owned buildings and equipment at Job Corps centers. It is fiscally prudent that we act now, rather than later, to protect that investment.

This effort has the support of the chairman of the authorizing committee, the ranking minority member of the authorizing committee, and many Republicans and Democratic members of the Appropriations Committee. The House of Representatives has included $25 million for Job Corps in this bill.

The Senate committee has not recommended any additional funding for Job Corps. The committee report states that the committee is awaiting congressionally mandated comprehensive assessment by the Employment and Training Administration of the degree of deterioration of Job Corps facilities and equipment. Following receipt of this study the "* * * committee would be in a better position to evaluate the capital budget needs of the Job Corps program." The deadline for this assessment is December 1, 1984. I believe that is certainly commendable for the committee to want to have this information in hand before making funding decisions; however, the information is already available.

The Department of Labor/Employment and Training Administration has published a "proposed Job Corps center construction budget, October 1984—85." This lengthy document reviews each and every Job Corps center throughout the country and specifically identifies the need for items such as life safety—G.E., ventilation, exits, and so forth, code violations, replacements/repairs, and programmatic requirements. The study shows that there are about $56 million in unfunded needs. In addition, the Labor Department has indicated that an extra $12.9 million is needed for equipment. It is abundantly detailed to the extent that it shows the need for $213,535 to correct code violations regarding doors, frames, and hardware at the E.C. Clements Center in Kentucky, as well as the need for $26 mechanical repair at the Albuquerque center—which also requires over $1 million in corrections of code violations.

It is simply vital that we act now to prevent further deterioration of our Job Corps centers. The decay of facilities and the obsolescence of equipment must not be allowed to continue because it poses serious threats to the health and safety of thousands of Corps members and jeopardizes the program's long track record of success.

The Department of Labor, in testimony submitted to the Labor Committee, stated that the Job Corps targets the most severely disadvantaged youth and provided the following minority—71 percent—high school dropout, reads at the sixth grade level, has never been employed full time, comes from either a family receiving public assistance or one earning $5,389 per year, and was living in an environment characterized by cultural deprivation, a disruptive homelife or other disorienting conditions impairing his/her ability to participate in other programs providing needed training, education or assistance.

Responsible ordering of our fiscal responsibilities must include appropriating the funds necessary to provide a living environment which will help young people to succeed: They have no other residential program like Job Corps to turn to.

I move the adoption of this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I hope this amendment will be accepted. I have spoken to the distinguished subcommittee chairman and with his staff. I believe the amendment makes good sense. There is wide support to do this work and to continue the progress we have made in this most important program.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I support the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from New York. This Job Corps Program has been a great benefit to unemployed and underemployed persons in my State of Mississippi.

I know that these additional funds can be used for the renovation of existing facilities that will make them do an even better job of placing persons in good paying jobs that are really needed by a lot of people in our State.

I commend the Senator for bringing this to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I would like to join my distinguished colleague from New York, Senator D'AMATO, in support of his amendment to add $21.7 million for the fiscal year 1984 supplemental appropriations bill for capital improvement funds for Job Corps centers.

Job Corps centers serve youths aged 14–22 who have dropped out of high school, and lack skills necessary to function in the job market. Participants reside at these facilities for an average of 6 months, and are subjected to intense remedial reading and prevocational training.

In recent years, Job Corps appropriations have been based solely on maintaining the 40,500 slots available. Insufficient attention has been directed at maintaining the capital investment in this program; as a result, many of the old buildings used are in serious disrepair.

In Pennsylvania, such costs are growing at an alarming rate. The Pittsburgh center, in its relocation to Marcy Hospital, has costs reaching $4.2 million. The Keystone Center in Drums, PA, has unmet capital needs of over $2 million for dormitory renovation, roof repair, and foundation work. The Red Rock Job Corps Center in Lopez, PA, has mounting costs of over $400,000 for electrical work, fire alarms, and a new medical facility.

Because these centers perform a critical role in training disadvantaged youth for tomorrow's employment opportunities, we cannot ignore their serious needs for capital improvement, and I urge passage of this measure to ensure the continuation of the Job Corps Program's important work.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my colleague, Senator D'AMATO, to add $21 million for "training and employment services" for the period of July 1, 1984, through June 30, 1985, for the renovation of Job Corps facilities and equipment.

The Job Corps has done an outstanding job of helping young people to acquire the skills and training they need in order to become employable and self-sufficient. This program has served communities well by relating training to the actual needs of the labor market.

But many of the Job Corps facilities are in serious ill repair.

The Northlands Job Corps Center in Vergennes, VT, currently houses 280 students. These students are in buildings in need of window and roof repair. The buildings are old and need plumbing and wiring repairs as well. Equipment is wearing out or breaking down beyond the point of being fixed. The center staff tells me they are at the end of "making do." If something breaks or wears out it will have to be discarded—there is no money for replacement or repairs.

I am delighted to support this amendment which will send a message to those young people who are trying to become self-supporting and to the communities who have supported the Job Corps center concept, that their commendable effort has been noticed and appreciated.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I want to lend my support as a cosponsor of the amendment of the Senator from New York, Senator D'AMATO, which would provide $21.5 million for the repair and renovation of Job Corps facilities and the replacement of equipment.

This year we are celebrating the 20th anniversary of the Job Corps, a program that has consistently proven itself over the years. There is an ironic injustice in the fact that this program may now be facing demise, not because the program does not work, but due to neglected facilities and equipment needs.

In 1983 we included in the emergency jobs supplemental appropriation $32.4 million for the Job Corps that would have met some of these needs and provided additional jobs. Much to the dismay of many of us, the Labor Department choose to ignore the will of Congress and deferred that money and reduced the fiscal year 1984 budget request for the Job Corps in a like amount. Job Corps funding has not been increased since 1981 although the average enrollment has remained at the 40,500 level and the limited available funds have been stretched to cover the needs of those participants.

The Job Corps represents a cumulative investment of over $1 billion in federally owned property and equipment alone. The money we are requesting today would not expand the program, but would go a long way toward protecting an investment we are already committed to. The $21.5 million is the least that is required and would barely cover the need to correct existing violations of State fire, building, and health codes.

I am aware that the Labor and Human Resources Committee has directed the Employment and Training Administration to submit a comprehensive assessment, by December 1 of this year, of the extent of deterioration of Job Corps facilities and equipment and to provide specific information on capital costs to be included in the fiscal year 1986 appropriations bill. However, I do not believe we can wait that long to correct some of these deficiencies that threaten the safety of Corps members and the value of public property. Therefore I urge my colleagues to adopt this amendment.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, there is no objection by the minority.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from New York for offering this amendment. The money is already included insofar as program year 1984 is concerned. There is some $41.917 million available for Job Corps capital construction. This money would be sufficient to take care of the life-safety matters that have to be attended to in terms of capital construction. The money that the distinguished Senator from New York has called for in his amendment would then apply to the next, which is code violations, which, if they are found to continue, would make the various buildings unusable.

So I think that the two most urgent aspects of the program have been taken care of by virtue of the original appropriation and the amendment of the distinguished Senator from New York. I commend him for offering it.

I urge acceptance of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment (No. 3617) was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to set aside the committee amendment in order that the Senator from Connecticut may wish to offer an amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TIME LIMITATION AGREEMENT

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, it has been cleared on both sides to offer a unanimous-consent agreement on the Inouye amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that 30 minutes be equally divided on the Inouye amendment to strike the El Salvador military assistance money; that there be no amendments thereto in order; and that at the end or conclusion of yielding back the time, the Senate proceed to vote immediately on the amendment with no intervening motions, amendments, or appeals in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. INOUYE. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request is agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I believe we have already cleared the deck for amending this bill by setting aside temporarily the committee amendments; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

AMENDMENT NO. 3618

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I will send an amendment to the desk that has been cleared on both sides of the aisle.

We have on page 53 of the bill two payments for two widows. I would like to amend the bill at this point to include a payment for Verna J. Perkins, the widow of Carl D. Perkins, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky, in the amount of $72,600. This has been suggested by the appropriate committee in the House of Representatives to amend this vehicle in order to take care of the obligation to the estate of Mrs. Perkins.

I send this amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] proposes an amendment numbered 3618.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

On page 53, line 7, after the period insert the following:

For payment to Verna J. Perkins, widow of Carl D. Perkins, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky, $72,600.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I indicated what this amendment does. It has been cleared on both sides and I move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD].

The amendment (No. 3618) was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INOUYE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from New Jersey may offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3619

Mr. LAUTENBERG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], proposes an amendment No. 3619.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 61, after line 19, insert the following:

URBAN MASS TRANSPORTATION ADMINISTRATION

The last sentence of section 5(a)(3)(A) of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964 is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", except that such sums may also be available for expenditure for bus and bus related facilities if there are no commuter rail or fixed guideway systems in operation and attributable to the urbanized area in the fiscal year of apportionment".

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, in 1982, New Jersey Transit, our statewide transit agency, suspended service on the Pennsylvania/Reading Seashore Line which provided commuter service in southern New Jersey. Because the agency had operating assistance allocated to that service in fiscal year 1983 and because that service was suspended, they are presently not able to expend some $386,484 in fiscal year 1983 funds. The amendment I am offering will allow these funds to be used where they are needed, for bus service in Atlantic City. Senator BRADLEY joins me as a cosponsor of the amendment.

In fiscal year 1984, the old section 5 Operating Assistance Program was folded into the section 9 block grant. Fiscal year 1983 funds in tier 3 of the old section 5 could only be expended for rail operating purposes. Having suspended rail services, New Jersey has funds locked in the rail tier which they cannot use absent this amendment.

The amendment, Mr. President, has been cleared on both sides. In fact, the Senate approved this provision last year as an amendment to H.R. 3103, the Surface Transportation Technical Corrections Act, which did not become law. This is a technical change but a significant change for those who provide and use mass transportation in southern New Jersey.

I thank the managers of the bill for their help and acceptance of this amendment.

I also thank the managers of the bill for considering this amendment. As far as I know, it is cleared on both sides. I thank the managers for their consideration.

OPERATING ASSISTANCE FOR MASS TRANSIT

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise in support of this amendment, which will provide much-needed funding for mass transit operations in New Jersey. As my colleague has indicated, this measure is necessary because $386,000 in funding had been allocated for commuter rail service in southern New Jersey in fiscal year 1983. But the only rail service in the area was the Pennsylvania/Reading Seashore Line, which discontinued operations in 1982. As a result, the money was locked up and has been unavailable for use. The amendment we are offering simply allows New Jersey Transit to use the operating assistance funds for those modes that are available in the area. I urge the Senate to adopt this amendment, which will provide a needed boost to mass transit in southern New Jersey.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the amendment has been cleared. Senator ANDREWS, who is chairman of the Subcommittee on Transportation, has cleared it. Since this is legislative in nature, there is a letter from the chairman of the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation, Mr. JAMES HOWARD. In that letter, which he addressed to Senator ANDREWS, he indicates that he has no intention of offering any objection.

With that, I believe the minority side has cleared it. I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. STENNIS. For the same reason, Mr. President, we are satisfied on this side of the aisle. I do not know of anyone who is opposed to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG].

The amendment (No. 3619) was agreed to.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, we have worked out a unanimous-consent agreement on the Dodd amendment. This has been cleared by the chairman of our subcommittee and the author of the amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be 1 hour equally divided on the Dodd amendment, which stipulates that the levels of appropriations for this bill may not exceed existing foreign aid authorization levels which results in a savings of $386 million in foreign aid; that there be no amendments thereto in order, and that at the conclusion or yielding back of time the Senate proceed to vote immediately on the amendment with no intervening amendments, motions, or points of order being in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I thank Senators INOUYE, DODD, and KASTEN for their cooperation in working out this unanimous-consent agreement. I think this can put us well on the track in the amendments which are listed here for consideration. I do thank them.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending committee amendment be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] may be in a position to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Connecticut.

AMENDMENT NO. 3620

(Purpose: To reduce foreign aid appropriations levels to those previously authorized)

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], for himself and Mr. GLENN, proposes an amendment numbered 3620.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Beginning on line 2, page 66 strike all through line 26 on page 73, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For an additional amount for "International disaster assistance", $7,000,000: Provided, That this sum shall be available only for emergency inland transportation associated with food relief efforts in Africa.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, this amendment is a simple amendment. It covers a lot of areas in the foreign-aid section of the supplemental appropriations bill. I will make available to any of my colleagues here a breakdown of the various areas. To that extent, it is somewhat complicated. But what I am attempting to do here is very simply to prohibit any appropriations in any section of this bill which exceed the levels that we as a body have authorized, a process and a procedure which is something that this body historically has tried to follow, which we have not always done with consistency.

In fact, under the Constitution no funds can be appropriated until we have authorized. All I am doing with this amendment is to try to see to it that we live up to that obligation, in effect.

That is what the amendment does. It does nothing more than preserve the requirement that there must be an authorization for foreign aid, both dollar amounts and specific programs, before there can be any appropriations. The supplemental appropriations bill before us, Mr. President, contain nothing short of a waiver of that requirement. My amendment makes an attempt to restore that requirement.

It restores it, Mr. President, by reducing the foreign-aid appropriations accounts, all of them, by a total of $386 million. This reduction will bring these accounts into line with their corresponding authorized program levels.

As we all know, there are only 2 months left in the fiscal year, that this is a 2-month bill, in effect, and that if we wanted to consider the appropriations for fiscal year 1985, we can do that. But, again, there is a process that we would follow. We would authorize those funds and then appropriate accordingly.

If I could, Mr. President, I would like to take a closer look at the foreign-aid section, and ask my colleagues to take a closer look at the foreign-aid section, of this supplemental bill.

The Senate Appropriations Committee has recommended a supplemental appropriations that includes more than $1 billion in new foreign aid spending for 1984, fiscal year 1984. This amount, this more than $1 billion, exceeds the existing authorizing ceilings by some $400 million. And it is some $800 million above the levels approved by the other body.

While the House measure provides supplemental appropriations of $130 million, for instance, for Central America, the Senate bill contains a whopping $565 million for the region, despite the obvious fact that, as I mentioned a moment ago, only 2 months remain in the current fiscal year.

In addition, every one of my colleagues should be aware that much of the foreign-aid section of the supplemental represents a downpayment on the Kissinger Commission legislation. Here, again, we are dealing, as I would suggest, with a classic case of putting the cart before the horse.

As we all know, the Senate has yet to consider, let alone approve, the authorizing legislation to fund the Kissinger Commission recommendations. I happen to think many of them are worthwhile. But when we are considering an $8.9 billion program, which is what the President has called for, it seems to me not only appropriate but absolutely essential that this body debate the policy considerations that are included under that recommendation and give this body an opportunity to work its will, to determine if, in fact, it is a policy we wish to follow. I, for one, generally support the policy. I may have specific disagreements on some narrow areas.

It seems to me that we will be considering a program which is the largest single foreign aid program to be considered by the U.S. Congress in almost two decades, going back to the Alliance for Progress Program under the Kennedy administration. I would remind my colleagues that when that legislation was considered, this body debated the Alliance for Progress as a policy matter extensively. It ultimately decided to approve the Alliance for Progress, and then it appropriated the funds to support that program.

All I am suggesting here is that we debate and we decide as a policy matter whether the Kissinger Commission recommendations is a policy the U.S. Senate wishes to approve of. If we do, then we can appropriate the funds accordingly to support that policy.

What is occurring here this afternoon is that we are appropriating funds for a policy we have never approved, let alone debated, in this Chamber. While certainly there are a variety of reasons why we would want to support a policy such as has been recommended by the Kissinger Commission, certainly I do not think there would be any argument here, particularly with those Members, I think, who have tried desperately over many years to try to bring some order back to this institution, that we do authorize and then we appropriate.

Frankly, as a relatively new Member of this body I wonder why I even serve on authorizing committees, since it simply seems to be a matter of appropriations by the Appropriations Committee. What happened to having authorizing committees determine proper programs and then having the Appropriations Committee appropriate the funds?

Without this amendment this body will have given its tacit approval to the largest new foreign aid program in almost 20 years, and will have done so without a single word of debate or discussion by this body on the policy we are about to fund.

Here, again, this amendment serves to preserve the requirement of an authorization bill before appropriation of funds.

Accordingly, but without prejudice, it eliminates all appropriations made pursuant to the yet-to-be-considered Kissinger Commission legislation as contained in the President's Central American aid package. The Senate deserves, I believe, the opportunity to consider and act upon the President's Central American proposals and to do so with the benefit of an open, regular debate on the legislation which he has submitted.

Last week, my colleagues will recall, this body was prepared to debate the authorizing legislation for just such a proposal. But we know that that debate never occurred, that that bill for a variety of reasons, which I am not totally privy to, did not come to the floor for debate. The reasons, I suppose, for not bringing it up are best known by people on the other side of the aisle. At any rate, it was not raised, and there is no apparent likelihood that it will come up. Maybe later in the session we might get a chance to debate the foreign aid legislation, maybe we will not. But until we do, it seems to me, Mr. President, we should all agree on the simple notion that the legislative process should be respected and that we will not entertain measures which will short circuit, and that we will reject those measures which come to the floor.

One final point, Mr. President. I am sure there will be an effort on the part of some who object to what I am offering here today to portray this amendment as antiaid to Central America or antimilitary aid to specific countries within the region; specifically El Salvador. Mr. President, neither of those allegations is true. This amendment provides, at a minimum, $178 million—remember, a 2-month bill, a 60-day bill—$178 million in economic and military aid to Central America. On the military side alone, it contains almost three times the amount provided by the other body. It specifically provides military aid to El Salvador on the current average monthly spending rate.

In sum, the spending amendment seeks to safeguard our traditional legislative procedures and, for institutional reasons and institutional reasons alone, it deserves the strong support of this body.

Mr. President, what I would like to do, very briefly, and I have provided this to any Member who cares to see it, it is a simple analysis of various breakouts of what the effect of this amendment would be. I have described the macroeffect of it—that is, the savings of some $386 million, close to $400 million. But I think if we begin to look at the categories, it makes some more sense. I am addressing areas in here, some of which are very near and dear to my heart. The Peace Corps, for example, health and population, agriculture and education programs are all included in this amendment. It is not narrowly drawn to focus on military aid.

I emphasize again, what I am saying in this amendment is that this administration can spend every nickle it wants in this bill that we have authorized. But it should not be allowed to spend or appropriate money that we have not authorized in any one of these areas at all. If we want to spend those moneys, we ought to come here and authorize it.

That is an issue that I think ought to join people of various perspectives on Central America in this body. This is not an issue of whether or not you are for the Government of El Salvador or against it or for insurgents or against insurgents, or for counterrevolutionaries or against them. That can all be debated in the policy discussion. All I am saying here is, "Let us follow the rules; let us appropriate where we authorize." Where we do not want to authorize or debate policy, we should not be allowed to spend taxpayer money.

You will note, Mr. President, my colleagues have in front of them the comparative aid levels. In the multilateral aid area—World Bank, IDA, Inter-American Development Bank, Asian Development Bank, IFAD, and so forth—there is no change in my amendment from what the Senate Appropriations Committee has adopted, for the simple reason that we have authorized all of those levels. Therefore, I am not asking that any of them be reduced, because we have approved the policy in this body to spend the appropriate amounts the committee has suggested.

In the AID development aid programs—health, for instance. I want to see health programs for the Miskito Indians in Nicaragua. I am for that. But here, it seems to me what we have done, the Senate did not appropriate any funds, the House did.

Foreign Service retirement fund—all I am suggesting is let us keep it at the authorized level. We do that. It is the same as the Appropriations Committee.

Operating expenses and so forth—there, the change is again for only what we have authorized.

Refugee aid—again, my figures agree with the Appropriations Committee figures. They are the same. We have authorized the money for that.

In Central America, in agriculture, the Senate wants to spend $10 million on agriculture. I am for that. It is hard for me to stand up here and say I am not for spending money on agricultural development programs in Central America. But if we have not authorized the funds, how do we appropriate it? It is a good idea, we ought to debate it.

The same is true of population control. I am for that. I am on record as supporting that. Some of my colleagues oppose it and they have raised the question here about it. I am saying we should not spend taxpayers' money on something we have not authorized, including something I am for, in this particular case.

Health programs, again, $18 million. God knows, they need health programs in Central America. As a Peace Corps volunteer in that part of the world for 2½ years, I saw the incredible conditions, the absence of any kind of health program in these impoverished countries. To stand in this body this afternoon and say we should not spend $18 million for health in Central America is painful for me. But I happen to believe the issue of authorizing and debating policies is something we ought not to abandon merely because we like a program.

It moves down. Education—again, it is hard to stand up here and say on education that we should not be spending $10 million of taxpayers' money. Why not debate the policy?

The same for Peace Corps. As a former Peace Corps volunteer—this committee wants to spend $2 million for the Peace Corps in Central America. I am saying we can only spend $1 because we have only authorized $1. As a former volunteer, I would like to think we can spend that $2. I would like to convince my colleagues to authorize $2 so we can appropriate $2. So I suggest we ought not to spend even that amount.

In military aid, certainly, the same is true. The Senate Committee appropriated $197.3 million for 2 months in this fiscal year. We have only authorized $67.9 million. I am saying that you cannot appropriate or spend money unless we determine, as a body, that it is a good policy to follow.

I might add that with this amendment, with that $67.9 million for Central America, my amendment goes further and says that for 2 months, you can only spend $25.5 million in El Salvador. Why $25.5 million? Over the past 10 months, we have spent $12 million a month on military aid to El Salvador. That is a lot of money. I know there will be those who will say it is inadequate, not enough. I happen to think it happens to be a sizable hunk of money to support the military needs of the Salvadoran Government.

The $25.5 million is $12 million a month for the next 2 months. Then, if we want to spend more, come in and authorize the funds, we will debate it and this body, along with the other side and with the President, will decide whether to go forward on it.

So, this amendment restrains that amount of spending in El Salvador. It does not cut off military aid. It provides economic assistance. I am not asking my colleagues to vote up or down, one way or the other, but to have a balanced intelligent approach that deals with the requirements and rules of this body when it comes to appropriating funds that have not been authorized.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment. I ask unanimous consent as well that this table I have—I have not detailed every aspect of it, but I ask unanimous consent that this table be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] House earmarks ESF for Central America (Senate earmarks only $60 million for Dominican Republic). House earmarks: Costa Rica $60 million; El Salvador $25 million; Honduras $20 million; Dominican Republic $40 million.
[2] House deleted all military aid for El Salvador, the Senate provides the full $116 million requested and the Dodd amendment would earmark $25.310 million for El Salvador.

Dodd amendment cuts: $386.339 million from the Senate bill.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. GLENN] be added as a cosponsor to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a few questions?

Mr. DODD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. INOUYE. Is it not true that the Senator's amendment will provide appropriations in the amount of $643 million?

Mr. DODD. That is correct.

Mr. INOUYE. That is a saving of $387 million.

Mr. DODD. That is correct.

Mr. INOUYE. And the Senator's amendment still provides much more than the House?

Mr. DODD. It provides three times the funding that was approved by the other body.

Mr. INOUYE. And, Mr. President, is it not true that this measure we are now considering will appropriate moneys for a period of 7 weeks?

Mr. DODD. That is correct. It is less than 2 months that remain in the fiscal year. These funds will be for that 2-month period.

Mr. INOUYE. Is it not further true that the moneys which we appropriated last year by continuing resolution and recently, in July, by the urgent supplemental for military assistance in El Salvador have not been fully obligated and expended?

Mr. DODD. I would think they have been obligated. They have just not been expended. I think that is the appropriate way to describe that. The funds have been obligated to it; they just have not spent it. So there is money in the pipeline that has never been used.

Mr. INOUYE. To put it more dramatically, the trucks which they need desperately have yet to be delivered.

Mr. DODD. That is correct. I am prepared to say here is $25.5 million more for the next 2 months. I am not saying, "Live on what we have already given you." I am probably going to be criticized by some because I am willing to spend $25.5 million of taxpayer money for the next 2 months. I am not wiping it all out. The House appropriated $230.5 million for the next 2 months. My amendment appropriates $643.9 million for the next 2 months—three times what the House has done, and it is a reduction. The Senate wants to spend over $1 billion in the next 2 months. I find that excessive, particularly when we have not authorized the funds.

Mr. INOUYE. Finally, has the Foreign Relations Committee discussed, debated, and approved the recommendations of the Kissinger Commission report?

Mr. DODD. We have discussed and debated in committee at great length, I might add—and I might point out, while he is not here on the floor, my distinguished colleague from Maryland, Senator MATHIAS, and I went through at least 4 days of discussion, working hard with the administration, and we had crafted what we thought was a pretty good framework for the economic program for Central America but we never got a chance to debate it. We were supposed to have an opportunity last week and the bill was pulled. We never had a chance to vote on it. And now we are going to appropriate money without knowing the structure of the program.

Mr. INOUYE. So without authorization, without appropriate debate we are now asked to appropriate moneys?

Mr. DODD. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. INOUYE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DODD. I thank my colleague for his questions.

Mr. PRYOR. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DODD. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. PRYOR. The Senator from Arkansas just walked into the Chamber. I am sorry I did not hear all of the Senator's statement. I have the greatest respect and admiration for the knowledge of the Senator from Connecticut on this issue. Did the Senator from Connecticut say that we were spending at the rate of $12 million each month in El Salvador?

Mr. DODD. Roughly $12 million over the last 10 months.

Mr. PRYOR. In military aid?

Mr. DODD. Military aid. Using the last 10 months as a framework and taking the total amount of dollars provided, it works out to roughly $12 million a month, and so my amendment sort of preserves that relationship and I provide for $25.5 million for the next 2 months.

Mr. PRYOR. As the Senator from Hawaii pointed out, technically for the next 7 weeks, I believe.

Mr. DODD. Correct. It is less than 2 months.

Mr. PRYOR. What is the total amount, then, for military aid for El Salvador under the proposal of the Senator? That would be $25 million?

Mr. DODD. $25.5 million for El Salvador, but I would point out there is $67.9 million, which would include the $25.5 million, for all of Central America. So there is roughly an additional $40 million to be spent in the other countries in the region over the same 7-week period. So I am providing funds as well in those other countries. I am not cutting it off.

Mr. PRYOR. Am I correct in stating that the committee's position on this is that we spend $212 million over what the Senator from Connecticut is recommending?

Mr. DODD. No, the Senate bill would like us to spend in that same period $197.3 million, and the difference between those two would be $120 million roughly.

Mr. PRYOR. What in the world are we going to do with all of that money in military aid the next 7 weeks if this is actually appropriated?

Mr. DODD. I do not know. As my distinguished colleague from Hawaii pointed out, which makes it even more awkward, while we have obligated funds, we have not been able to expend them.

Let me say to my colleague from Arkansas, by the way, I will take a back seat to no one in this Chamber for my affection, respect, and admiration for Jose Napoleon Duarte, the new President of El Salvador. He needs economic help, he needs help in terms of military assistance, but when we start determining the basis of our friendship on who is willing to add up a higher ante, does someone here love Jose Napoleon Duarte more because they want to spend $200 million over the next 2 months or because you want to spend $25 million in military aid? Is that how we determine our friendship? Am I less of a friend because I do not believe that there is a necessity over the next 2 months to spend $160 million more of taxpayer money? I hate to think my friendship is determined on that basis. And yet there will be those who suggest that is how it ought to be determined?

I want to see him succeed. He deserves our support, he deserves our backing, but that does not mean we write out blank checks for anybody. We do not do it at home. I cannot get the Governor of Connecticut all the money he wants. The Senator from Arkansas cannot get Governor Clinton all the money he wants for Arkansas. They tell you up here you cannot do that. That does not mean we do not love Governor Clinton or we do not love Governor O'Neill in Connecticut. But there are limits. I am suggesting by this amendment that we are offering some limits and let us debate policy.

Mr. PRYOR. I not only thank the Senator from Connecticut, I agree with him.

Mr. DODD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DODD. I will yield to my friend from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I applaud the Senator from Connecticut. I was not going to speak on this issue, but yesterday I heard my good friend from Utah, Senator GARN, say, if I quote him correctly, "We have a supplemental appropriations bill before us with everybody advocating fiscal responsibility. Are there any amendments from any of my colleagues to reduce it?" Our distinguished friend from Utah is right, there would be. This is one. This is an amendment to reduce spending. It is based on one principle: We are not going to appropriate funds for foreign aid if it has not been authorized.

We have to hold the line on spending somewhere. We are not here to debate an authorization bill. It is an appropriations bill. If people really want to follow the procedures, if people really are fiscal conservatives, if people really mean what they say in the speeches back home about how we are going to hold the line on spending, they are not going to spend money that goes beyond what has been authorized. Certainly, if we are going to have a foreign aid authorization bill come up, I think every one of us would be happy to have it come up, debate it, and see where we go. I like many parts of this bill, but I do not think we should have $1 billion for foreign aid in this bill. I agree with Senator GARN when he said, "I am getting a little tired of Senators who simply will not face up to fiscal issues, who will simply not vote like they talk."

I am also tired of being typecast in this issue. I heard the head of the Grace Commission, Mr. Reagan's friend, say that all Members of Congress are clowns because they will not vote to cut the deficit. Well, I do not think we are. I think this is a chance where we can say, whether we consider ourselves fiscal conservatives or not, we are going to follow our procedures, we are not going to vote for hundreds of millions of dollars in a foreign aid giveaway that has not been authorized. The Foreign Relations Committee has not had the bill up yet. I know the distinguished Senator is on that committee. I am sure he feels the same way I do. We ought to at least have debate on where the money is going.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, if I might recapture my time for a second, the committee finished the bill with the exception of this one area; we had troubles with some parts of it. We were ready last week to debate in the full Chamber the foreign assistance authorization bill and the bill was pulled. We worked very hard in that committee in order to have an authorization bill before our colleagues for their consideration. So I want the RECORD to show that it was not anything to do with the recalcitrance or laziness on the part of the Foreign Relations Committee. We tried to do that.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, as to the point made by the Senator—I will speak in opposition to the amendment, but I think there is a misunderstanding, and I want it corrected. Am I not correct, if I could ask the Senator from Connecticut, that the bill that he is talking about——

Mr. DODD. Are we on the Senator's time?

Mr. KASTEN. This is on my time.

Mr. DODD. OK.

Mr. KASTEN. The bill the Senator is talking about, the foreign relations authorization bill, is silent on the question of Central America? The committee deadlocked on it. The bill that the Senator is asking to come before the Senate does not have a word about Central America, not a word. As the Senator said, they threw up their hands, they cannot handle it in committee so let us debate it here. So the Senator is not referring to a bill upon which debate and agreement and a position has been established. There has been debate but there is no position.

Mr. DODD. May I respond to my colleague?

Mr. KASTEN. I would just like to ask the Senator, is there a dollar amount listed for any of these Central American programs in the bill that was scheduled to come before the Senate?

Mr. DODD. No.

Mr. KASTEN. There is not.

Mr. DODD. The Senator is correct to this extent: We debated the issue for some 3 or 4 days in the committee and in fact resolved—I would say 98 percent of it was done.

Mr. KASTEN. But the bill is silent——

Mr. DODD. Let me answer. The Senator wants an honest answer to his question. I will give him an honest answer. The honest answer is we debated it for some 3 or 4 days and resolved 98 percent of these issues.

We got tied up in a deadlocked vote, 8 to 8, in the committee as to whether or not to deal with some specific provisions regarding military aid. We decided, because we were deadlocked, because we could not resolve it in the committee, to bring it to our colleagues on the floor. We voted on it three times and decided that we would come out here, which is the normal way to do things. We said that we will offer it as an amendment. Senator MATHIAS and I were working on it and said we would offer it here.

The fact that we did not resolve it in the committee is not the point. The point is that we debated it extensively; and if the committee cannot answer the question, we ask our colleagues to answer the question. That is what we were prepared to do last week, but we could not get the bill up.

Mr. KASTEN. I point out to my colleagues that the bill to which we are referring does not, right now, talk about the issue that the Senator's amendment addresses. The committee was deadlocked. They could not come to an agreement. The bill is silent on this question.

I will yield to the Senator from North Carolina in a moment, but I want to make one other point.

We have heard the argument on many occasions about authorizing legislation versus appropriations legislation. A couple of months ago we were here on a similar subject matter, on the urgent supplemental. At that time, some of those who are today arguing against appropriating before authorizing were talking about the War Powers Act, about numerous other authorizing provisions on the urgent supplemental.

So we all take this argument and use it whichever way it seems to work, on whichever day it seems to work. The fact is that the effort being made here is an effort to cut—I would say to gut—the initiative which began with the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America, and upon which we are beginning to implement in a very slight way. The Kissinger Commission is talking about $8.4 billion. There are certain things that must be done quickly and immediately, and that is why we are talking about funding in the neighborhood of $560 million, total, for Central America in this bill.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KASTEN. I want to yield to the Senator from North Carolina first.

Mr. DODD. On one point.

Mr. KASTEN. I yield.

Mr. DODD. The Senator just made reference to the fact that in the last supplemental, a lot of Members argued here that we should not be voting for supplementals that were not authorizations. Is it not the case that on the last supplemental, the supplemental figures had been authorized?

Mr. KASTEN. At that point we were arguing exactly the opposite sides.

Mr. DODD. But the money had been authorized.

Mr. KASTEN. The money had been authorized.

Mr. DODD. And here the money has not been authorized.

Mr. KASTEN. This money is not authorized.

Mr. DODD. That is the distinction.

Mr. KASTEN. I was not making the point as to whether it was authorized, but we talk about authorizing legislation on appropriations bills and make the argument which way it fits.

Mr. DODD. I was arguing that we should not appropriate where we have not authorized.

Mr. KASTEN. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. EAST. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I should like to join the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin in opposition to the Dodd amendment. I regret that we have so little time to discuss this matter, because I consider it the most significant foreign policy issue of our time. I think that if we should adjourn and have adopted the Dodd amendment, we would send a very bad message to Central America and to the rest of the world.

There is a sense of urgency involved here, as the Senator from Wisconsin indicated; and in my judgment, we must move, and we must move quickly.

The Senator says that his figures and his amendment ought not to be interpreted as being anti-Central American aid. I submit, with all due respect to the Senator, if he looks at the figures, that is precisely what it is. If we look at the Central American category, the major drops are all in the Central America aid area, and many of them from a specific amount to nothing at all.

So, in effect, the thrust of this amendment is to to gut all aid of any real, genuine value which is needed at this time for Central America. That means that the United States is washing its hands of current developments in Central America. That is contrary to the great historical bipartisan support that has been shown in this country, from the time of Theodore Roosevelt and Wilsonian internationalism down to the present time. It is contrary to the Good Neighbor Policy of Franklin D. Roosevelt. It is contrary to the Alliance for Progress Program of President Kennedy. It is contrary to the bipartisan approach shown for the Caribbean initiative under the directorship of former Secretary of State Kissinger.

This is not a progressive program. It is hopelessly reactionary. It is the neoisolationism of our time, and it is the 1930's deja vu. We write off a particular area of the world.

In the 1930's, we thought we could withdraw into a fortress America and let the rest of the world go its way. We know the price we paid for that—the worst war we have know in our time.

I find it curious that the Senator from Connecticut is not troubled with such things as the Marshall plan we gave in aid to Europe or NATO, which was a military shield behind which Europe could grow and prosper, and it has, and it remains in the free world's camp.

If that is a valid policy for Europe, why would not that be a valid policy for those countries in that area, right in our own hemisphere and literally in our own geographical back yard of Central America?

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EAST. No, I will not yield. I wish to make a statement, and I have 10 minutes. If the Senator wishes then to ask a question on his time, he may do so.

Mr. DODD. My colleague——

Mr. EAST. Mr. President, do I have the floor or do I not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. EAST. I am not yielding for a question on my time. I should like to proceed until I have completed, and then I will happily submit to questions on the Senator's time, since we operate under severe time limitations.

What the Caribbean Basin initiative has called for is consistent with a bipartisan internationalist foreign policy as regards Central America which has existed—with fits and starts, unfortunately—in the twentieth century. What the Senator from Connecticut would do would be to totally gut it and end it and to wash our hands of it.

The practical result would be the Marxist-Leninist takeover of Central America. Moscow and Havana, via Managua, will have taken over Central America.

If I were the President of the United States, I would point to the U.S. Congress and place the blame on them, which is precisely where it would belong.

There is a sense of urgency, I say to the Senator. It reminds me of a remark made by a famous European scholar and observer of our time, Leo Strauss, who said, as regards the international Communist-Marxist-Leninist challenge: "We fiddle while Rome burns. We are excused by two facts. One, we do not know we fiddle; and, two, we do not know that Rome burns."

Rome is burning in Cental America, and that shift of power is to Moscow, Havana, and Managua. If that is allowed to occur, you are going to jeopardize the security and the freedom of the people of the United States, and you are going to send a message to the rest of the world that the fatigue of leadership has set in in this country, in which we are no longer willing to act as a major world power, which is the responsibility that contemporary world history has forced upon this country, the thoughts of the Senator from Connecticut to the contrary notwithstanding.

We have debated this policy. We have debated it time and time again. President Duarte of El Salvador, democratically elected government, graduate of Notre Dame, student of Father Hesburgh, stands for democracy, with a little "d," and he has said: "We need the aid, military and economic, and we need it now."

And to deny it to them is to wash our hands, I repeat again, of a very vital area in our own hemisphere and to invite the Caribbean to become a dominant area of Soviet influence and power, and the net effect of this will be to go back de facto, to repudiate the Monroe Doctrine of 1823, which said under President Monroe we would not accept foreign intervention and military presence in the New World.

This is a terribly reactionary, a terribly isolationist amendment that is being offered and for it to be pawned off in the name of progressive is precisely the opposite. It is reactionary.

And I hope that my colleagues will turn this amendment down and realize the urgency of the situation and realize that it is in the national self-interest of the United States to see that Central America has a military shield behind which it can economically develop as is the model we have set in Europe. If it is in our national self-interest, and this group agrees, this Senate, that Europe not fall under Communist domination, why in the world would we not also agree it is imperative that Central America not do likewise?

The model has been set in Europe—NATO, the Marshall plan.

The Caribbean Basin initiative sets it in Central America, a military shield and behind it economic aid by which these viable and new democracies can grow and flourish.

That is in the best moral tradition of Wilsonian internationalism, and I am surprised to hear that such an amendment would come from the other side of the aisle which normally would be looked upon as supporting that kind of policy, the greatest single foreign policy issue that we face in our time.

And I hope that my colleagues will turn this amendment down and turn it down overwhelmingly so that not only those struggling against the forces of Marxist-Leninism in Central America will know we support them morally and logistically but the rest of the world will know that the United States is not fatigued; we are still willing to accept our responsibility whether we like it or not as the leader of the free world.

As Alexander Solzhenitsyn has said, the balance of power is tipping against us and at some point it is going to tip over the line. Whether it has occurred I do not know. But if it happens in Central America I submit it will have occurred because the Caribbean Basin will now be principally an area of Soviet dominence and influence, and I defy any Senator to stand here and say that is in the best national interest of this country, of this generation and that of your children and your grandchildren. It is not. It is not.

And I hope that this amendment again will be overwhelmingly defeated, not for any disrespect for the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, but to show that the Senate is behind firmly and solidly a policy to prevent this enormity from happening in Central America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 10 minutes have expired.

Mr. EAST. I thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, how much time is remaining on both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fourteen minutes and five seconds remain for the Senator from Wisconsin; 4 minutes and 24 seconds remain for the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield briefly for a question?

Mr. KASTEN. I yield briefly for a question.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, the question to the Senator is on what basis does the Senator, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, assert that we should be able to consider appropriations from which an authorization has not been provided.

Mr. KASTEN. I would say to the Senator, I would much rather have authorizing legislation signed into law before proceeding on an appropriation, and this is the way that we attempt to do it. But unfortunately, as has happened so many times in the past, and I have been chairman now of this subcommittee for 3½ years, there have been numerous occasions which, because of the legislative schedule, because of other complications and problems, we have not been able to have authorizing legislation pass the House of Representatives and the Senate, go to a conference, and in fact the legislation be signed into law.

I think the Senator will recall that we have never had a foreign relations authorization bill in place as long as I have been chairman of this committee, and that is 3½ years. I cannot go back to how many years it might have been before that. I do not know when the last authorization bill was in place.

Unfortunately, we have to work ourselves around that problem, and we are in the process of doing so right now. We have done this in the past, and it is not the right way to do it, but it is the only way to do it at this particular point.

I also wish to point out to the Senator that on the question of Central America, as he might well be aware, the issue has not been resolved by the authorizing committee. The bill that Senators are talking about bringing before the Senate, and I hope will come before the Senate, is for all practical purposes silent on the issue of funding for Central America.

So even if we had the bill, we would not really be very much farther along.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator on that very point that this situation is going from bad to worse. All that is happening here is a shopping around within the Senate and Congress to find a favorable quorum. The reason the provisions affecting Central America are not contained in the authorization bill reported from the Foreign Relations Committee is that it was judged that the provisions that the committee would put in were not acceptable to the administration. So they withheld those provisions and went to the Senator's subcommittee and are doing a complete upsetting of the normal procedures of this body in order to resolve these issues.

The Senator is a responsible Member of this body and it seems to me at some point he himself, although he is collecting all this authority in his subcommittee, should say this should stop and we should do this in the right way. There should be an authorization and there should be an appropriation, particularly when we are talking here about a supplemental whose application runs only until September 30 of this year.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, let me, first of all, regain my time. I have yielded to the Senator for a brief question, and I think the question has been asked.

Mr. President, I wish to say that this procedure is not the right procedure, it is not the best procedure, but unfortunately it is a procedure which we find ourselves forced to work with.

I wish to work toward having an authorizing bill. I think it is the right way to do it. It is the best way to do it. It is the way it should be done. Unfortunately, it is not possible at this time.

The Senator from Arkansas is not here now, but I shall very briefly make two points on why this money is needed now.

First of all, I think everyone should understand that it is not as if we are funding an ongoing program at a certain level. This is not operations, salaries, regular maintenance, periodic maintenance, et cetera.

What we are doing in both the economic and the military area is establishing a program making certain initiatives and beginning certain kinds of programs, most particularly in the area of the military, which is so greatly needed. We are dealing with the mobility question. We are talking about trucks, 230 of them. We are talking about helicopters, eight of them. We are talking about airplanes. We are talking about additional air support. We are talking about command control and intelligence, light helicopters, secure radios. These are not the kind of things that are regular operations and maintenance. These are program initiatives which must go forward, and that is why this money is needed.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico said that he wished to speak on this issue.

Does the Senator from Mississippi wish to speak on this issue?

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I only need a minute or two.

Will the Senator yield me a minute?

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I am glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, in spite of some fine work that has been done here by our friend who has presented this bill, he is very capable on the floor, and in spite of my deep concern about the situation in Central America, I have already decided that we should go in there definitely with some military aid and some economic aid, I still am impressed with the fact that the present state of affairs is not proven dollarwise with exactness that we ought to have.

I, therefore, will support this amendment pending for the $386 million takeout which leaves, the figure I have, leaves $643 million. And that is a good deal of money to make a start in a supplemental bill. It is already August 8 and we have the regular bills to come up yet. I assume that there will be some kind of an authorization or some additional appropriations which I expect to support as far as I can.

But with the present situation, I will have to vote for this amendment which makes the reduction.

Mr. DODD. I thank my distinguished ranking minority member, the former chairman, for his comments. He hits it right on the head. It is a lot of money.

I would point out to my colleague from North Carolina, when he suggested those of us who offer these kinds of amendments are isolationists, I do not think spending $643 million for 2 months would qualify in Latin America as being isolationist.

I might point out that people forget this administration's original request for fiscal year 1984 for El Salvador alone was $297 million. We have provided by August of this year $337 million for El Salvador. That is hardly isolationist at all. I am not advocating we cut off all the aid. I am just saying to do it with some rationality and common sense.

My colleague from Wisconsin says we have to do it this way. We need a supplemental. I understand that. But why not have a supplemental that provides appropriations for funds that we have authorized? And $643 million, is that not enough?

Do you want to go into the months of August, September, and October and say to your constituents that we are talking about deficits and balanced budget amendments, that we do not think $643 million is enough of your taxpayer money; we want to spend a billion dollars of your taxpayer money? And I am also for a balanced budget amendment in the Constitution and I am also for reducing the deficit and I am against raising taxes and I think we ought to cut spending in this country in the area of entitlements and discretionary nondefense areas.

How can you be all of those things? How can you be all of those things?

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DODD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SARBANES. We have the amazing irony in this instance that the Appropriations Committee, which ordinarily squeezes the figures down below the authorizations, below the authorizations, in the instance is going above the authorizations.

Now, that is a complete reversal of the normal activity of the Appropriations Committee and it is contrary to the normal process. There is not an authorization for these funds and yet the committee, which is supposed to be husbanding our resources and exerting a careful restraint on spending, is exceeding the authorization by $346 million over and above.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I yield my time remaining to my colleague, the Senator from Ohio, Senator GLENN.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, my colleague on the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. President, I rise today to express my grave concern about the procedure by which we make important foreign policy decisions, as illustrated by the bill we are now considering. We seem to be getting in the unwise habit of making important foreign policy and foreign assistance decisions by continuing resolution and a series of supplementals rather than by considered debate of a total foreign assistance package. Our last foreign assistance authorization bill, which is designed to be an integrated and complete foreign assistance program for a given fiscal year, was for the fiscal years 1982 and 1983.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SYMMS). The Chair informs the Senator that the time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I yield 1 additional minute from my side to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. GLENN. I thank the Senator very much. I will try to complete my statement in that time.

Mr. President, for the fiscal year 1984 we have a continuing resolution, an urgent supplemental and now another supplemental of $1 billion with only 2 months to go in this fiscal year. We appear headed for a similar ad hoc arrangement in fiscal year 1985 given the failure to consider a foreign aid authorization bill to date. Such a procedure cannot result in a comprehensive, reasoned and complete program of foreign assistance. For example, elements of this supplemental derive from the recommendations of the Kissinger Commission report. Yet to date we have not had a debate on that report's recommendations. The report proposed a large comprehensive 5-year program for economic and military assistance by the Central American region. Today we are being asked to approve bits and pieces of that comprehensive program when we have had no opportunity to debate the wisdom of the underlying program.

I am not assigning blame, Mr. President, for the fact that we find ourselves in this dilemma. I am simply voicing my grave reservations about the way we are going about the important business of allocating our limited foreign assistance resources. The authorization and appropriation process is certainly not without its faults, but I firmly believe that it is preferable to continuing to do business by continuing resolution and supplemental.

The Dodd amendment, which I support, makes a modest effort toward addressing the concerns I have raised by deleting the unauthorized portion of the pending foreign aid supplemental. Thus I urge my colleagues to give it their support.

Mr. President, I appreciate the additional time.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for 30 seconds?

Mr. KASTEN. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I want to repeat, particularly to the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Ohio, that I want to go forward and establish—reestablish, I should say—the right process in the foreign policy area in terms of authorizing and appropriating. I think both the Senators would recall, on the one hand, that the IAEA amendment, which is not authorized, and, on the other hand, an amendment on this urgent supplemental that had to do with Greece and Turkey which was not authorized. All of us have found ourselves in this position.

The fact is that this is not the right system. But the fact is we have been authorizing on the appropriations bill, on the urgent supplemental, and it has been coming from all sides from all of us. The argument, in terms of authorizing and appropriating, is used flexibly, I might say.

So we have a problem. But the way to solve the problem is not to cut Central America. The way to solve the problem is not to shortchange Duarte and the new government there. The way to solve our legislative logjam problem is not to put Central America at risk.

The way to solve our legislative problem is to solve it legislatively, not by cutting these programs. They need the mobility. They need the command control and intelligence. They need the additional air support. They need the new programs, and they need them right now. And, because of the legislative logjam, because of the delays, we have found ourselves in a position here where we are once more up against all these questions between committees on jurisdiction.

We have to solve the problem. But we are not going to solve our problem in the Senate and the House of Representatives simply by cutting money to Central America.

Mr. GLENN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KASTEN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. GLENN. Could the Senator tell us how much has already been appropriated for this purpose so far this year? Because I believe we are on our second increase so far this year.

Mr. KASTEN. This is the first—there has been no funding of the Kissinger Commission recommendations, the so-called Jackson plan; no dollars have been appropriated for the Jackson plan, the Central American Kissinger Commission. These would be the first.

Mr. GLENN. The question was how much has been appropriated for El Salvador for this year.

Mr. KASTEN. I do not have the figures, but for military assistance it is in the neighborhood of $120 to $130 million, and for economic assistance it would be roughly $220 million, about twice that of military.

Mr. GLENN. It is about $230 or around that ballpark all together.

Mr. KASTEN. In the urgent supplemental there was roughly $62 million provided, and the administration initially wanted $93 million. We shortchanged them.

What you have here is a combination of the funds that has not come to them through the other bills, along with the beginnings, just the beginnings, of the $8.4 billion Central America initiative. But they need the money.

Mr. GLENN. But the direction of my question was the point we are not cutting them off. They are not without assistance that they have had earlier this year. That was the point I was trying to make. So if this additional is provided here it would be quite adequate and that is the direction I thought we should go.

I once again appreciate the courtesy of the distinguished Senator for granting me extra time for my statement.

Thank you very much.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I yield back the balance of my time, and the yeas and nays have already been ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2 minutes and 43 seconds.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take back my time, and yield 2 minutes of my time to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from New Mexico is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the distinguished floor manager. The report of the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America states on page 46:

We cannot wait to check the decline in economic activity and the deterioration in social conditions until a long-term program is in place. The Commission urges immediate adoption of stabilization programs, combining public and private efforts to halt the deterioration. Some of the recommendations are endorsements of existing initiatives and most important, it is critical that Central American countries continue to implement the economic stabilization programs especially to pursue policies designed to foster increased trade and growth.

Mr. President, we have been discussing the Central American issues on the floor of the Senate about every 10 days we have been in session this year. We have discussed these issues and debated them at length. There is not a person here that does not know the issue.

Several weeks ago we all had a chance to talk about this when we were approving a previous appropriations bill for the State Department. That night at 11:30 I said to the Senate if I did not think we were going to have a chance on some other bill to fund Central American social aid, economic aid, education, Job Corps, and health aid, I would put the 5-year authorization for Central American economic and social assistance on that bill. Everybody in this institution heard that. About 40 Senators told me, "If you would have offered it, we would have passed that amendment tonight." The time has come.

I believe we ought to implement the first partial year of the Bipartisan Commission's report on this bill, as the committee recommends, or, make no doubt about it—nobody should be fooled—we are not going to have time, and we are not going to find another supplemental bill to do it. We do it here, or we have raised gigantic false hopes for the people of Central America. We would discourage the new democracy and those that are trying to move in the right direction toward freedom and opportunity.

If this great democracy cannot put some health money, education money, Peace Corps money in this bill together with the defense money unanimously recommended by the Bipartisan Commission, then I think we might as well give up claiming to be a friend of poor countries and budding democracies, such as Honduras and El Salvador. We should not stand on technicalities. We ought to fund the emergency economic and humanitarian plan for fiscal year 1984 today, send it over to the House, and see if they want to or not. If they want to let an El Salvador that is trying desperately to be free go down the tubes, let it be on them, and not the Senate. We ought to pass this provision, and send it over to the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who wish to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 62, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Bentsen

So the amendment (No. 3620) was rejected.

Mr. KASTEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAKER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, we now have a unanimous-consent agreement to consider an amendment to be offered by the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE]. We have about 20 other amendments that have been indicated to us. There may be others. I urged the leadership yesterday, and the leadership has reasserted that intent, to pursue this bill through to completion. I urge Senators to be present and ready to offer their amendments, because it does waste a lot of time when we have to send for Senators.

If there are any Senators who believe they can work out some kind of unanimous-consent agreement on time, I would certainly welcome that effort.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. HATFIELD. Yes; Mr. President, I am happy to yield.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I might state to my colleague that Senator BRADLEY and I are ready to go on an amendment. Whether we can get a time agreement or not, I do not know, but we would be receptive to one.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator. We shall have that right on the sideline ready to move on when we finish with the Inouye amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment that is the pending order of business be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from Hawaii may be in a position to offer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I apologize to the chairman for the brief delay. I was in the Rules Committee.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, may we have order? These are important matters and we just cannot hear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is correct. The Senate will be in order.

AMENDMENT NO. 3621

(Purpose: To delete military assistance funds for El Salvador)

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator RANDOLPH and myself, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], for himself and Mr. RANDOLPH, proposes an amendment numbered 3621:

On page 73, delete lines 15 and 16, and insert in lieu thereof: $80,350,000: Provided, That none of the funds made available under this heading may be used to provide military assistance to El Salvador.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, this body has spent much time debating this complicated issue. I believe that most Members of the Senate, if not all, are well aware of all the complex problems involved therein, but just to remind ourselves, I would like to note a few highlights of the issue.

First, under the continuing resolution, this Congress last year appropriated $64.8 million in military assistance to El Salvador. Then last June, we once again appropriated $61,750,000 under the urgent supplemental bill. This matter was signed into law on July 2, and as of this moment we have appropriated a total of $126,555,000 for military assistance purposes in El Salvador. This amount, I wish to remind this body, is $45,250,000 more than what was provided in fiscal year 1983. In fact, it is a 56-percent increase.

The second matter that we should keep in mind is that much has been said about the Kissinger Commission report. That report does not make a recommendation for military assistance to El Salvador. In fact, it says, "We are not in a position to judge the precise amounts and types of increased aid here."

The third matter that I would like to bring up is that the urgent supplemental funding of military assistance for El Salvador, which we voted upon last June, was requested because of an anticipated effort on the part of the guerrillas to disrupt the electoral process which was then under consideration by El Salvador. As all of us know, this guerrilla offensive did not materialize. Consequently, the armed forces of El Salvador were not required to spend and use the ammunition at the rate anticipated, nor did the army conduct operations as extensively as expected. Therefore, there is much ammunition remaining.

Four, all of the reports emanating from El Salvador, including that report made by our colleagues, suggest that the highest priority should be given to military trucks. In fact, I recall reading a report which was issued by my distinguished colleague from Florida [Mr. CHILES] that for each 1,000 troops there were only two trucks available. I believe it may be interesting to note that of the moneys that we provided in the continuing resolution for trucks, we are still waiting for delivery. The 150 trucks that have been delivered to El Salvador for military purposes were purchased with funds which we appropriated for fiscal year 1983. My contention is that if the Department of Defense, if AID, and the Government of El Salvador find it difficult to prudently obligate and expend the funds which we appropriated last year, how can we expect them to prudently appropriate and expend funds for the next 7 weeks? I think all of us should keep in mind that what we are dealing with today is not for the next fiscal year. It is for that period between now and October 1—assuming it passes today and the President signs the bill, 7 weeks.

Five, perhaps the strongest argument against increasing military assistance is that this would send a very bad message to the military in El Salvador. I would like to suggest that it may undermine whatever reforms are now being undertaken by the military. As many of us have looked upon the military situation and El Salvador, we have been pleased to note that because of improved leadership and improved gathering of intelligence, the military situation has been successful. But if we now send in massive amounts, amounts that I think all of us must admit cannot be prudently obligated and expended, it will send this message to the military: "You do not have to improve your leadership because the United States under any circumstance will provide you with more than sufficient equipment and supplies to overcome whatever inadequacies you may have." I think that would be an unfortunate message to send.

Six, my colleagues have been concerned that this type of amendment may indicate a lack of support for the newly elected President Jose Napoleon Duarte. Let me once again remind the Senate that we did indicate our support dramatically when we, after his election, passed the supplemental military assistance, $61,750,000 as requested by the President of the United States. This was signed into law on July 2.

Our Government has argued that the support is necessary for political purposes; that they are running out of supplies. But I once again remind my colleagues that they are not running out of supplies. The anticipated guerrilla attack did not materialize. In fact, there are millions of dollars in the pipeline, and in this pipeline you have ammunition, you have equipment, and you have those trucks about which we have been talking.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will consider this amendment very seriously, keeping in mind that it will not be possible for this Government and the El Salvadoran Government to prudently obligate and expend the funds that this bill purports to provide. I believe the amount which we have already provided will be sufficient to cover that period between now and October 1. Sometimes we may do more harm by being overly generous, and I think this is one of those instances.

I hope we will be a bit more prudent.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter I prepared and sent to all my colleagues.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 6, 1984.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: When the Senate moves to consideration of H.R. 6040, a bill making further supplemental appropriations for fiscal year 1984, I intend to propose an amendment which would limit fiscal year 1984 military assistance to El Salvador to the amounts already provided under the Continuing Resolution and the recently enacted Urgent Supplemental. Together, these measures have provided $126,550,000 in military assistance to El Salvador, an amount which is $45,250,000 more than was provided in fiscal year 1983.

As you may know, the House did not provide any additional military assistance to El Salvador when it considered H.R. 6040 last week. Consequently, adoption of my amendment would remove military assistance to El Salvador as a conference issue and thereby speed consideration of other important supplemental appropriations.

Furthermore, there are other, more substantive reasons which prompt me to offer my amendment. In addition to the fact that the amounts already provided in this fiscal year will strain the ability of El Salvador's armed forces to absorb and effectively integrate U.S. assistance, there are very real questions as to whether the amounts proposed can be prudently obligated before the end of the fiscal year. Moreover, when the Congress agreed to provide $61,750,000 in the Urgent Supplemental, it did so in response to the Administration's request to provide military assistance to enable the armed forces of El Salvador to defeat an anticipated guerrilla offensive during that country's presidential election. Because that guerrilla offensive did not materialize, the armed forces of El Salvador did not expend ammunition at the rate anticipated, nor did it conduct operations as extensively as expected. Hence, there is every reason to believe that amounts already provided are sufficient to sustain the armed forces of El Salvador for at least the two months remaining in fiscal year 1984.

I know that some will argue that my amendment would "zero out" military assistance to El Salvador and thereby undermine the position of President Duarte. Clearly, this is a distortion of the record of assistance provided this year. As I have noted, the Congress has already provided 56 percent more in military assistance to El Salvador this year than it provided in fiscal year 1983. It should also be noted that the amounts provided by the Congress for fiscal year 1984 exceed the President's original budget request by $40,250,000. Surely this amount provides ample demonstration of U.S. support for President Duarte and the people of El Salvador.

Finally, I would say that perhaps the strongest argument in opposition to increased military assistance is that it would undermine reform in the military. The armed forces in El Salvador are improving because they have found that, to defeat the insurgents, they must undertake necessary reforms. If we provide massive amounts of military aid, we hold out a "technological option" to reform; we say, in effect, "you do not have to continue your reforms, to improve leadership and command, we will provide you with sufficient equipment to overcome these inadequacies." The technological option, if pursued to its logical conclusion, can defeat the guerrillas, but it will leave an unreformed military with power to rule El Salvador.

Therefore, for all of these reasons, I believe we should recommend no further military assistance to El Salvador this year.

Sincerely,

DANIEL K. INOUYE,
U.S. Senator.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. INOUYE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The original bill which I have before me indicates that these funds are to remain available until March 31, 1985. Has that been changed, or am I reading the wrong place?

Mr. INOUYE. What I am suggesting is that this is a supplemental request for this period, before the next fiscal year. This is not the fiscal 1985 bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The bill I have before me, the supplemental appropriations bill, on page 71, line 20, reads:

For expenses necessary to enable the President to carry out the provisions of the Central America Democracy, Peace and Development Initiative Act of 1984, the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended, and for other purposes, for assistance for Central American countries, to remain available until March 31, 1985 * * *.

Mr. INOUYE. That has not been changed, as the Senator knows.

I am glad the Senator has brought this up, because it points out very clearly that we are dealing with a matter that has not been authorized. We are dealing with a supplemental to cover for a period in the next fiscal year. I hope the Senate can once again return to the order process by which we can authorize programs and appropriate accordingly.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I understand the Senator's argument on that, but it is not the same argument as saying that this money must be expended or cannot be prudently expended in the next 7 weeks, or whatever the period of weeks. We are dealing with the period between now and March 31.

Mr. INOUYE. I remind the Senator that the funds we appropriated under the continuing resolution last year have not been fully obligated and expended.

The Senator will recall that in a report issued by our colleagues who went to El Salvador, they said that the highest priority should be given to trucks. We provided those moneys in the last fiscal year continuing resolution. The trucks are yet to be delivered. The only trucks delivered were the ones purchased with the 1983 money.

What I am suggesting is this: Why can they not wait and go through the orderly process of considering these funds in the 1985 fiscal year appropriations?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I wanted to clear up that single, narrow point about the length of time for which the funds were available. I think the Senator now agrees with me that it is a period between now and March 31, a period of some months instead of some weeks.

Mr. INOUYE. For some purposes for 7 weeks; for others until March.

Mr. JOHNSTON. For what purposes would it be 7 weeks?

Mr. INOUYE. There are many other matters in this bill: economic assistance, military assistance. It depends on what you are looking at. Also, there are other countries.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Are not all these funds available for assistance to Central American countries to remain available until March 31?

Mr. INOUYE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, the committee's recommendation for military assistance to El Salvador is based firmly on the recommendations of the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America. The major point made by the Commission with regard to military assistance to El Salvador is one that I know a number of my colleagues have heard before, but I want to read from the report.

There might be an argument for doing nothing to help the government of El Salvador. There might be an argument for doing a great deal more. There is, however, no logical argument for giving some aid but not enough. The worst possible policy for El Salvador is to provide just enough aid to keep the war going, but too little to wage it successfully.

As we have already made clear in this report, the Commission has concluded that present levels of U.S. military assistance are inadequate.

Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii would cut out every dime of military assistance for El Salvador that is in this bill. In a way, you could say that it would be more damaging, not less, than the amendment by the Senator from Connecticut which was just defeated.

Mr. President, they need this money. There was no dissent by the bipartisan commission on this point—that we cannot provide just enough aid to keep the war going but too little to wage it successfully.

The additional military assistance provided in this bill will be used to provide mobility through the purchase of additional trucks and air transport.

It is important to point out that in the last supplemental the administration was requesting $93 million, and we ended up by compromising on roughly $62 million. That $93 million request was in basically three different areas: roughly one-third was medical assistance; transport or mobility was another third; and ongoing operations, ammunition, and so forth for the war as it was going on was another third. We knocked out one-third by going from $93 to $62 million and by doing that, we lost most of the mobility.

In this bill, we are asking for 230 trucks, 8 helicopters, 1 airplane. We are asking to enhance their command control and intelligence by providing them with light aircraft, secure radios, and air-traffic-control radar.

We are asking to give them additional air support: 4 A-37 airplanes, 4 AC-47 airplanes, 24 artillery pieces. They need these items.

In connection with interdiction resources, we are asking for six patrol boats which are essential if they are to cut down on military supplies coming from other countries.

With respect to sustainment, we are asking for ammunition and armaments.

I hate to disagree with my friend, the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, with whom I have worked. Frankly, this is the only issue in our entire bill that we have in disagreement. I simply take his argument as to the kind of signal we would be sending to Central America and turn it the other way.

I am told that yesterday afternoon the Foreign Relations Committee received a report that there have been no death-squad activities in the last several weeks; that we are making significant progress; that Duarte is in control not only of the country, but also of the military. If tomorrow morning they wake up and read the paper and it says: "Senate votes to cut all military assistance to El Salvador," what kind of signal does that send? I think it sends a signal that we are not supportive of this individual, who recently was elected in a democratic process. We cannot take away every nickel. They need this assistance. This amendment must be defeated.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 4 minutes?

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has 10 minutes and 30 seconds.

Mr. KASTEN. I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. President, I want to underline strongly what the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin has said.

The nature of guerrilla war makes it important that you do two things: first, mobility; second, enough power to root out the guerrillas where they are found. The Salvadoran Army simply does not have the mobility.

Mr. President, I had occasion to be in Central America, in El Salvador, in a place called San Miguel, at the headquarters of Colonel Monterosa, who is considered the finest military officer in El Salvador. He had just received word through the super secret facilities at Tiger Island about the location of a particular infestation of guerrillas, and he needed to go after those guerrillas. However, he did not have the trucks in which to put the troops to go after the guerrillas. In order to attack the guerrillas, he would have to go into town and commandeer a schoolbus or a produce truck or buy or rent one.

The whole free part of Central America depends upon the success of our revolution, and it seems to me that we owe President Duarte something more than having to go into town to commandeer a schoolbus or a produce truck in order to go and attack the guerrillas.

That is No. 1.

No. 2, he needs enough power to do so because guerrillas can pick the time and place of their attack. They can attack in the night. They can attack anywhere. And you simply cannot fight guerrillas or contain guerrillas on a 1-to-1 power basis.

Therefore, if there is one guerrilla for one Salvadoran troop, the guerrilla wins because he can pick the time and place and method of his attack.

Second, we have heard that this summer offensive did not take place, that really it was not a summer offensive that we had been expecting, but a fall offensive, and that is what we are afraid of. That has been heavily in the news. That has been heavily in our hearings. It is a fall offensive which we fear and which we suspect, one perhaps timed to come about during the American elections.

So the fact that there has been no summer offensive is no reason at all not to be prepared for the fall offensive.

Finally, Mr. President, let me say that no leader that I have seen anywhere impressed me more than President Duarte. I have been to hearings about him both before and after my trip and before and after his election.

If we cannot support President Jose Napoleon Duarte in Central America we cannot support anyone. He embodies every democratic goal that we have ever talked about. He has fulfilled every promise that he has made.

He has taken control of the army. It seems to me from our briefing that he has taken some of the rotten apples out of the army, out of the national guard, out of the treasury police. And we know who those names are. He has assumed control of the army as the constitution gives to him and no death squad activity takes place.

Just what reforms are we talking about that he has not delivered upon?

It seems to me, Mr. President, if this man has delivered upon what he has promised, not only in democracy but in terms of reforms in the army, then we owe it to him to give the necessary tools.

It seems to me that this is a very, very modest request. It certainly is very modest as compared to what it would be to pick up the pieces if the Salvadorans lost the war.

So I sincerely hope, Mr. President, that we will defeat this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPECTER). The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, how much time is remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Six minutes.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I yield first of all to the Senator from North Carolina for 4 minutes.

Mr. EAST. I thank Senator KASTEN, and I shall move quickly because I know time is precious and I know other Senators wish to comment on this matter.

Mr. President, I simply wish to add in the brief time that I have my voice in opposition to this amendment by the distinguished Senator from Hawaii.

I think that Senators KASTEN and JOHNSTON have already made the critical points, and I wish to associate myself with their points.

First, Senator KASTEN has said that the difficulty with the Inouye amendment is that it is simply giving a little teeny-weeny bit at a time but never enough to demonstrate a genuine long-term policy commitment to the survival of the democratically elected government of Duarte in El Salvador.

And if the papers tomorrow read that the U.S. Senate has eliminated all military aid to El Salvador I agree with Senator JOHNSTON, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, if you will not support Mr. Duarte who will we support in Central America?

He is a true democrat with a little "d". As we have noted, he is a graduate of Notre Dame. His mentor was Father Hesburgh, one of the most respected liberal Democratic political figures in America. He is the duly elected government. He is making reforms in the military.

I think if we do not demonstrate our long-term commitment to him militarily, we will get, as he said when he was here, a military solution and it will be a Marxist-Leninist one. Senators will recall when he was here he said where two armies face one another and one is armed and one is unarmed, you will get a military solution and the military solution will be with that government which is armed, which is the one supplied by Moscow, Havana, and Managua.

We must trust Mr. Duarte, and if not Mr. Duarte, then I submit in effect we are washing our hands of Central America and, as I indicated earlier in my comments with Senator DODD, and I will not repeat that, I think it would be a disastrous policy in Central America.

A final point: I think for us to try to micromanage American foreign policy in Central America is a mistake from the standpoint of separation of power.

The President of the United States has the ultimate responsibility candidly, as does President Duarte, and let these two men work out a responsible policy. Of course, we appropriate and we have oversight. But let us not attempt to micromanage it. We cannot do that with 535 people. And that is what we are attempting to do here.

I hope that this amendment, with no disrespect to the Senator from Hawaii, for whom I have the greatest admiration and who made nearly the supreme sacrifice in World War II in trying to stop the military solution imposed by the Nazi holocaust, will be defeated, not only defeated but defeated overwhelmingly, with not disrespect for the Senator but to show——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EAST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for an additional 20 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EAST. I think what is imperative in rejecting it overwhelmingly is to demonstrate to the people of Central America, to Mr. Duarte, and to the people throughout the world, allied and enemy alike, that the United States does have its heart morally and logistically in the survival of democracy in Central America, and that is the fundamental issue at point.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. WILSON. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, for want of a nail a shoe was lost; for want of adequate funding this guerrilla war can be lost.

The tragic fact is that those who bemoan the militarization, or as they term it the imposition of a military solution in Central America, ignore the fact that that is imposed not by this administration but by the external support of the insurgency.

If you do not believe that, consult the New York Times for April 11, 1984, and ask the Archbishop of San Salvador, not a cheerleader for either side, but someone who will tell you that the insurgency is supported not popularly and locally but externally.

All of us yearn for an economic revival in the Central American region.

Mr. President, there can be no such economic revival. We cannot hope to encourage reinvestment in the area until we succeed in suppressing terrorism to the level that it can possibly be a reality.

As long as there are insurgents, or call them what they are, terrorists, continue to blow up bridges, cut power lines, ambush busloads of workers, we will not succeed in encouraging reinvestment there and there will be no economic revival no matter how many millions of dollars we pour into the country in accordance with the Kissinger Commission's recommendations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I urge the defeat of this legislation, and I thank the Chair.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding.

I rise in opposition to this amendment.

I just say to my colleagues the point that Senators JOHNSTON, EAST, and WILSON have made here that we must sustain and remember is that in order for us and our friends in El Salvador who we are trying to help to be successful they must psychologically know that the United States is behind them and we are not going to pull the rug out from under them.

In 1972, the army of South Vietnam was victorious in defeating the NVA spring offensive but by 1975, after aid had been withdrawn, psychologically it was an impossible situation for the army of South Vietnam.

I say to my colleagues this amendment must be voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I have just received a letter that was sent telegraphically from President Duarte to President Reagan. As we conclude this debate, I would simply like to read three paragraphs to the Senate. Mr. Duarte says—this is 2 days ago:

I understand that the United States Congress is presently debating the Jackson Plan. Because that debate will so profoundly affect my country and the region, I am writing to express to you my belief that passage of this aid is vital. We in Central America are confronting many problems simultaneously—underdeveloped economies, fragile democratic structures, and hostile forces seeking to impose their solutions by force of arms.

We are prepared to shoulder fully our responsibilities to assure the economic well being, freedom and peace of our nations. We do not ask for U.S. combat troops. We know that we must act decisively to strengthen further democracy, human rights and free enterprise.

I hope the American Congress will promptly enact the supplemental legislation for this year and the legislation for next year not only for my own country, but for the entire Central American region.

Sincerely,

JOSE NAPOLEON DUARTE.

Mr. President, this amendment must be defeated. This man deserves our support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the complete text of the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The following letter was sent telegraphically from President Duarte to President Reagan:

AUGUST 6, 1984.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I was pleased to read in the press th~t members of the U.S. National Bipartis. ı Commission for Central America have nce again expressed their strong support . r the Jackson Plan.

I understand ıat the United States Congress is preseı ıly debating the Jackson Plan. Because that debate will so profoundly affect my country and the region, I am writing to express to you my belief that passage of this aid is vital. We in Central America are confronting many problems simultaneously—underdeveloped economies, fragile democratic structures, and hostile forces seeking to impose their solutions by force of arms.

We are prepared to shoulder fully our responsibilities to assure the economic well being, freedom and peace of our nations. We do not ask for U.S. combat troops. We know that we must act decisively to strengthen further democracy, human rights and free enterprise.

Nevertheless, the domestic resources available to address our multiple problems are limited. Without external economic and security assistance, we cannot ourselves deal with the long-standing causes of poverty and violence. We do not have the wherewithal to defend our societies from armed subversion, and we look to the United States for assistance. As our close neighbor and the leading economic, political and military force in the hemisphere, our problems are in many respects your problems, and your assistance is essential for their resolution.

I hope the American Congress will promptly enact the supplemental legislation for this year and the legislation for next year not only for my own country, but for the entire Central American region.

Sincerely,

JOSE NAPOLEON DUARTE.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, the Senator from Hawaii has argued that this additional money is not needed because it is only to fund programs that might be obligated and expended between now and September 30.

But the Senator knows that this money is intended to support a part of a program that is to be implemented over 2 years. The Congress has appropriated part of that program—$61.75 million. The second part of that program is $117 million, and the third part is included in the fiscal year 1985 request.

To delete this second installment is to take the heart out of a program that must provide the foundation on which Napoleon Duarte, the first civilian elected President in El Salvador in 50 years, will build a democracy. Duarte has the support of his military today. That military needs our support to establish security throughout the country so that Duarte can begin to build a real democracy.

When all is said and done, President Duarte needs our full support. He has laid his life on the line to fight for all the things we both believe in—human rights, land reform, democracy, an end to death squads, and a political solution to the conflict. He is working within a very difficult political system and he needs time. We must give him time so that he can implement his reforms. I believe Duarte should be given a change to bring peace, democracy and a better life to El Salvador. I vote against this amendment as a vote of confidence in Duarte.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Mr. President, I would like to remind the Senate that we have already appropriated $331 million for military assistance to El Salvador. In May of this year, a distinguished delegation, consisting of Senator JOHNSTON of Louisiana and Senator CHILES of Florida, went to El Salvador. This is part of the delegation report:

The delegation was struck by the fact that all regional military commanders who met with the delegation stressed the need for economic assistance as the most vital measure in addressing security concerns.

This bill has $90 million for economic assistance. My amendment does not touch that economic assistance money. Second, there is $73 million under AID that can be made available for El Salvador.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 30 seconds have expired.

Mr. INOUYE. I thank the Chair.

I yield 2 minutes to my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Hawaii for offering this amendment. There is no one in this body or in this country that can question the diligence of the Senator from Hawaii in assuring the commitment of this Nation to democratic procedures in El Salvador, and in assuring a commitment to full support of President Duarte.

The issue is not whether we support President Duarte or not. The fact of the matter is that this administration is trying to frontload military assistance to El Salvador in a way which is irresponsible and denies this body and the American people, the kind of oversight that they deserve. The administration is attempting to deny the progress that should be made in that country of moving toward a democratic society and taking constructive reforms such as eliminating the death squads and bringing to justice people who have been associated with the killings of American citizens in El Salvador.

By supporting this amendment we maintain our responsibility to the American people, our responsibility to the development of a sensible foreign policy, and the best opportunity for meaningful democratic reforms in El Salvador.

I hope the Members of this body will support this amendment offered by the Senator from Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii [Mr.

INOUYE]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber wishing to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 69, as follows:

NOT VOTING—2

Bentsen	Hollings

So Mr. Inouye's amendment (No. 3621) was rejected.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Senators wishing to conduct conversations will please retire to the Cloak Rooms.

The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] may offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator repeat that? The Senate is not in order. The Chair cannot hear the request of the Senator.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] may offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Oregon.

AMENDMENT NO. 3622

(Purpose: To reaffirm the United States commitment to furnishing international population and family planning assistance under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961)

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, on behalf of myself and Senator BRADLEY, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD], for himself and Mr. BRADLEY, proposes an amendment numbered 3622.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 105, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following:

SEC. 305. (a) The Senate finds that—

(1) in 1974 delegations representing the governments of 136 countries, including the United States, unanimously endorsed a statement of the World Population Conference which calls for efforts to address population growth in the context of goals for socioeconomic development and also recognizes both the rights and the responsibilities of all couples to family planning;

(2) in 1984, global population is projected to increase by more than 80 million people, the largest annual increase in the history of the world;

(3) a recent study by the National Academy of Sciences, which is supported by numerous other studies, finds that "family planning programs have a significant, independent effect over and above socioeconomic factors" on the decline of fertility in developing countries;

(4) for two decades and with repeated bipartisan leadership, the Congress has committed the United States Government to strong support for international, voluntary population and family planning programs;

(5) in the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, the Congress states as national policy that "voluntary population planning programs can make a substantial contribution to economic development, higher living standards, and improved health and nutrition";

(6) in 1982, the Agency for International Development (hereafter in this subsection referred to as "AID") accurately expressed the intent of the Congress regarding support for population and family planning by stating: "Assistance for voluntary population and family planning programs is an essential part of a cost effective program of United States development assistance";

(7) as part of the United States commitment to voluntary population and family planning the Congress specifically has given high priority to United States support for the work of nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) in voluntary population and family planning programs in developing countries;

(8) the Congress has prohibited the use of United States population assistance to pay for abortion, biomedical research on abortion, or lobbying for abortion as a method of family planning, and AID repeatedly has reported to the Congress, based on ongoing audits, that AID funds are not spent for these activities or any other activities not conducted in accordance with applicable Federal laws and regulations;

(9) the conference report of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1981 asserts that the prohibitions on abortion funding authorized by the Act sufficiently constitute the "necessary limits on United States support for international population planning programs with respect to concern about adequate directives against promotion of abortion-related activities";

(10) the AID document of September 1982 entitled "Policy Paper: Population Assistance" sets forth United States population assistance policy as authorized by law;

(11) the House of Representatives has reiterated its support for this policy again in 1984 with its passage of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1984, and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate has done the same with its own version of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act; and

(12) the July 13, 1984, "Policy Statement: International Conference on Population" released by AID departs from congressional authorization and intent as well as current practice with respect to furnishing United States population assistance.

(b) The Senate hereby reaffirms the commitment of the United States, as set forth in section 104 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and as evidenced by funding in annual appropriations Acts, to the furnishing of population assistance.

(c) It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) United States policy toward furnishing such assistance, and the administration of such assistance, should continue to comply faithfully with the intent of Congress in enacting such Acts; and

(2) the President, in furnishing population assistance, should not deny funds to any multilateral institution or any nongovernmental or private and voluntary organization because of the participation by such institution or organization, paid for with funds derived from private, non-governmental sources, in any activity involving population growth or family planning which is carried out in accordance with all applicable Federal laws and regulations.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. I wonder if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] will yield momentarily and I will ask unanimous consent that his amendment, which has now been sent to the desk, be temporarily set aside in order that we can complete a matter of business which can be handled very quickly with the Senator from Massachusetts relating to the subject we have been debating and have acted upon, and then return to the Packwood amendment without intervening business.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I have no objection.

Mr. HATFIELD. I make that unanimous-consent request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. QUAYLE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3623

(Purpose: To condition military assistance to El Salvador on continued progress in human rights)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is absolutely correct. Will the Senate please be in order. The Senate will not proceed until the Senate is in order. Will those Senators desiring to have conversations and those staffs desiring to have conversations please retire from the Chamber.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] proposes an amendment numbered 3623.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

To be inserted at page 73 after line 26 in H.R. 6040: "None of the funds appropriated in this bill for the purpose of providing military assistance to the Government of El Salvador shall be available after October 1, 1984, for obligation or expenditure unless the President has, by that date, prepared and transmitted to the Congress a report—stating his determination that the Government of El Salvador has demonstrated progress towards free elections, land reform, freedom of association, the establishment of the rule of law and an effective judicial system, and the termination of the activities of the so-called death squads, including vigorous action against members of such squads who are guilty of crimes and prosecution to the extent possible of such members who are past offenders."

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this amendment will condition additional military assistance to the Government of El Salvador on a report by the President stating his determination that the Government of El Salvador has demonstrated progress toward free elections, land reform, freedom of association, the establishment of the rule of law and the termination of the activities of the so-called death squads. This language is precisely the same language that was overwhelmingly adopted by the Senate when we passed the earlier supplemental appropriation last April 5, 1984.

It is true that, since we last debated American foreign policy in El Salvador, there have been important developments in that country. The most important event, of course, was the election of Jose Napoleon Duarte to be the new President of El Salvador.

I have enormous respect for President Duarte, and I am impressed with his personal courage and his commitment to democracy and human rights for the people of El Salvador. This amendment will, I believe, strengthen President Duarte's hand as he moves to achieve those objectives which we all share for El Salvador, an end to the death squads and continued progress toward land reform and justice.

When I met with President Duarte during his first visit to Washington, DC, last spring, he told me and other Senators that we should trust him and that we should give his government a chance to carry out its policies. Enacting this amendment is in no way a statement of distrust; nor is it in any way an interference with President Duarte's efforts to achieve his administration's objectives. In fact, this amendment simply restates the policy that was first propounded by the Carter administration, that was initially adopted by the Reagan administration, that was endorsed by the Kissinger Commission and that was written into law by an overwhelming majority of the Members of the Senate last April—that is, that military assistance to El Salvador should continue to be conditioned on progress in achieving respect for human rights in that war-torn country.

What are the realities in El Salvador at this moment? We know, for example, that the death squads still exist, that the individuals responsible for the death squad activity are still active inside El Salvador, and that, at any given moment, the activities of the death squads could be revised. We should give fair warning that, if the death squads are not gone for good, U.S. military assistance may in fact be gone for good.

We also know that, although the soldiers responsible for the murders of the four American churchwomen were convicted for those crimes last spring, the tradition of El Salvador continues—no matter how heinous the act or how guilty the party, no officer in the Salvadoran military has ever been charged with a crime or convicted of any offense. This fact is dramatized by two important events that deserve the attention of the Members of this body.

First, we know who was responsible for murdering the U.S. labor advisers at the Sheraton Hotel in San Salvador. The Salvadoran authorities know who is responsible for those murders. They are officers today inside the Salvadoran military. The evidence is clear and convincing. And yet these men have not been called to account for those horrible deeds.

Second, as the result of an investigation conducted by the Government's own Human Rights Commission, we know who was responsible for the murders of the 74 innocent Salvadoran citizens from the town of Las Hojas. There is no mystery as to what happened there. The guilty officers—a colonel and a captain—have been identified, and there is overwhelming evidence against them. But nothing has been done.

There will be no peace in El Salvador until the people of El Salvador are free from the terror and repression of officially sanctioned acts of violence against innocent civilians.

Let us not step back from our commitment to human rights. Let us remain true to our past pronouncements and our past policies. Let us keep the issue of human rights front and center—a main concern of our policies in Central America. Let us support the efforts of the Duarte administration to bring justice to El Salvador. Let us support the efforts to bring reform to the Salvadoran military. Let us once again make the statement to those who care about the future of El Salvador: Yes, we will support you in your struggles, and yes, we will provide military assistance to aid you in your efforts, but yes, we will do this only if you continue down the road toward a true democracy and human rights for all the people of El Salvador.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. President, this amendment is basically a repetition of the language which was included in the supplemental in April of this year with regard to human rights. I share the strong feeling which has been expressed here today that there is great hope for progress in the area of human rights under President Duarte. However, it seems to me, given the large dollar size that is being considered here, that it would be worthwhile for us as a Congress to have a report on this issue. The language which I have included in this amendment is identical to the language which had the support of Senator KASTEN and others in April of this year. It requires a report no later than October 1, 1984.

Mr. President, I believe that this amendment will strengthen President Duarte's efforts to respect human rights and to further democratize the country. I hope the Senate will accept this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, the Senator is correct. This was in the urgent supplemental. It is the reporting language that we have carried throughout the past several El Salvador-related measures.

I shall be happy, on behalf of Senator INOUYE and myself, to accept this amendment. I ask unanimous consent that I be made a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is there further debate? The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment (No. 3623) was agreed to.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3622

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, are we back on my amendment now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I ask unanimous consent to add the following Senators as original cosponsors.

Senators CRANSTON, HART, LEVIN, RIEGLE, GLENN, INOUYE, METZENBAUM, MATSUNAGA, BURDICK, DODD, BINGAMAN, KENNEDY, HOLLINGS, PERCY, WEICKER, COHEN, STAFFORD, CHAFEE, MATHIAS, EVANS, HEINZ, and HAWKINS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, this is a relatively straightforward and simple sense-of-the-Senate resolution. It puts the Senate on record as saying: What has been the traditional policy of the United States with regard to population growth in overseas countries should continue to be that policy.

During 20 years of consideration by Republican and Democratic Presidents, and Republican and Democratic Senates and by the House, the U.S. policy has been to encourage other countries of this world to undertake population stabilization programs if they so choose. We have not forced them to do so. We have never made it a condition of our diplomatic relations with them. We have never made it a condition of aid. But we have encouraged them to do so.

Ten years ago at the World Population Conference at Bucharest, the United States took the lead—was the godfather, almost—in encouraging other countries to undertake programs of population stabilization. That was at a time when most of the Communist bloc countries opposed that position. They were still operating under the theory of economic determinism, that growth in and of itself was good. The logic went, the more people the better and if countries simply followed proper economic policies, they could accommodate all of their population growth. But, that was not the U.S. position.

Our position was then that population growth, especially in the lesser developed countries, could not help but demean the quality of life. That position continued up until July 13, 1984, when the administration issued a statement indicating that population in and of itself was not a factor in the quality of life. I quote from their statement.

"Population growth is of itself a neutral phenomenon. It is not necessarily good or ill. It becomes an asset or a problem only in conjunction with other factors, such as economic policy, social constraints, need for manpower," and so forth.

Mr. President, is that now to be the policy of this country? A policy that will be rested upon no study that I have been able to find. I have asked the administration what was the basis for that conclusion.

Almost simultaneously with the administration's announcement, the World Bank issued a study reaching the opposite conclusion. Other studies over the last decade which had been issued by innumerable groups—private, public, and otherwise—come to the opposite conclusion. I know of no reputable study that justifies the administration's conclusion that population growth is a neutral factor and, therefore, has no effect on the quality of life.

So one part of the resolution simply—and I shall read it—says that "U.S. policy toward furnishing such assistance"—this is population assistance—"and the administration of such assistance, should continue to comply faithfully with the intent of Congress in enacting such acts."

If you look at past laws, the policy has been as I stated. That is one part of the debate that is going on about the issue of population stabilization throughout the world, Mr. President.

One other issue that has been dragged into it, unfortunately, is the issue of abortion. I want to read what the current law is in the United States relating to our foreign aid funds:

None of the funds made available to carry out this part may be used to pay for the performance of abortions as a method of family planning or to motivate or coerce any person to practice abortions.

That is the current law, Mr. President. This sense-of-the-Senate resolution makes no effort to undermine the current law. There is no evidence that any U.S. foreign assistance funds are being used to carry out abortions or to promote abortions. Therefore, the issue of abortion should not be before us today. Except the administration has indicated that it intents, in carrying out the administration overseas of population stabilization funds, to terminate funds that go to organizations that use private funds to promote or offer abortions.

I emphasize "private funds," Mr. President. It is interesting to note that in the first draft statement of the administration's policy, they indicated that they were going to cut off any kind of population stabilization funds: not only to organizations but also to governments that use even their own funds to promote abortion.

Mr. President, it is one thing to have a policy about funding of abortions in this country. We have had that battle on this floor many times. By and large, we do not fund them. We do not fund them in any of our foreign assistance. That is a matter of policy for this country. But it is another matter for us to say that we are not going to offer funds to any organization in the furtherance of population stabilization if they happen to use private or other non-U.S. funds to also offer abortions. That, Mr. President, is not our business.

Let me read the second part of the "whereas" clause of this resolution.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Before the Senator proceeds, Mr. President, would he be good enough to yield to me for just 1 minute, not in any way to detract from his remarks?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I shall be happy to do so, Mr. President, as long as I do not lose my right to the floor.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I just wanted to rise to say I had heard the Senator addressing this body on this issue. I just want to say: "Thank you and thank you again for bringing this issue to the floor." I think the policy of our Government to fail to enunciate a policy that has stood for years on this subject is a very retrogressive one. I think the Senator is serving the Nation as well as the world, and I think he is serving the future of mankind particularly well. I thank him for his effort.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I thank very much my good friend and distinguished colleague from Ohio.

The whereas clause reads:

The President, in furnishing population assistance, should not deny funds to any multilateral institution or any nongovernmental or private and voluntary organization because of the participation by such institution or organization, paid for with funds derived from private, non-governmental sources, in any activity involving population growth or family planning which is carried out in accordance with all applicable Federal laws and regulations.

Mr. President, I think I know what the genesis of the administration's position is as far as the attempt to cut off funds from organizations that use their own funds or privately received funds to offer abortions. Several years ago, the administration started a very vigorous audit of Planned Parenthood in this country. Planned Parenthood received some Federal funds for population activity in this country, but received no Federal funds for abortion.

The administration was convinced that Planned Parenthood was commingling the Federal funds and private funds somehow and using Government funds for abortions. Those audits were thorough and they were complete. They were almost pursued with a vengeance, and the Government's thesis was absolutely and completely rebutted without question. Because Planned Parenthood came out with clean hands as a perfectly legitimate organization that was in every sense following Federal law, the administration felt that it had egg on its face. This resolution is aimed primarily at the International Planned Parenthood Federation, and if this resolution were to pass, they would lose about 20 percent of their funds worldwide—about $12 million.

Mr. President, taking the continent of Africa as a example, only seven governments provide public funds for family planning. In all of the rest of the countries that have any family planning programs at all, they are done by private organizations, the principal one being the International Planned Parenthood Federation or its affiliates. If we are going to strike at them, if we are going to say: "Because you use private funds to do something which is legal in this country, promote abortion, we are going to cut off your public funds," that is a matter worthy of extraordinary and extended debate. I would oppose it. It would be a major change of the domestic or foreign policy of this country.

But if we are going to do that, it ought to be done in the full light of day. It ought to be done with not only the acquiescence but concurrence and acceptance of Congress of that policy. That policy would be a mistake. That policy is a mistake. And this sense-of-the-Senate resolution is nothing more than a twofold recommendation to the administration:

One, excessive population growth overseas is not good for those countries and, for those countries that want to try to stem it, we should be willing to help them;

Two, we will continue our present policy of funding organizations operating in countries overseas that operate in accordance with our law: that is, they use none of our Government funds for abortions.

That is all this resolution does. I hope the Senate will see fit to pass it overwhelmingly.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I yield the floor.

Mr. NICKLES. For a question?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes.

Mr. NICKLES. In looking at the sense-of-the-Senate resolution of the Senator, could he inform the Senate as to how much money is going toward world population control from the United States?

Mr. PACKWOOD. About $240 million total.

Mr. NICKLES. $240 million per year?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes, throughout the world, although there are still about 400 million women in this world who have no access to any family-planning facilities at all.

Mr. NICKLES. This Senator is not familiar with other countries' contributions. Are there other countries that contribute substantial funds as well or is the United States the primary source of funds?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Other countries contribute. I do not know how much.

Mr. NICKLES. That is my next question. I know the conference is convening, this week?

Mr. PACKWOOD. It is meeting this week.

Mr. NICKLES. This week. I was wondering what percentage of the funds that are available—I do not know if they are contributed multinationally or if all this money goes into one pot—is coming from the United States and what percentage from other countries?

Mr. PACKWOOD. That I cannot answer. As best I can determine the administration's policy, they are not talking about changing the amount of money, simply the rules under which it is distributed.

Mr. NICKLES. A further question. In looking at the Senator's sense-of-the-Senate resolution, it says:

> • • • administration of such assistance, should continue to comply faithfully with the intent of Congress in enacting such acts.

What does the Senator mean by "complying with the intent of Congress in enacting such acts"?

Mr. PACKWOOD. In 1982, the Agency for International Development [AID] accurately expressed the intent of Congress regarding support for population and family planning by stating: "Assistance for voluntary population and family planning programs is an essential part of a cost effective program of United States development assistance."

Mr. NICKLES. This is No. 6 in the whereas clause?

Mr. PACKWOOD. That is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. So what the Senator is stating is the present congressional intent in existing law?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Let me also read to the Senator what the Senator from Oklahoma can read for himself—No. 9 says:

> the conference report of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1981 asserts that the prohibitions on abortion funding authorized by the Act sufficiently constitute the "necessary limits on United States support for international population planning programs with respect to concern about adequate directives against promotion of abortion-related activities";

I am not quite sure what the Senator from Oklahoma is driving at. Is he driving at the fact that for the past 20 years it has not been the policy of the United States to encourage countries that wanted to undertake population-stabilization efforts?

Mr. NICKLES. I am just trying to understand what the Senator has in his first paragraph. He read that and it says: "Should comply faithfully with the intent of Congress in enacting such acts." I am not sure what that is. I would just like to know what it is before we adopt the resolution.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Well, again I can read from the July——

Mr. NICKLES. I will ask another question.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Go ahead.

Mr. NICKLES. I still do not understand the intent of the Senator, but I will go to the second part of the resolution. It says, "The President, in furnishing population assistance, should not deny funds to any multilateral"—is that supposed to be "multinational"?

Mr. PACKWOOD. No, multilateral.

Mr. NICKLES. Multilateral institution or any nongovernmental or private and voluntary organization because of the participation by such institution or organization, paid for with funds derived from private, nongovernmental sources, in any activity involving population growth or family planning which is carried out in accordance with all applicable Federal laws and regulations.

Is this second part directed primarily to let us not deny funds to the International Planned Parenthood Federation?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes, that is correct. And similar organizations that use their own private funds or funds derived from other than U.S. Government sources for abortion.

Mr. NICKLES. Are there other organizations, that receive money from the Federal Government today, that use other non-Federal funds for abortion besides International Planned Parenthood?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I would assume so, but I am not sure.

Mr. NICKLES. Well, it says, "to any multilateral institution." The Senator mentioned International Planned Parenthood. I was wondering, since it is written as if it would cover several institutions, is this resolution directed toward more than just one organization? This Senator at least would like to know what the other institutions are, if any. The Senator mentioned the one, International Planned Parenthood. That is probably the largest.

Mr. PACKWOOD. One is the United Nations Fund for Population Assistance.

Mr. NICKLES. Does the United Nations Fund for Population Assistance provide private funds for abortion?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Some of the organizations that the United Nations funds do. Whether or not the United Nations parent organization itself does not is a matter of debate. But I think, from the standpoint of answering the Senator's question, that it is probably a moot point. Some of the organizations do fund it, as does International Planned Parenthood.

Mr. NICKLES. Some of the organizations that the United Nations funds for population control do fund groups that fund abortion?

Mr. PACKWOOD. That is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. The Senator mentioned International Planned Parenthood. They presently receive how much money from the U.S. Government per year?

Mr. PACKWOOD. About $11 or $12 million.

Mr. NICKLES. So they get $11 to $12 million out of this $242 million?

Mr. PACKWOOD. That is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. And the remainder of the money is either going to other multilateral institutions, private groups, and/or governments?

Mr. PACKWOOD. In some cases, to governments directly.

Mr. NICKLES. In a majority of cases, the governments directly?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I am not sure that it is a majority. A number of governments run their own population control activities.

Initially, the administration policy was going to cut off family planning money to those governments that fund abortion with their own money in addition to private organizations. The administration removed this clause in their final position statement because the administration has such a backlog in its attempts to dictate population control to those countries.

Mr. NICKLES. I appreciate the Senator's response to my questions.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon would restate existing U.S. policy with respect to our Nation's assistance for international programs of family planning. It reiterates the sense of the Senate that our existing policy with respect to such programs should be continued.

Our existing policy is straightforward. It is to contribute to programs of voluntary family planning. It bans funding for programs which use abortion as a population control measure. And it seeks to assist the policies of other governments—not to impose our own policy—in their efforts to stabilize population growth and achieve economic development.

That has been our policy for two decades and it remains our policy. The law has not been changed.

Recent administration actions seek to rewrite that policy unilaterally in the U.S. delegation's presentation to the United Nations Conference on Population in Mexico City this week.

That policy change is contained in the language of our report which claims that population pressures have no negative economic impact on developing nations. That is not a policy change that the Congress has agreed to. And it is a policy position flatly refuted by history, by fact and by commonsense.

The World Bank has reported that population growth at today's rate will result in a world population of between 5 and 10 billion people by the middle of the next century. Unless we wish to see nations resorting to far harsher means of controlling population pressures than any we have seen as yet, such a massive population expansion must be of concern to us.

The achievement of a stable, prosperous world order is in the best interests of the United States. But we cannot and will not see such a world if a third or more of its people are ill-fed, uneducated, and suffer devastating poverty.

The administration's claim that a growing population can add to economic health may well have been true in the context of the nineteenth century industrialization of the Western nations. But that sanguine view overlooks the fact that U.S. economic growth depended as much upon the rapid expansion in our adult population through immigration as upon a high-birth rate. And it overlooks the fact that Europe's unemployed millions were able to emigrate to escape poverty and hopelessness at home.

No such opportunity exists for Third World peoples today. Nor is there any rational comparison to be made between the economic contributions made by grown adults and the economic needs of small children.

The nations of the world which see their populations outgrowing any conceivable economic gains cannot be asked to take heart from the 19th century experience of the United States.

The nation in which the Population Conference is being held, Mexico, has since 1977 managed to bring its population increase rate down to 2.4 per thousand. But that nation still faces incredible population pressures from the children already born who need education and health care, from the young people who look in vain for employment, and from the rural migrants who are crowding into the slums of Mexico City faster than they can ever be absorbed.

Our own Nation faces an immigration problem on our southern border that is a direct outgrowth of the clash between population growth and economic development.

In the face of such a reality, it is shortsighted to urge that simple government deregulation of the economy can somehow accommodate the needs of the millions of children being born every year in countries which do not even have adequate drinking water systems for the existing population.

It is important to note what this debate is not about. It is not about abortion. It is not about financing abortion; our Government does not finance abortion, either at home or abroad. It is not about encouraging abortion; our Government does not encourage abortion anywhere. The administration's policy shift will do nothing to either legalize or criminalize abortion in other nations. We do not direct what other nations' governments choose to do in their domestic matters.

It is important to reiterate that the ultimate effects of unchecked population growth are most likely to lead to exactly the kinds of harsh repressive and mandatory population controls that the administration deplores. The experience of the Indian Government in the 1970's, where efforts to forcibly sterilize people led to riots, and the tragic reports of female infanticide trickling out of mainland China today are testimony to the extremes to which population pressures have already driven some people and some governments.

These are not outcomes that we should encourage and they are not outcomes we can afford to ignore. The existing U.S. population planning policy is targeted to voluntary programs, it does not finance abortions, and it rests in the understanding that economic development cannot and will not succeed unless the world can achieve more stable and lower population growth rates.

I believe that our Nation's population policy should be reaffirmed as it currently stands, and I will, therefore, vote accordingly.

AMENDMENT NO. 3624

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DANFORTH). The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] proposes an amendment numbered 3624 to the Packwood amendment numbered 3622:

At the end of the pending amendment, add the following:

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, it is the sense of Congress that the President is to be commended for his outstanding leadership in condemning abortion at home and abroad as a grave injustice against unborn human beings and that, consistent with law, the President should be encouraged to continue to modify the domestic and foreign policies of the United States Government to protect unborn human beings from the violence of abortion.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] to emphasize that his amendment has no place on this piece of legislation. But if the Senate is going to be required to vote on this proposition, it should also be required to vote on mine.

Thus, I am offering this second-degree amendment to make clear that the President should be congratulated for his many efforts against abortion, most especially including the recent White House policy paper touching on the subject of population planning.

Adoption of my amendment will confirm that Congress has no problem whatsoever with Reagan administration initiatives to curb the abhorrent practice of abortion wherever it occurs.

It is important, Mr. President, to separate the question of family planning from abortion, and I believe my amendment clearly does that.

It is simple, and it is short, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I think the Senator from New Jersey is seeking recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, Senator PACKWOOD and I have offered this resolution today to reaffirm current U.S. foreign policy on family planning assistance. This is not a partisan issue; it never has been for the 20 years this country has had a policy of promoting family planning. Suddenly, this administration is attempting to make fundamental changes in the U.S. family planning policy. Congress has rejected attempts to undermine family planning programs here in the United States, and I hope Congress will act forcefully to reject the new international policy proposals now being presented in Mexico City.

What is at stake here? Last year 15 million children in the world died of starvation, and 16 percent of the world's children are malnourished. These are staggering facts and a tragedy of monumental proportions. In the face of that problem, how can we tell those governments that family planning is irrelevant? How can we say that we will try to prevent them from getting family planning funds to reduce the number of children in their countries that will be starving in 5 years—or 3 years—or 1 year?

How can we, at the same time cut back on our share of food aid, follow an economic policy that keeps worldwide interest rates high, and says to a less developed country, "It's your tough luck that you're caught in the pincers of a stagnating economy and a cutback in family planning assistance?"

Mr. President, we cannot do this because to do so ignores human suffering and starvation. And certainly one of the moral issues of our time is to try to prevent that human tragedy.

Mr. President, this week in Mexico City—the world's most populous city—delegations from the U.N.'s 158 member states will attend the 1984 International Conference on Population. It was 10 years ago that the U.N. held in Bucharest its first worldwide conference on population. The 1974 Bucharest Conference produced a solid consensus on the need for the integration of population planning into overall economic development strategies. High population growth can and does hinder economic development, and family planning can help reduce population growth rates.

Most people of the world now live in countries that support family planning efforts. This was simply not the case 20 years ago. These efforts have shown some successes. Over the past decade, the population growth rate has dropped from 2 percent a year to 1.7 percent year today.

Mr. President, we still have a very serious problem on our hands. The world population will increase by 82 million people this year—the largest increase ever. Over 90 percent of the growth will occur in the developing countries. There will be 1.7 billion more people on Earth in the year 2000 than at present. Since the gap between rich and poor is widening, an additional 600 million people will be below the world poverty line by the year 2000.

The highest growth rates are in the poorest countries and unless something is done to slow population growth, many countries—and most people—will remain trapped in poverty and even more children will starve. Rapid population growth exacerbates the problem. The World Health Organization has estimated that the proportion of the world's population living with proper sewage systems has declined in recent years, and another study showed that two-fifths of the world population does not have access to clean water.

Mr. President, the population of the African continent is now 531 million. By the year 2000, the population is projected to be 855 million, and by 2020, 1.4 billion people living on the continent of Africa. At present, 59 percent of those people are illiterate. How can Africa build enough schools to overcome illiteracy if the number of people nearly triples over the next 36 years?

Mr. President, it is incumbent on the United States to reiterate its support for our current foreign policy on family planning assistance. But today in Mexico City the U.S. delegation is presenting a new policy that rewrites U.S. policy in two major ways.

First, Senator PACKWOOD has already stated the current law. The existing law prohibits the use of U.S. international population assistance from supporting abortions or abortion-related activities. But the new White House policy would add a new restriction eliminating money for family planning to nongovernmental organizations that support abortions with their own funds. The effect of this policy would be to cut off about $50 to $70 million in Federal funds to many nongovernmental organizations such as International Planned Parenthood, one of the main organizations engaged in providing family planning services to less developed countries.

I cannot comprehend the logic of this new policy. It is not about abortion—remember the law now says no U.S. funds can be used for abortion. What the policy is about is denying support for family planning services that developing countries are seeking from the United States and that prevent millions more children from starving every year. The administration's new policy will do a great deal to suppress family planning efforts, the most sensible way to avoid increased abortions. Women living in developing countries need access to safe and effective methods of family planning if they are to exercise their right to make decisions about family size.

Mr. President, according to the Population Crisis Committee, a loss of $50 million in funding for family planning would most likely lead to millions of more unwanted pregnancies and hundreds of thousands of more abortions each year. Loss of funding may also lead to harsher government controls in many countries on couples' rights to have children.

Does it make sense to eliminate funding for some of the most effective organizations promoting family planning? Mr. President, experts estimate that about 20 million illegal abortions take place annually, primarily in developing nations. Greater access to voluntary family planning reduces this rate of abortion.

Over 50 percent of the beds in maternity wards in many Third World hospitals are currently filled with women who are seriously ill or dying from clandestine abortions. Expansion of voluntary family planning services will prevent much of this terrible tragedy.

Illegal abortion is now a leading cause of death for women in many developing nations, leaving millions of children motherless. Wider availability of contraceptive services will bring down this appalling death rate.

The administration's current policy is simply wrongheaded. We in Congress need to send a signal that we will oppose this shift in policy.

Mr. President, there is a second shift in policy that the administration has taken. This relates to the relationship between population growth and economic development. For over 20 years, the philosophy justifying U.S. policy on population aid has been "continued high rates of population growth significantly place burdens on economies unable to provide sufficient goods and services for the growing population."

The new policy is an incredible shift in philosophy. It says, "The relationship between population growth and economic development is not a negative one. More people do not mean less economic growth." This completely contradicts the recent World Bank's "Annual World Development Report." The report finds that poverty and rapid population growth reinforce each other and that unless prompt family planning measures are taken to reduce fertility rates in developing countries, the world's population will explode from 4.8 billion to over 10 billion by the year 2050.

Yet this administration will assert this week that more people do not necessarily mean less economic growth.

Let us look at that, Mr. President. Yes, that is true in some cases: In our early years, America's expanding population increased markets and helped increase growth. But most of the population growth is occurring not in this country but in very poor nations. And in these countries more people does mean less growth.

Mr. President, it stands to reason that if you have a vast unpopulated continent, population growth is essential. Witness Canada's efforts to increase its population. But if you are Brazil, you see population growth eating up your potential for economic growth. If you are Ethiopia, population growth visits human misery on millions of children who will starve to death while Washington waits for a supply-side miracle.

How long will it take to get economic growth to a level that we can feed all the people of the world?

The sad fact is that economic growth will not be sufficient to solve the world's population and poverty problems. According to the recently released 1984 world development report of the World Bank, it says the following:

> Failure to act now to slow population growth is likely to mean a lower quality of life for millions of people.

The report points out that whereas modest growth in the GDP of industrial countries means modest growth in their per capita incomes, for the developing countries there is no such easy equation. The population of developing countries is growing by 2 percent a year, and more in some countries, so that gross domestic product growth of 2 percent is merely a preliminary step before these countries can start to improve their per capita incomes.

Let us take one example. We made earlier references to Africa.

In low-income Africa, where population growth is exceeding 3 percent a year in many countries, economic growth between 1980 and 1985 will average only 1.7 percent per year. That means that per capita income, which is already the lowest in the world at $100 to $400 per capita, is falling.

Think of it, Mr. President, per capita income in the poorest countries of the world is falling.

Mr. President, how will high sustained growth in the industrial world in the future help this terrible problem?

Well, even if the gross domestic product in the industrial economies grew at an annual rate of 4.3 percent per year between 1985 and 1995, for 10 years, the gross domestic product in low-income Africa would average only 3.2 percent per year.

In the much more likely scenario of a real growth rate of about 2.5 percent per year in the industrial countries, real growth in low-income Africa would be only about 2.8 percent. This is a lot of numbers. But what that means is the following—that according to the World Bank, population growth rates are as follows: Ethiopia 3.1, Zaire 3.2, Uganda 3.5, Tanzania 3.5, Madagascar 3.1, Sudan 3, and Ghana 3. Compare this with already low per capita income levels in these countries using 1981 figures, $140 in Ethiopia, $210 in Zaire, $220 in Uganda, $280 in Tanzania, $330 in Madagascar, $380 in Sudan, or $400 in Ghana. The economic growth rates are smaller than the annual population growth rates of most African countries over the next 20 years. And when this is compared with an already low per capita income level in those countries, you realize that an economic policy based on the premise that there is a trickle down of economic growth, will simply not be sufficient to raise these countries out of poverty.

Mr. President, I hope that Congress will not stand by as millions more children starve. I hope, Mr. President, that we will act, that we will face up to the steps necessary to reduce the problems of the future in these countries. Yet, it is surely the consequence of new administration policy that that effort will be much more difficult.

Mr. President, as I stated earlier, this is simply a wrongheaded policy. If adopted, the policy that says cut back on family planning assistance to the Third World, a policy that says there is no relationship between economic growth and population growth, Mr. President, if this policy is adopted, we will see more people on Earth, more abortions, more poverty, more starvation, and very possibly harsher government controls on individual freedoms.

Mr. President, we need to send a signal to the White House to reverse these policies. It is our hope that support of this resolution will accomplish that objective.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I rise in strong opposition to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from New Jersey. I strongly support the President's policy on population control programs, as presented by the distinguished former Senator Buckley at the U.N. Conference on Population, held this week in Mexico City. Therefore, I support the second-degree amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

There has been much confusion and much misinformation about the intent and the effect of this new policy. Let's get one thing straight. The United States will continue to support voluntary family planning programs around the world. This administration recommended and obtained increases in funding for such programs over the last 3 years and is recommending another $10 million increase for 1985. The administration is saying very clearly, however, that killing unborn children is not an acceptable method of controlling population and that we will no longer be a party, even through intermediaries, to such activity. It is also saying that family planning programs must be truly voluntary, in order to warrant U.S. support. We all have heard the reports about forced sterilization, compulsory abortion policies, and infanticide—methods endorsed by several groups and countries as moral means of reducing population. The new policy will not countenance these abuses. That's what the administration's new policy is all about.

Why is this change in our international policy necessary when U.S. law already prohibits the use of funds for abortion or abortion research? The answer is very simple. U.S. funds are commingled with other funds by population control groups and the Agency for International Development has never conducted a full audit or evaluation of its contributions to these groups. All that is required is a little after-the-fact bookkeeping. In the end, AID provides as much as 90 percent of the budget to some organizations, which in the past, have promoted, aggressively, abortion in the Third World as a method of family planning. When the United States provides a substantial portion of the budget of an organization, in effect pays its salaries and overhead expenses, then the United States, in practical terms, is supporting the activities of the organization.

Some may say that these groups do not promote abortion in violation of U.S. law or the laws of other countries. This assertion is patently false. A report of the Working Group on the Promotion of Family Planning as a Basic Human Right to the International Planned Parenthood Federation, dated November 1983, advocates that:

> Family planning associations and other nongovernmental organizations should not use the absence of law or the existence of an unfavorable law as an excuse for inaction; action outside the law, and even in violation of it, is part of the process of stimulating change.

The report makes it clear that family planning organizations should ignore any legal regulation of their industry. I believe that the threat of loss of funds is the only mechanism that will ensure that these groups comply with stated and reaffirmed U.S. policy.

Under the new policy, there will be a cutoff of U.S. aid to international proabortion organizations, but it will be entirely at their own option. If they renounce abortion and abortion related activities, they will continue to get U.S. funds. The pathfinder fund has already done so. It recognizes that effective family planning and population control programs need not include abortion. The U.S. policy will redirect the cutoff funds to non-pro-abortion family planning organizations and there will be no reduction of family planning services. Some of these groups obviously will have to make a decision between their devotion to killing the unborn and their desire for taxpayers' money.

Members of this body and our colleagues in the House have voted time and again to restrict the use of U.S. dollars for abortion activity. Recently, the vote margins in the House have widened on this subject. However, the United States has never attempted to apply its own domestic standard of no longer funding abortion to the population control programs it administers through the Agency for International Development, or contributes to in other countries and multilateral organizations. For the first time, the President's policy will be consistent with stated and reaffirmed national policy: This country will not pay for abortion activities and this country does not consider abortion to be an acceptable form of family planning.

I am prepared to accept the Packwood/Bradley amendment if the Helms second-degree amendment is accepted.

I am confident that my colleagues will show again their support for our President's compassionate and humane policies of protecting the unborn and of refusing to be a party to the whoesale slaughter of innocent human beings at home and abroad. I urge my colleagues to accept the Helms amendment to the Packwood/Bradley amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I had hoped that this particular sense-of-the-Senate resolution would not turn into an out-and-out battle on the subject of abortion. I want to read again from the United States Code about our population stabilization policy overseas.

This is section 215(b), United States Code:

> The Congress recognizes that poor health conditions and uncontrolled population growth can vitiate otherwise successful development efforts.
> Large families in developing countries are the result of complex social and economic factors which change relatively slowly among the poor majority least affected by economic progress, as well as the result of a lack of effective birth control. Therefore, effective family planning depends upon economic and social change as well as the delivery of services and is often a matter of political and religious sensitivity. While every country has the right to determine its own policies with respect to population growth, voluntary population planning programs can make a substantial contribution to economic development, higher living standards, and improved health and nutrition.
> In order to increase the opportunities and motivation for family planning and to reduce the rate of population growth, the President is authorized to furnish assistance, on such terms and conditions as he may determine, for voluntary population planning. In addition to the provision of family planning information and services, including also information and services which relate to and support natural family planning methods, and the conduct of directly relevant demographic research, population planning programs shall emphasize motivation for small families.

That, Mr. President, is the policy of this country. That is what this sense-of-the-Senate resolution is designed to encourage, because it has been the policy of this country for 20 years.

We have simply asked that we continue what is the present law in this country. Present law says no Federal funds shall be used for abortion—whether in this country or overseas—with some very, very minor exceptions that this Congress has voted on from time to time in the past involving the life of the woman or rape or incest.

We are not suggesting that law be changed. I personally think it ought to be changed, but that is not for debate here.

Our distinguished colleague from North Carolina has now brought foursquare the issue of abortion into this debate. It was not my intentions nor was it the intention of Senator BRADLEY to debate that topic. It is not that we shy away from it, but we are discussing a supplemental appropriation bill that has money for population programs in it—$5 million in this supplemental bill—then we ought to limit ourselves to what should be the policy of this country involving population programs overseas. And we are suggesting continuing that policy.

Now, my distinguished colleague from North Carolina has added a provision that says:

> It is the sense of Congress that the President is to be commended for his outstanding leadership in condemning abortion at home and abroad as a grave injustice against unborn human beings and that, consistent with law, the President should be encouraged to continue to modify the domestic and foreign policies of the U.S. Government to protect unborn human beings from the violence of abortion.

That is foursquare, Mr. President, dragging a subject into this bill that does not need to be considered in this bill

It is fine for Congress to have again, out-and-out fight on human life statutes or another fight on a constitutional amendment to reverse the Supreme Court's position on whether or not a woman has a right to make a choice. Let us have it. We have had those fights in the last few years and I am sure we are going to have them for the next decade. But this is not the bill, this is not the place.

The Senator from North Carolina's amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey and myself is an effort by inference to change what has been the policy of the U.S. Government.

Therefore, Mr. President, I move to table the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] to table the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PERCY] are necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber wishing to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 52, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 3624 was rejected.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senate for a moment, in a moment, I intend to yield to the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD], who asked me to do as much. I hope that we may be able to resolve this issue.

Before I yield, may I say that, after consulting with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, he advises me that he believes we can finish this bill tonight. I think we ought to stay tonight, then, and try. It may take us until 10, 11, 12, or 1 o'clock, but I think it is worth the effort.

We must finish because we have to go to conference with the House, we have to act on a conference report and place a bill on the President's desk before we can go out. It is the hope of the leadership on this side that we can finish our necessary business tomorrow night, Thursday night.

The adjournment resolution, however, will be originated by the Senate and will provide for adjournment on Thursday, Friday, or Saturday. That is not meant to be an idle threat, certainly, nor anything more than a fair appraisal of the situation as we find it. But the agenda of business yet to be done as far as the leadership on this side is concerned, other than the vote we shall have tomorrow on cloture on the Wilkinson nomination, is just two items. This is to complete action through the conference report stage on the supplemental and to do our best on the agriculture bill and hope to finish it. There may be other matters we can do, but those are the two things remaining. The supplemental is the urgent must.

Mr. President, I urge Senators to use restraint and cooperate with the two managers in trying to bring this bill to completion as soon as possible.

At this time, Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished junior Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I certainly agree with the statement of the majority leader and the chairman of the committee that we should try to finish this bill tonight. I shall certainly cooperate. I think all of us will.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, the ranking member of the Appropriations Committee.

I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, much as I would like to proceed with the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] and myself and others, I feel that with the Helms amendment attached, it will do more harm than good. Therefore, I withdraw my amendment.

The amendment (No. 3622) was withdrawn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest to the Members at this time that we have approximately 20 amendments that we understand will be offered. If Senators would remain on the floor, there are a number of amendments that could be handled, I think, rather rapidly. We hope to get to them in the most expeditious way possible.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent now to set aside the pending committee amendment temporarily in order that the Senator from Oklahoma may offer an amendment that I think we can handle rather quickly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3627

(Purpose: To add provisions relating to grazing of acreage diverted under the 1985 wheat program)

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], for himself, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. DOLE, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. NICKLES, and Mr. BAUCUS, proposes an amendment numbered 3627.

Mr. BOREN. I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 5, between lines 15 and 16 insert the following:

"1985 WHEAT PROGRAM

"Section 107B(e) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445b-1(e)) is amended by striking out '1984 crop' in the first sentence of paragraph (8) and inserting in lieu thereof '1984 and 1985 crops'.".

MODIFICATION IN THE 1985 WHEAT PROGRAM

Mr. BOREN. Madam President, on behalf of Senators BENTSEN, DOLE, KASSEBAUM, NICKLES, BAUCUS, and myself, I have sent to the desk this amendment, which would give each State the option to permit haying and grazing of acreage diverted under the 1985 wheat program.

Despite the high participation in the 1984 wheat program, total carryover stocks are estimated to rise by 20 million bushels, bringing total carryover to 1.41 billion bushels, the second highest level on record. The 1985 wheat program, as announced by Secretary Block on June 14, will result in yet another increase in stocks, leading to a further decline in the already low price our farmers receive for wheat. American wheat producers are simply not going to be able to afford a further decline in the cash price of wheat. The cash price right now does not even come close to covering the partial cost of production, much less the full cost of production.

It is imperative, Madam President, that we take every action possible to encourage producers to participate in the 1985 wheat program. The higher the participation, the lower our ending stocks. The lower our ending stocks, the higher the cash price of wheat and the lower the Government's cost.

The announced 1985 wheat program is simply not attractive enough to encourage many producers to participate. The simple fact is they can make more money by producing more wheat. Cash-flow difficulties leave the wheat farmer little option but to pursue the market which yields the highest gross income. This is particularly true today, when one considers the past several years of low farm income. Commercial banks, production credit associations, Federal land banks, and the Farmers Home Administration are all wanting farmers to pay off their debts or at least service their debts. Yet, farmers cannot do that unless they generate a specific amount of cash. When acreage reduction programs do not allow a producer to receive an income equal to his specific cash-flow needs, he simply cannot afford to participate in the program if he can generate more income through planting more and producing more.

Many Oklahoma wheat producers simply cannot afford to participate in the 1985 wheat program as announced by the Secretary earlier this summer. Allowing wheat producers to graze and hay their set-aside acreage will make the program economically feasible for many producers. In fact, it is this provision which will allow many farmers to break even during this time of devastatingly low wheat prices. In my home State of Oklahoma, this provision alone will increase participation in the 1985 wheat program by 10 to 20 percent.

There are some who believe the livestock industry will be adversely affected if haying of set-aside acreage is permitted. I do not believe this could be true, especially considering the shortage of hay we are facing today. According to the May Feed Outlook & Situation report, the 1984/85 carryover of hay stocks is estimated at only 20.6 million short tons—the lowest carryover since 1977. Due to the continued drought in the Southwest, many cattlemen have already begun to feed hay.

During the July recess, several Oklahoma cattlemen told me that, for the first time in 30 or 40 years, they had to start feeding hay in May. As is obvious, there is simply no way a cattleman can make any money at all if he ends up feeding hay 9 months a year. Additionally, the early feeding of hay this year will further deplete our limited hay supplies, thereby spurring an increase in the price ranchers must pay for hay. In June of this year, some hay was selling for as high as $160 per ton and oat hay was selling for $120 per ton, compared to $80 per ton in a normal year. Providing wheat producers with the option of haying set-aside acreage could, in fact, help livestock producers by reducing the costs of feed.

Over the past several months, I have attempted to get the Department of Agriculture to modify the wheat program to provide the option of haying and grazing on set-aside acreage. Yet, the Department continues its opposition to this provision. As we all recall, it took us almost 10 months to provide for modification in the 1984 wheat program. Winter wheat producers simply cannot take full advantage of a program when the details of that program are not made final until a month before harvest. I strongly believe that we must make any modifications in the wheat program now. It is vital to all aspects of agriculture for all the details of acreage reduction programs to be announced before planting season.

Because of the Department's opposition to this amendment, I recognize the fact that the amendment would fail if a vote were taken. In an effort to get all the details of the 1985 wheat program announced now, I have been willing to try to work something out on this issue that is acceptable to the Department. Early last week, I received word that the Department would meet me halfway on this issue and would accept a 30-day extension of the grazing period. While this is certainly not what I would have offered in the beginning, I recognize the reality of the present situation and I am well aware that this is at least a step in the right direction.

In light of the Secretary's position and the negotiations which we have had with him, I now send to the desk a modification of the earlier amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. KASSEBAUM). The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 5, between lines 15 and 16 insert the following:

"1985 WHEAT PROGRAM

"Section 107B(e) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445b-1(e)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(9) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, in carrying out acreage limitation and land diversion programs for the 1985 crop of wheat, the Secretary shall permit all or any part of the acreage diverted from production under such programs by participating producers to be devoted to grazing except during five of the principal growing months, as determined for each State by the State committee established under section 8(b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.'.".

Mr. BOREN. Madam President, the modification will provide for a 30-day extension of the period during which producers, who participate in the 1985 wheat program, are permitted to graze set-aside acreage. For my home State of Oklahoma, this would mean that wheat producers would be allowed to graze acreage idled under the 1985 program until June 1, 1985. It is estimated that this one provision will result in additional farm income of over $63 million for the State of Oklahoma, alone.

Early last week, I talked with Secretary Block and he assured me that should this legislation not be enacted into law before September 15, he would announce a 30-day extension of the grazing period for wheat producers who participate in the 1985 program. I appreciate his recognition of the importance of providing producers with all the provisions of the wheat program prior to the planting season.

Madam President, I should like to point out to those concerned about budget deficits that this amendment will not cost the Government anything. In fact, this is the one way we can encourage participation in acreage reduction programs without having an initial Government outlay. I remind my colleagues that increased participation in acreage reduction programs ultimately lead to lower Government outlays. This has become increasingly evident over the past few years. For example, participation would have been much higher if the Government had offered acreage reduction programs that were attractive. It was this failure to provide adequate incentives that led to the necessity of having an extemely costly PIK Program. Allowing commodity surpluses to grow "in order to save taxpayer's money" is simply a fallacy. Any buildup in stocks ultimately leads to increased Government cost. If we are to avoid future costly programs, we have to take action now. This amendment is one of the ways in which we can help prevent that.

Madam President, while there are several other things I would like to see included in this amendment which would improve participation in the 1985 wheat program, this is at least one positive step. I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting this amendment which will provide the economic condition of our wheat producers.

Madam President, we have discussed this matter with the chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations Committee and the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Agriculture Appropriations, the junior Senator from Mississippi. It is my understanding the amendment as modified can be accepted by the committee.

Before I yield to the Senator from Mississippi, I yield to my colleague from Oklahoma for any comments he might wish to make.

Mr. NICKLES. If the Senator will yield, I offer my congratulations to him and compliment him for the fine job he has done. We have been able to fashion, in working with the administration, this improvement. As Senator BOREN stated, we had tried to obtain full haying and grazing privileges on a State-by-State basis. We were successful in the 1984 wheat program. It was not provided for originally in the 1985 wheat program. It makes a lot of difference to those who have a wheat farm and want to participate to have haying and grazing privileges. This does not cost the Federal Government a dime, but does make the program much more attractive and much more affordable.

A lot of farmers are having very difficult times right now. We have been in negotiations with the administration trying to get both haying and grazing for the 1985 program. They have not gone along with both haying and grazing, but they have assented to give us a 30-day extension on grazing. This is a lot better than nothing, and it is something for which we have worked. It will help wheat farmers who do have cattle, and that is a large percentage of our wheat farmers. So I am pleased to be a cosponsor of the amendment. I am pleased that Senator COCHRAN and others have agreed to accept it. I think it will be of benefit to wheat farmers throughout the country.

Mr. BOREN. Madam President, I thank my colleague from Oklahoma for his remarks and also for his assistance in conversations we had with the Secretary and others in the Department on behalf of this effort. I also thank the many others who have joined with me in offering this amendment, the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], and both the senior and junior Senators from Kansas [Mr. DOLE and Mrs. KASSEBAUM], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS]. We have had discussions with the Appropriations Committee on this matter. I see the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Mississippi, is on the floor. I think this amendment, as modified, is agreeable to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Madam President, it is my intention to recommend the Senate accept this amendment. The distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN] has been working with the Office of the Secretary of Agriculture on a satisfactory solution to this grazing problem.

It is my understanding that the Secretary of Agriculture is agreeable to administratively reducing the 6-month nongrazing period of the acreage conservation reserve requirement for participants in the 1985 production adjustment program from 6 to 5 months.

It is also my understanding that 5-month nongrazing period would be recommended by the county ASC committee subject to the approval of the applicable State ASC committee.

The only national ASCS office requirement that would be imposed with regard to the nongrazing period would be that the nongrazing period be established between February 28 and November 1 and that the local ASC committees would be encouraged to establish the 5-month nongrazing period during the heart of the 5 principal growing months.

On the basis of that understanding with the Office of the Secretary and the agreement that has been worked out by the Senator from Oklahoma, I recommend that the Senate accept the amendment, Madam President.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Madam President, will the author of the amendment be good enough to tell us what this amendment will cost?

Mr. BOREN. I say to the Senator from Ohio I think the amendment will save money. There are no direct outlays as a result. It is simply a matter that on the setaside acreage there will be allowed grazing for a 30-day period longer than would be allowed under present law. This will cause many other farmers to agree to sign up for the program and participate. The more farmers we have participating, the less carryover stocks will be. As we are successful in reducing our surplus and carryover stocks, this assists in raising the target price, and in doing that it reduces the deficiency payment which is what the Government is obligated to pay, the difference between the target price and the prevailing market price. So it is estimated that by making the program more attractive in terms of encouraging farmers to set aside acreage that would otherwise be producing, there should be substantial savings to the Government as a result. There will be no direct increase in outlays as a result of this amendment.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Is it not a fact that if you have less acreage in production and more of it used for grazing, you are therefore going to have less food produced as a consequence of this action?

Mr. BOREN. I say to the Senator from Ohio that the thrust of all of our agricultural programs right now is to try to bring about greater balance between supply and demand; that one of the reasons we have had high costs in the past is that since the Government pays the difference between the target price, what is called the target price and the prevailing market price, the larger that gap—the larger our surpluses have been, the larger that gap has been, the larger that Government payment has had to be. So when we can encourage our farmers to participate in the programs that we have devised, it ends up reducing costs to the Government it terms of direct outlays.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the Senator be good enough to advise me why we need to put this amendment on a supplemental appropriations bill? I am sure my colleague is aware it is subject to a point of order as being legislation on an appropriations bill. I have been reluctant to make that point of order, and yet it seems to me that when you come to the floor of the Senate with an amendment somewhat out of the blue on a subject of this kind, the only way we can protect ourselves is by making the point of order and giving us, at least if it comes on an agriculture bill, a chance to be apprised in advance.

Mr. BOREN. I say to my colleague from Ohio, I hope he will not make a point of order. I know that he shares my sincere concern for the economic plight of the farmers of this country. I know that he has a good many constituents in his State in the same condition as the constituents of my State.

We have had more farm bankruptcies in the past 4 years than we had in the prior 42 years put together.

For example, in my State of Oklahoma this last year, all 88,000 farm units put together had a net profit of $2 million. It worked out to $14 per farm. They are trying to service a debt of $15 billion.

We are getting ready to have the planting period very soon in the Southern part of the country, and whether or not farmers participate and whether or not they plant that acreage becomes very important.

We are trying to make the program attractive enough to get the people to participate. When the farm program was first announced without any haying and grazing allowed in States such as Oklahoma, Texas, and others that have a similar situation with agricultural production, the program was not attractive enough to encourage participation.

When you have a program that sets the target price and the amount of deficiency payments and do not make it attractive enough for participation, you run up the costs. A lot of farmers do not participate, and they are hurt more when market prices decline drastically.

It had been my plan to offer this amendment on the agriculture appropriations bill, and we had had the amendment widely discussed in the Agriculture Committee and with other Members along that line. It would have been offered on that bill. As the Senator knows, we have had some prolonged discussions, and I understand the reasons for them, and they are sound philosophical reasons, as to why the Senator from Florida and others have raised an objection to proceeding with that bill and others, inasmuch as they have a sincere concern about the budget.

We have felt it very important for the Senate to go on record under this proposal, so that the Secretary would go ahead and announce that this modification is being made. The Secretary has indicated to me that if we have this expression from the Senate on this bill, he will proceed administratively to honor this statement by the Senate on this bill and will make the announcement that he will allow the 30-day extension of grazing. If that is done, it will tremendously tip the balance in getting more farmers in our part of the country to make the decision in the near future.

We did not want to wait until September. We wanted to let the farmers know what the plan was and to urge the Secretary to take action and get the administration working on this.

The Senator from Ohio has heard me talking about not trying to legislate on bills of this kind and bringing up things that are strictly germane to them. If this were not an extreme economic emergency, I would not be doing it. I hope the Senator considers it extremely important.

We face liquidation of 20 or 30 farms all at once. I feel it is extremely important for us to go ahead. It will not have any negative budgetary impact. We believe it will have a positive budgetary impact.

Mr. METZENBAUM. If I correctly understand the Senator's comments, he indicates two things: First, he is representing to this body that it will have no budgetary impact; second, that if and when there are other circumstances of economic emergency and some Member of the Senate is perhaps concerned about an urban problem and offers an amendment, the Senator will be as understanding as he is asking us to be in connection with this amendment.

Mr. BOREN. Madam President, I certainly try to be understanding. I did not anticipate the question of the Senator from Ohio. But if I go back into the record, I think I can find some cases where urban problems have been involved in other parts of the country—trade adjustment assistance, for example—where this Senator has been helpful to those areas and has tried to be sympathetic to them—the question of steel and other matters that were pending in this body recently.

Yes; I certainly would try to be. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS], and both Senators from Kansas join the Senators from Oklahoma in offering this amendment. It is a problem.

Mr. METZENBAUM. It would have no budgetary impact?

Mr. BOREN. It will not increase outlays. If anything, any budgetary impact will be positive. I think it will result in saving us money in deficiency payments down the road.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COCHRAN. Madam President, before we vote, I wish to point out for the record that during negotiations with the office of the Secretary, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES] was quite effective in persuading the Secretary to administratively make some changes that are included in this amendment, and he played a major role in the negotiation of acceptance of this amendment by the administration.

Again, I confirm and support the representations that have been made by Mr. BOREN about the budgetary impact of this amendment. I think it will have a positive budget impact, and the Senate ought to agree to the amendment.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, I thank the Senator from Mississippi for his kind remarks, and I compliment my senior colleague, Senator BOREN, for his leadership.

I repeat that this was in the 1984 program, that they had both haying and grazing. This will basically allow wheat farmers to graze for an additional 30 days. As my senior colleague mentioned, a lot of wheat farmers are having difficult times. Allowing the additional grazing time will not cost the taxpayers a dime but will give the farmers economic benefits.

I think it is important that this be done now, because the farmers have to make decisions now concerning their participation in next year's programs. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3627), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOREN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3628

(Purpose: To limit the use of funds appropriated for Military Construction Navy, until the Secretary of the Navy makes a real estate conveyance required by law)

Mr. WILSON. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] proposes an amendment numbered 3628:

On page 59 after line 14 insert the following new section:

None of the funds appropriated in this Act for Military Construction, Navy may be obligated unless the Secretary of the Navy executes the real estate transaction required by section 812 of Public Law 98-115 prior to September 30, 1984.

Mr. WILSON. Madam President, this is a very simple amendment. It is to assure compliance on the part of the Federal agency with a prior congressional mandate in a timely fashion.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Madam President, the majority and the ranking minority member of the Military Construction Committee have cleared this amendment and agreed to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3628) was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the distinguished manager.

Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3625

(Purpose: To appropriate an additional $60 million to the emergency food and shelter program)

Mr. DIXON. Madam President, I have an amendment at the desk. I believe the number is 3625. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection to calling up the amendment, the amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], for himself, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. DODD, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. RIEGLE, and Mr. LAUTENBERG, proposes an amendment numbered 3625.

Mr. DIXON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 24, line 17, strike out "$60,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$120,000,000".

On page 25, line 19, strike out "$60,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$120,000,000".

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise today for the purpose of offering an amendment to add an additional $60 million for the Emergency Food and Shelter Program to the supplemental.

This emergency assistance was first made available in March 1983, as part of the emergency jobs bill; $100 million was appropriated at that time. An additional $40 million was approved last November to see the program through the winter of 1983. As you all know, this money is used to provide emergency food and shelter to our Nation's most destitute people. It is, in many instances, the difference between life and death.

The supplemental appropriations bill contains $60 million for this program this year. That is not even close to addressing the critical need that continues to exist for these homeless and hungry people.

Last week, the Bureau of the Census released figures on the national poverty rate for 1983. It is up to 15.2 percent—900,000 more people in this country, nearly two-fifths of them children under the age of 6, have fallen below the poverty threshold. There are 34,960,000 people living below the poverty level. Of those, only half are served by this program.

With $120 million, which would be the sum, if my amendment is adopted, and may I say that would be less by $20 million than last year, with $120 million, they would get approximately $2 per person for the year in supplemental benefits through this program, not exactly an ample stipend for survival.

Now, I do not want to make this a partisan issue, but clearly, the President indicated in his last press conference that there is "not one single fact or figure" to account for his budget cuts having hurt the poor. In response to the Census Bureau's report, the President blamed the increase on the previous administration, saying the report "showed that poverty has leveled off from the disastrous increase of 1979 and 1980."

This year, in fact, marks the fifth annual increase in the poverty rate. The proportion of poor Americans is higher than it has been since 1965, when 17.3 percent of the people in this country were classified as poor.

There are those who would argue that this is supposed to be an emergency, temporary program. To them I would reply, I agree with you, but we are not out of the woods yet. The unemployment rate, after a steady decline for the entire year, indeed, for the past 18 months, has gone up to 7.5 percent in the month of July. It is the first increase in this rate since December 1982.

What is the real indicator of need? How many homeless are there in this great land of ours? Estimates vary, but according to the most conservative estimate, that began from the Department of Housing and Urban Development, there are between 250,000 to 350,000 homeless people in America. Other figures from community organizations estimate 2 million to 3 million homeless people in this country.

Even if the HUD figure is correct, according to a recent report by the U.S. Conference of Mayors, our existing emergency shelters have room for only 91,000 people. That means that using HUD's own figures, for every one person who has a bed, two more people are sleeping on grates, in alleys, on park benches—250,000 people who have nowhere to go, no hope for help. They are the most destitute people in this society of ours.

Many are women and children. Many have been evicted from their homes because they are unable to pay the rent. Many have been taken into relatives' homes and are no longer welcome. Many have marketable skills but are unable to find work. Many have been homeowners and responsible citizens but have lost their jobs and the ability to pay their way. Many are transients in search of new lives and new jobs.

One thing is clear: The need far exceeds the resources. This additional money though pitifully small, will not meet it completely, of course. The city of Chicago, in my home State, estimates that 25,000 people are homeless. There are currently in Chicago for those 25,000 homeless people 1,100 beds. Seattle estimates 3,000 to 3,500 homeless people with 1,200 beds available. Atlanta indicates that there are sleeping places for only one-third to one-half of all who need them.

This bill includes $120 million in economic assistance for El Salvador. The exact same amount for El Salvador that we are requesting here for desperate people in America, desperate people who are needy, hungry, and homeless. Is it not fair to think of our own as well as our foreign friends?

I voted today for the foreign assistance money and supported the administration. I voted today for the money for El Salvador and supported the administration.

And I am coming here now to say that when you cut a program for the hungry and the destitute in America by $80 million this year, that is unacceptable.

I came to this floor not long ago speaking of priorities. Clearly, the same argument can be made today. Are we, as a legislative body, willing to say that it is not our responsibility to see that the basic needs of our people are met? Are we willing to say that it is acceptable for 250,000 to as many as 3 million people in this, the richest nation on Earth, to sleep on the streets? I wish that we could solve this problem, not treat the symptom which blights every State in this country.

The shelters are full, the streets are still home for many hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, of people. Mayor Harold Washington of Chicago stated it eloquently when he addressed this issue by saying: "One person without a place to live is a tragedy; 100 homeless people are a scandal; but 25,000 people in just one city who have not even a ragged hut or camping tent to call their home is an indictment of us as a people."

Madam President, this amendment has the enthusiastic support of a number of organizations which have been active in serving the needy. They are conscious of the obligation that we have to meet these responsibilities. Let me name them. The National Conference of Catholic Charities, U.S. Council of Churches of Christ, Council of Jewish Federations, the AFL-CIO, National League of Cities, U.S. Conference of Mayors, United Way of America, Salvation Army, American Red Cross, U.S. Catholic Conference, National Association of Counties, Church Federation of Greater Chicago, League of California Cities, the city of Chicago, the cities of New York, New Orleans, San Francisco, Philadelphia, and Boston.

Madam President, I am joined in this amendment by Senators BRADLEY, SARBANES, DODD, MOYNIHAN, KENNEDY, LEVIN, RANDOLPH, HOLLINGS, BINGAMAN, RIEGLE, and LAUTENBERG.

I appeal to every Senator to join in support of these additional funds. They are intended for the most vulnerable, most defenseless, most needy, most hopeless among us.

There may not be another chance to appropriate funds for this program before the winter months are upon us. It is hard to think about that when it is 90 degrees outside, but the cold nights will come, and the shelters will be full, the soup kitchens will be overcrowded, and there will be less food available to feed our hungry.

There is true suffering out there in Illinois, Michigan, Pennsylvania, but also in the South, the East, and the West. We cannot turn our backs on these cries for help.

I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Let me say, in conclusion, I do not come here asking for more money. I do not come here asking for additional funds in comparison to last year. Last year, for this program, for the hungry and homeless of America, we spent $140 million. In this supplemental for this year, we are asked to spend only $60 million. I ask to double that to $120 million, still $20 million short of what we spent last year.

I thank the Chair and the Senate for your kind attention. I know that this will be an amendment that is opposed by at least one of my distinguished friends here on the floor. I would ask the support of the Senate in adopting this amendment to partially restore the funds that were expended last year.

Mr. GARN. Madam President, I rise in opposition to this amendment. This is typical of a program of many that have been authorized and appropriated over the years. It was intended to be an emergency program of a very brief duration. The debate on the floor of the Senate was over $50 million the first year and how it would be distributed. And the House had a similar amount in of $50 million. That was all that was intended or asked for on either side. And a strange thing happened in the conference. When it went to conference that year, rather than taking either the Senate or the House position, they took both positions. They took the $50 million in the House and the $50 million from the Senate and turned up with $100 million. That is how we got $100 million the first year in an emergency jobs bill. We kept the provisions of both the House and the Senate. So we did not make a decision. We took the Senate position and the House position so that the funds were distributed through private as well as public agencies.

I did not know that was possible to do in a conference. I guess you can do anything if you want to. I thought you had to make some modification or change or something, but we just combined the positions and put them together.

And everybody said that that was so fine that we did that and we would not need any more. Then another $40 million supplemental came.

Again, I remind everybody this was an emergency jobs bill. You could tell the recession was almost over because we were passing an emergency jobs bill. We always do that. We wait until something is over and then a program that is only supposed to be temporary, 1 year, is continued.

I want to make clear I am not arguing against the Senator from Illinois that there is not a need out there. There is a need. He is correct. But I get a little bit tired of Congress, that the end justifies the means.

We put it into FEMA. What has FEMA got to do with the distribution of food or shelter? Nothing. But it was quick and convenient to do it and it was politically expedient to do it at the time.

FEMA is not the correct agency. If we are going to be involved in emergency housing, maybe we ought to try Housing and Urban Development. That is an agency set up to handle housing in this country.

It reminds me of food stamps. Food stamps started out at about $250 million to distribute surplus food, so it ends up in the Department of Agriculture. Now we have more than $12 billion of food stamps. That was going to be a temporary distribution.

This is the way most of these programs have grown, and people know it. They say that if it is an emergency program for 1 year, they get the camel's nose in the tent and it never stops. And we do not care where we put it.

We have gutted the Department of Agriculture with food stamps. It is a welfare program. Let us put it in HHS where it belongs and not take away from the traditional meat and milk inspections and all the programs the Department of Agriculture is supposed to have.

So here we are with an emergency program of $50 million for 1 year, grows to $100 million, and then $140 million, and then it is tried to be cut back to $20, the Senate or the House puts in $60. I reluctantly agree with the criticism of it being in FEMA. FEMA has never had any experience. Certainly in the chartering of that agency and what they are supposed to do with flood control and disasters and all sorts of things, it did not include this. It is not the proper management agency. So we put $60 million more in and now it is doubling.

What will it be next year? A quarter-of-a-billion dollars? $500 million? Unless we try to do our work the way we are supposed to, bring this up in the proper place, hold hearings on it, determine what the need is, put it in Housing and Urban Development, we will just have another program that will grow like Topsy and then we will sit here and wonder why we cannot balance the budget.

There is a proper way to do things around this body, but I do not think we have discovered it lately. I do not know that we do anything right. We appropriate on authorization bills. We authorize on appropriation bills. We combine provisions. Are there no rules, no common sense left in this body any more?

Anybody can get to the end they want in a proper legislative manner, but we do not. So here we are in a supplemental appropriations bill—and we can go back and check the debate, $50 million once.

I just want my colleagues to know where this is going. I am not debating the need with the Senator from Illinois. I am talking about procedure.

This body is getting to be a laughingstock. If the American people knew how we operated, the politics we play on this floor with the pressing needs of this country—and we are going to have things later that I am going to have to get up and talk about, sense-of-the-Senate resolutions. Both Republicans and Democrats do it. So we stay in session all year playing politics and games with each other and do not care about proper procedure or doing things correctly.

This is not the place. If it is justified to add $60 million, then let us do it. Let us do it in the Senate Banking Committee. Let us authorize it under the Department of Housing and Urban Development after proper hearings.

I happen to be the chairman of that committee and also the chairman of the HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriations Subcommittee. We can handle these things. We do not always have to do things just before a recess so we stay late at night and we plug things in and everybody gets tired and says, "Oh, we don't care what we vote for. We have got to go on recess. We have got to go to a convention."

So whatever the need is, whether it is $40 million or $60 million, this is not the time or place to do it. FEMA is not the proper agency to run it. Let us try and do things properly.

It also puts this budget supplemental in my area over by more than $200 billion. Once again, we talk about fiscal responsibility but nobody has offered to cut my budget for HUD and independent agencies. Not one amendment. No Senator has come up and said, "Would you please reduce that budget?" They say, "I am going home and tell my constituents that I want a balanced budget but I am not going to offer to take any out of yours." It is just add-ons over and over and over again.

But my main argument is simply that this is not the time or the place or the proper agency and to warn my colleagues that this is another emergency program that some day will be in the billions of dollars.

I will make one more comment. I would like to know what happened to the mayors of this country. I used to be one. We had an emergency housing problem that was very severe in my State once. I got so tired of trying to work with Federal agencies and all their strings and all their rules for creating emergency low-income housing, I simply went to the Utah State Legislature and I said, "Legislature, give me a half-a-million bucks and I will match it with local funds."

In 60 days, we built emergency low-income housing because we did not have to fool with HUD, we did not have to fool with FEMA, we did not have to fool with the Congress of the United States. We did not have all their silly rules and regulations. We just put people into emergency low-income housing—mayors and county commissioners and State legislators who are a little bit closer to the people they serve.

What happened to the mayors? I used to be part of the Mayors Association—the bleeding hearts who do not have the courage to do things on their own any more. Any time they have a problem they just run to Washington, just run to their Congressman and Senator, and say, "We can't handle it." What it amounts to is they do not have the guts to tell the people in their community the need, and say it takes money if you want to solve this problem—run to Washington, do the end run, go around the backdoor. If things go wrong at the same time we mayors are asking for more funds from the Federal Government, we go to the National League of Cities conventions. You know what we do? We pass resolutions telling the Congress of the United States to balance the budget. They have got to be more fiscally responsible while asking for more money. I would suggest to the mayors and the Governors of this country as they talk about more local responsibility, more local authority, Congress not assuming, and making rules and regulations to tell them how to run their affairs, that when you ask for money the strings go with it. If they want to be local managers for the Federal Government rather than elected mayors, so be it. But I would suggest that a lot of these problems could be solved by mayors, city councilmen, and States and State legislatures, if they would, rather than running back here pleading for money over and over again.

So I am opposed to this amendment. Not only does it go over the budget. Once again, I am not criticizing the Senator for offering the amendment or his recitation of the need for homeless and hungry in this country. That is not the issue. But there is a proper place, and a proper jurisdiction to handle this. And it is not FEMA, and it is not on the supplemental appropriations bill this late in the session.

Mr. DIXON addressed the chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DIXON. Madam President, I thank my friend from Utah for his remarks. He is a fine Member, and an able chairman of the committee upon which I serve. I know of his sincerity in respect to the budget. Many of us share that view.

Madam President, he has said kind of as a centerpiece of his argument that this was temporary money. That is true. The trouble with this kind of thing is the people will not cooperate. People are still hungry, starving, and without homes. There is still a problem, and a need out there for this program.

I voted for the Kassebaum-Biden freeze. The Madam President knows that. That would have frozen things. It would have frozen all things, domestic, foreign, military, and everything. But this is not a freeze. This is a cutback.

I was here voting with the administration folks today for the money for El Salvador. I was here voting for the money for foreign assistance. So I am not one of those that denies you the necessary funds for those programs. You are increasing those programs and cutting back a program for the most destitute people in the United States of America.

This program is out of money. I want the Senate to know that. Right now there is no money—none.

And I want to tell you what they will spend the $120 million for. At least we know what this is going for. I do not know what it is going for in El Salvador. I take the administration and Duarte on faith.

Here is what this $120 million will go for: $80 million will buy 121,212,121 meals; $40 million will go for 16,393,442 nights shelter. Unit costs are 66 cents a meal; and $2.44 cents a night for shelter—big spenders.

The money is gone. But the people are still hungry. They are still sleeping on the grates and in the alleys. In every big city in America, these conditions are a festering sore. We see them ourselves. Can we leave this place and not see that? I used to live in Columbia Plaza next to the Watergate—pretty fancy digs, but not as fancy as the Watergate. And on the way in and out the door, I had to step around people laying in the gutters and on the grates who were hungry and without homes. Do you mean to tell me you want to cut this program? Do you mean to tell me you want to go to America this fall, and say, "We spent $140 million for the hungry, the destitute, and the homeless last year, and we are even cutting that back to $60 million"? I am not asking for the whole $140 million. I came over here thinking, look, I will tell you what I will do. I will be very reasonable. I will ask for less than last year not because there is less hungry. There is more. And not because there is less homeless. There is more. There is more of all of that. But I asked for less just because I know I am going to hear these budget arguments.

I put it to you. Every one of you that marched over here for El Salvador, every one of you that marched over here for the world, every one of you that has a conscience what about outside this door on the street where they are hungry? What about outside this door where you can step on them on the way back to the office, where they are sleeping in the cold in the wintertime, in the snow, and without beds?

If you can vote as you voted all afternoon and vote no on this, do it, live with it, and defend it this fall. This is less than last year by $20 million. This is $60 million to feed hungry bellies of babies in the United States of America.

Madam President, I was delighted to support your freeze in the spirit of a good conscience because this is well within what you encompassed in that freeze. I will be delighted to vote aye for this additional $60 million, and I strongly urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I rise in strong support of this amendment to provide $60 million in additional funds for the Emergency Food and Shelter Program under the Federal Emergency Management Agency. This addition will ensure a total of $120 million for programs across the country that provide food and lodging to the growing number of our citizens living in poverty.

The Food and Shelter Program is a program that works. In 1983, it provided mechanisms for distributing assistance to States and communities in response to the crisis situation brought on by the recent recession and administrative policies. Conservative estimates reveal that some 33 million meals were served and more than 2.2 million nights of shelter were provided in a 6-month period. In my home State of Massachusetts, 30,000 people avoided homelessness with the help of rent and mortgage aid. Along with these quantitative successes, this program strengthened the network of community agencies, enabling them to advocate and serve clients more effectively.

Increased 1984 funding for this program is critical in order to continue these vital services. Cities, States, other local units of government and private organizations who are providing food and shelter programs are eligible to receive the money and who seek to provide these programs, are depending on our actions here today. The thousands of people who rely on these services to make it through another day are waiting for our decision.

There are some who do not wish to continue this program. There are those who say that this was to be a one-time appropriation in response to last year's crisis brought on by the recession and this administration's policies. But, Madam President, I ask you: Have the problems created by that crisis passed? The Census Bureau recently reported that 35.3 million Americans are living in poverty, the largest number of persons in poverty since 1964.

Perhaps we should ask the thousands and thousands of volunteers and workers across the country who are at this very moment serving up a meal in a soup kitchen; preparing a nutritional package of goods in a food pantry; or signing someone into a shelter for the night.

Better yet, let us ask the 900,000 new poor who fell into poverty last year, if their crisis has past. And what about the 6 million men, women, and children who were not poor in 1980, but are poor in 1984?

This program may not be the perfect answer to the problems of hunger and homelessness in America. There are existing Federal food and housing programs that are designed to assist in alleviating these problems, and they were working. But, virtually all of them have been crippled by this administration.

Can we ask those in need across the United States to wait until we restore the drastic cuts of the past 4 years and set right the debilitating program changes before they can partake in a meal or lay down to sleep?

No, we cannot ask these people to wait. We must act now. The FEMA progam has proven to be effective and successful in providing food and shelter to those who are in immediate need. I call on my colleagues to support this amendment and reaffirm their commitment to the growing number of people in this Nation who need these services.

Mr. PRYOR. Madam President, I am pleased to support funding for the emergency food and shelter program in the supplemental appropriations bill.

As the sponsor of proposals to fund this program in previous appropriation bills, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the unique success of the program.

That success is due in large part to the excellent organizations who form the backbone, together with the Federal Emergency Management Agency, of this program. These are the United Way of America, the Salvation Army, the National Conference of Catholic Charities, the National Council of Churches, the Council of Jewish Federations, and the many volunteers and organizations working at the local level.

Let me briefly remind my colleagues of the record of the fiscal 1983 program: 33 million meals were served; 2.2 million nights of lodging were provided; 3,600 private voluntary organizations and 961 civil jurisdictions received funds; organizations donated substantial staff time and other resources; decisionmaking was at the local level; redtape was virtually eliminated; funds were distributed quickly and efficiently; and a fraud alert system assured that funds were used properly.

This is truly a success story of private sector-public sector cooperation. Unfortunately, the need for such a program continues and Congress must not fail to respond.

The National Board of the Emergency Food and Shelter Program submitted a statement to the House Subcommittee on Nutrition at a hearing on April 26. I ask that the statement be placed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The statement follows:

The Federal Emergency Food and Shelter Program was created under Public Law 98-8, the fiscal year 1983 Urgent Supplemental Appropriations Bill, and continued under Public Laws 98-151 and 98-181. Phase One of the program involved the distribution of $100 million ($50 to the governors and $50 million to the National Board Program). Phase Two continued the program with an additional $40 million to assist in meeting the basic food and shelter needs of the nation's hungry and homeless.

TOTAL PROGRAM

In one year (April 1983 to April 1984), the National Board Emergency Food and Shelter Program has distributed over $91 million: $59 million provided over 76 million meals and $32 million allowed for approximately 11 million nights of lodging. This is all in addition to the ongoing feeding and sheltering programs that were already operating prior to the creation of this program.

The agencies involved contributed much of their own time and resources to this program in order that the Emergency Food and Shelter Program funds would go directly into feeding and sheltering those in need. Only 2 percent was included in the legislation for administrative costs and the agencies did not even use all of that.

The Emergency Food and Shelter Program has made a critical difference in the lives of people who are in need. It has also brought to our attention the numbers of individuals and families, old people and young people, who are hungry and/or homeless. Expanded food services found long waiting lines at soup kitchens and food pantries and additional beds were quickly full.

The National Board firmly believes that we, the local boards and the service delivery agencies have made every attempt to stretch the appropriated dollars as far as possible and to help as many people as possible. We are also painfully aware, however, that this program will never solve the problems of deinstitutionalization, long term unemployment, a shortage of low-income housing, and chronic poverty. It is an emergency program, capable of meeting essential, but limited, needs. The national voluntary agencies urge the Congress to take a hard look at the overriding causes of hunger and homelessness and find much more substantial remedies.

PHASE ONE—(APRIL 1983-MARCH 1984)

The initial appropriation of $100 million was spent on a two track system. Half of the funds, $50 million, went to the governors under the same formula used to distribute the Community Services Block Grant funds.

The other $50 million went to a National Board composed of six voluntary agencies—the Council of Jewish Federations, National Conference of Catholic Charities, United Way of America, the National Council of Churches, Red Cross, and the Salvation Army—and the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) which serves as chair.

The National Board was charged with designing a program that met five basic objectives: (1) Allocations to the neediest areas; (2) Fast response; (3) Public/private sector cooperation; (4) Local decisionmaking; and (5) Simple, but accountable, reporting.

Using a formula based primarily of the Bureau of Labor Statistics' unemployment data, 961 civil jurisdictions were selected to receive funds.

Each civil jurisdiction was required to establish a Local Board reflecting the make up of the National Board with a local elected official taking the place of the FEMA representative. Local Boards were responsible for selecting the voluntary agencies that would provide the food and shelter services and determining the amount of money each agency would receive.

All funds were distributed in May 1983 and were expended or encumbered by September 30, 1983, the end of the federal fiscal year. All encumbered monies were spent by March 31, 1984.

As the attached fact sheet indicates, Phase One of the Emergency Food and Shelter National Board Program provided: 3,460 voluntary agencies with additional funds to expand their services to the hungry and homeless; 51 million meals served in addition to those being provided by ongoing soup kitchens and food pantries; 6.8 million additional nights of lodging; and administrative costs of 1 percent.

PHASE TWO—(DECEMBER 1983-MAY 1984)

The $40 million appropriated under Public Law 98-151 and 98-181 went only to the National Board for distribution. Using updated Bureau of Labor Statistics' figures, 744 civil jurisdictions were selected to receive funds under phase two of the Emergency Food and Shelter program.

Because only the voluntary sector portion of the program was refunded, the National Board determined that each state would receive a minimum of $100,000 since no funds would go to the governors as in phase one.

Funds for phase two were distributed in December 1983 and were expended or encumbered by March 31, 1984. Encumbered funds must be spent by May 15, 1984.

Reports filed as of April 15, 1984 indicated that under the phase two program: 3,627 voluntary agencies participated; 25.7 million additional meals were served; 4.1 million additional nights of shelter were provided; and administrative costs of 1.6 percent.

EMERGENCY FOOD AND SHELTER NATIONAL BOARD PROGRAM

In March 1983, Congress appropriated to FEMA $50 million which, through a National Board of private voluntary organizations (PVOs), was to be awarded to local PVOs providing emergency food and shelter assistance in high-need localities. These monies were to supplement ongoing programs—not replace them. None of the 2 percent administrative costs allowed for this program were used by the National Board (although approximately $300,000 administrative cost was absorbed by the United Way of America). Local boards were also encouraged to waive these costs so that maximum dollars would go into direct assistance for the needy.

The characteristics which follow only reflect what government allocations allowed localities to do with funding. These characteristics do not show such residual successes of this program as the networking of local elected officials, the private sector and nonprofit agencies, which through enhanced communications allowed for: identifying needs, pooling resources, leveraging additional funds, resolving problems with innovative solutions, and providing assistance to greater numbers of needy. In addition, major contributions made by the National Board, local boards, and local PVOs in conducting this program include thousands of volunteer staffing hours, and in-kind contributions made by both the private and public sectors.

Because of the success of this program, Congress appropriated to FEMA an additional $40 million in November 1983, for the National Board to continue these program efforts through the winter months. Since April 1983, the National Board has distributed over $91 million in funds, which have provided over 76 million meals and approximately 11 million nights of shelter nationwide.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today as a cosponsor and strong supporter of this amendment to appropriate an additional $60 million for emergency food and shelter programs.

The tragedy of homeless Americans is nowhere more vivid, and more painful, than in New York City. This past winter, nearly 6,500 homeless men and women were housed by New York City—a 132-percent increase over the 2,800 sheltered nightly just 2 years earlier. The numbers of families without homes in New York City have grown even more rapidly. Today, about 3,900 homeless families—approximately 10,500 men, women and children—are being housed in hotels and family centers in New York. This represents a 148-percent increase since July 1982, and a 51-percent increase since January 1983.

The tragic situation of the homeless in New York City is not unlike that facing thousands of Americans in many other cities throughout our Nation. In Philadelphia, 15,000 men, women, and children received emergency family housing in 1983—five times the numbers in 1981. In Connecticut, 54 emergency food operations were operating in 1981; today, there are nearly 200. In California, the number of food banks increased from 27 to 46. Emergency food operations in Colorado have grown by more than a third, from 221 to 300; 900 such facilities are operating in Michigan, 2,000 in Texas, and 358 in Kansas.

State and local governments are bearing most, if not all, the costs to provide food and shelter to the homeless. For the past years, New York City has agreed to shelter any homeless person who requests such assistance. To meet the growing demand for such assistance, this year the city will spend some $123 million for shelter and expanded support services to the homeless, and for services to prevent homelessness. Since 1979, the costs of housing homeless men and women in public shelters in New York City have increased more than seven times, from $8 million to $58 million in 1984. The city expects to spend $75 million in 1985 to provide facilities to shelter the homeless.

New York City, as every other city in this Nation, receives little Federal support in meeting its obligations and responsibilities to shelter and feed its residents. Throughout the 1981-82 recession, the administration steadfastly ignored the plight of our homeless citizens. The first Federal assistance to States, localities, and nonprofit agencies for these purposes came last March 24, 1983—when the Congress approved $100 million in emergency food and shelter funds for the homeless, based on a proposal by myself and Representative RANGEL. In November of last year, Congress appropriated an additional $40 million to be used for emergency food and shelter for the homeless.

On January 31, 1984, President Reagan offered the observation that many of the homeless are so because they choose. The President's fiscal year 1985 budget, released the next day, contained no direct funding for the homeless. Once again, it falls to Congress to assume the responsibility for providing some Federal assistance to the estimated 2 million homeless in this Nation.

Some of my colleagues may point to the $60 million already contained in the bill we debate today, as sufficient Federal support for the homeless. Yet I remind my colleagues that one city alone, New York, spends more than $60 million to provide food and shelter for just its homeless residents.

An additional $60 million to aid localities in their efforts to feed and shelter homeless Americans is urgently needed. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this amendment.

Mr. DIXON. Madam President, I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] is necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HECHT). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who wish to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 57, nays 40, as follows:

NOT VOTING—3

Bentsen	D'Amato	Hollings

So the amendment (No. 3625) was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, we are now going to turn to several amendments contained in the State-Justice-Commerce section of the bill. I believe the Senator from Maryland is on the floor and will seek recognition.

Mr. MATHIAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair reminds the Senator that the remaining committee amendment is the pending question.

Mr. RUDMAN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the pending committee amendment be laid aside in order that we might consider other amendments to be offered at this time.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The RUDMAN. I withhold that.

Mr. MATHIAS. Will the Senator from Ohio withhold his objection until we deal with one very brief noncontroversial amendment?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I objected not because of any substantive question with respect to the amendment that is pending nor with respect to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland. I objected because we are following a procedure, as I understand it, of having an amendment laid down and then using that in order to control the floor and getting unanimous consent to lay it aside.

I do not think it is the right way this body ought to operate. It has not operated that way in the past. It is just my way of making known that I do not think this is the right procedure for the U.S. Senate to follow, that the manager of the bill—and it has been done before—should lay down an amendment and then get unanimous consent to set it aside in order to take up another measure.

I do not mind doing that on one occasion, but when it is done as a procedural way of controlling the floor, I object. I certainly do not want to take issue with my friend who is managing the bill nor with my other friend who wants to offer an amendment. It is merely my way of saying we should proceed in the normal way.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. METZENBAUM. I yield.

Mr. RUDMAN. I say to the Senator from Ohio that his description of that procedure as it has been used is correct. It is not what is being done this evening.

This particular committee amendment has not been laid aside by the chairman of the full committee for the purpose of managing traffic, to use the words of the Senator from Ohio. This has been laid aside at the request of a member of the subcommittee because he wishes time to discuss it later in the evening. In fact, we will be happy to identify the pending amendment. It is not being done for the purpose of assuring recognition of any particular Senator or for assuring consideration of any particular order of amendments. This is not the case, I represent to the Senator.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I do not even know what the pending amendment is. But it seems to me that if the author of the pending amendment is not prepared to move forward, he has a simple solution, and that is to withdraw the amendment, with his right to offer it at a later point.

Mr. RUDMAN. It is a committee amendment to strike certain language; and at the request of a member of the subcommittee in which that committee amendment originated, it is being withheld at this time for that reason. It is not being withheld, I represent to the Senator from Ohio, for any reason of managing recognition whatsoever.

Mr. METZENBAUM. With that assurance—and the Senator understands full well that I do not approve of that way of controlling the floor—I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. RUDMAN. I thank the Senator for his understanding and forbearance. I assure him that is the situation with this particular pending committee amendment, which the committee will be pleased to dispose of at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the previous request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Senator from Maryland.

AMENDMENT NO. 3629

(Purpose: To provide for the education in the United States of certain students of limited financial means from developing countries)

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS], for himself and others, proposes an amendment numbered 3629.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 105, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following:

TITLE IV—UNITED STATES SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM FOR DEVELOPING COUNTRIES ACT

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 401. This title may be cited as the "United States Scholarship Program for Developing Countries Act".

DEFINITION

SEC. 402. For purposes of this title, the term "institution of higher education" has the same meaning as given to such term by section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 403. The purpose of this title is to establish an undergraduate scholarship program designed to bring students of limited financial means from developing countries to the United States for study at American institutions of higher education.

FINDINGS AND POLICY

SEC. 404. The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) it is in the national interest for the United States Government to provide a stable source of financial support to give students in developing countries the opportunity to study in the United States, both to improve the range and quality of educational alternatives, to increase mutual understanding, and to build lasting links between those countries and the United States;

(2) providing scholarships to foreign students to study in the United States has proven over time to be an effective means of creating strong bonds between the United States and the future leadership of developing nations and, at the same time, assists nations substantially in their development efforts;

(3) study in United States institutions by foreign students enhances trade and economic relationships by providing strong English language skills and establishing professional and business contacts;

(4) students from families of limited financial means have in the post largely not had the opportunity to study in the United States, and scholarship programs sponsored by the United States have made no provision for identifying, preparing, or supporting such students for study in the United States;

(5) it is essential that the United States citizenry develop its knowledge and understanding of the developing countries and their languages, cultures, and socio-economic composition as these areas assume an ever larger role in the world community;

(6) the number of United States Government-sponsored scholarships for students in developing countries has been exceeded as much as twelve times in a given year by the number of scholarships offered by Soviet-bloc governments to students in developing countries, and that this disparity entails the serious long-run cost of having so many of the potential future leaders of the developing world educated in Soviet-bloc countries;

(7) an undergraduate scholarship program for students of limited financial means from developing countries to study in the United States would complement current assistance efforts in the areas of advanced education and training of people of developing countries in such disciplines as are required for planning and implementation of public and private development activities; and

(8) the Bipartisan Commission on Central America has recommended a program of 10,000 United States Government-sponsored scholarships to bring Central American studens to the United States, which program would involve careful targeting to encourage participation by young people from all social and economic classes, would maintain existing admission standards by providing intensive English and other training, and would encourage graduates to return to their home countries after completing their education.

PROGRAM AUTHORITY

SEC. 405. (a) The President is authorized and directed, acting through the United States Information Agency, to provide by loan or grant for citizens and nationals of developing countries, who have completed their secondary education but who would not otherwise have an opportunity to study in the United States due to financial limitations, to study, beginning with the academic year 1985–1986 or any academic year thereafter, at an American institution of higher education.

(b) To encourage students to use their training in their countries of origin, half of each payment to a student shall be in the form of a loan with repayment to be forgiven upon the student's prompt return to his or her country of origin for a period of no less than the equivalent of the years spent studying in the United States plus one.

(c) Before allocating any of the funds made available to carry out this title, the President shall consult with United States educational institutions, educational exchange organizations, United States missions, and the governments of participating countries on how to implement the guidelines specified in section 406.

GUIDELINES

SEC. 406. Programs under section 405 shall be carried out in accordance with the following guidelines:

(1) Consistent with section 112(b) of the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961, all programs created pursuant to this title shall be nonpolitical and balanced, and shall be administered in keeping with the highest standards of academic integrity.

(2) United States missions shall design ways to identify promising students in secondary educational institutions, or who have completed their secondary education, for study in the United States. These missions shall develop and strictly implement specific economic need criteria. Grants or loans available under this title may only be provided to students who meet the economic need criteria.

(3) Programs financed under this title shall utilize educational institutions in the United States and in developing countries to help participants in the programs acquire necessary skills in English and other appropriate education training.

(4) Each participant from a developing country shall be selected on the basis of academic and leadership potential and the economic, political, and social development needs of such country. Such needs shall be determined by each United States mission in consultation with the government of the respective country. Scholarship opportunities shall emphasize fields that are critical to the development of the participant's country, including agriculture, civil engineering, communications, social science, education, public and business administration, health, nutrition, environmental studies, population and family planning, and energy.

(5) The programs shall be flexible in order to take advantage of different training and educational opportunities offered by universities, postsecondary vocational training schoos, and community colleges in the United States.

(6) The programs shall be flexible with respect to the number of years of undergraduate education they would provide but in no case shall students be brought to the United States for a period of less than one year.

(7) Adequate allowance shall be made in the scholarship grant for the purchase of books and related educational material relevant to the program of study.

(8) Further allowance shall be made to provide adequate opportunities for professional, academic, and cultural enrichment for scholarship recipients.

(9) The scholarship program created by this title shall, to the maximum extent practicable, offer equal opportunities for both male and female students to study in the United States.

AUTHORITY TO ENTER INTO AGREEMENTS

SEC. 407. The President is further authorized to enter into agreements with foreign governments in furtherance of the purposes of this title. Such agreements may provide for the creation or continuation of binational or multinational educational and cultural foundations and commissions for the purposes of administering programs under this title.

POLICY REGARDING OTHER INTERNATIONAL EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS

SEC. 408. (a) The Congress urges the Administrator of the agency primarily responsible for administering part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, in implementing programs authorized under that part, to increase assistance for undergraduate scholarships for students of limited financial means from developing countries to study in the United States at American institutions of higher education. To the maximum extent practicable, such scholarship assistance shall be furnished in accordance with the guidelines contained in section 406 of this title.

(b) The Congress urges the President to take such steps as are necessary to expand the opportunities for Americans from all economic classes to study in developing countries.

ESTABLISHMENT AND MAINTENANCE OF COUNSELING SERVICES

SEC. 409. (a) For the purpose of assisting foreign students in choosing fields of study, selecting appropriate institutions of higher education, and preparing for their stay in the United States, the President may make suitable arrangements for counseling and orientation services abroad.

(b) For the purposes of assisting foreign students in making the best use of their opportunities while attending colleges and universities in the United States, and assisting such students in directing their talents and initiative into channels which will make them more effective leaders upon return to their native lands, the Presidents may make suitable arrangements by contract or otherwise for the establishment and maintenance at educational institutions in the United States attended by foreign students of an adequate counseling service.

BOARD OF FOREIGN SCHOLARSHIPS

SEC. 410. The Board of Foreign Scholarships is directed to advise and assist the President in the discharge of programs authorized by this title, in accordance with the guidelines set forth in section 406. The President is authorized to provide for additional necessary secretarial and staff assistance for the Board as may be required under this title.

GENERAL AUTHORITIES

SEC. 411. (a) The public and private sectors in the United States and in the developing countries shall be encouraged to contribute to the costs of the programs financed under this title.

(b) The President shall seek to engage the public and private sectors of developing countries in programs to maximize the utilization of program participants upon their return to their own countries.

(c) The President is authorized to provide for publicity and promotion abroad of the scholarship program provided for in this title.

ENGLISH TEACHING, TEXTBOOKS, AND OTHER TEACHING MATERIALS

SEC. 412. Wherever adequate facilities or materials are not available to carry out the purposes of section 406(3) in the participant's country and the President determines that the purposes of this title are best served by providing the preliminary training in the participant's country, the President may, by purchase, contract, or other appropriate means, provide the necessary materials and instructors to achieve such purpose.

FUNDING

SEC. 413. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), funds to carry out the provisions of this title for a fiscal year shall be available only from appropriations made to the United States Information Agency for such fiscal year.

(b) None of the funds appropriated to the United States Information Agency for the fiscal year 1984 or 1985 to carry out section 102(a)(1) of the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961 may be available to provide financial assistance under this title.

REPORTING REQUIREMENT

SEC. 414. Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this title, and at intervals of one year thereafter, the President shall submit to the Congress a report on activities carried on and expenditures made pursuant to this title.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I offer this amendment on behalf of myself and the distinguished majority leader, Mr. BAKER; the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Mr. PERCY; the ranking Democratic member of the committee, Mr. PELL; Mr. BINGAMAN; Mr. CRANSTON; Mr. BOSCHWITZ; Mr. PRYOR; Mr. DANFORTH; Mr. ZORINSKY; Mr. KENNEDY; Mr. INOUYE; Mr. MATSUNAGA; Mr. TSONGAS; Mr. RIEGLE; Mr. JEPSEN; Mr. DURENBERGER; Mr. HOLLINGS; and Mr. KASTEN.

Mr. President, this amendment would establish an undergraduate scholarship program to bring students of limited financial means from developing countries to the United States for study.

It addresses the longstanding concerns of the Congress about the need to devote more U.S. resources to exchange programs, which are one of the most effective aspects of American diplomacy. In last year's report on the State and USIA authorization bill, the Senate noted that while funding for the exchange programs of USIA had declined by 40 percent since 1965, Soviet bloc spending for comparable programs has increased and vastly exceed U.S. efforts.

But the disparity between United States and Soviet efforts in this field is only one part of the problem. There is a serious gap in the existing network of scholarship program offered by the U.S. Government.

Under present circumstances educational opportunities in the United States are limited to students from families with relatively high incomes. This situation, should it continue, is not in the interest of either the countries themselves or the United States. It is important that talented young men and women from all economic and social classes in these developing countries have an opportunity to study in the United States.

This bill leaves it to the U.S. missions abroad to devise an appropriate selection mechanism that would take financial circumstances into account. It also takes the approach of the Fulbright Program and leaves it to the discretion of the President in determining the levels of funding and number of scholarships.

The bipartisan Commission was more specific when it called for a similar program of 10,000 scholarships in Central America. But the problem is clearly not limited to Central America. The problem is worldwide and demands a worldwide solution.

Before closing, Mr. President, I think the record should indicate that in developing this program we have worked closely with USIA, AID, the American Council on Education, the National Association for Foreign Student Affairs, the Institute of International Education, the International Educational Exchange Liaison Group, and the National Association of State Universities & Land Grant Colleges, to name just a few of the organizations. There is a remarkable consensus on the need for such a program among these groups as well as on both sides of the aisle within Congress.

Mr. President, the developing nations have come to occupy a more central position than ever before in determining world stability. The mutual understanding of our peoples is therefore more important than ever before. I urge my colleagues to broaden the opportunities for improving our understanding and to support this amendment.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I am extremely pleased that the Senate has agreed today to consider as an amendment to the Supplemental Appropriations Act, the provisions of S. 2768, the U.S. Scholarship Program for Developing Countries Act. My friend from Maryland, Senator MATHIAS, is to be commended for his successful leadership of this effort and his offering of this amendment. The provisions of this amendment are the result of a close collaboration between our respective staffs in enlarging upon the idea of an International Scholarship Program for developing nations, included in the Kissinger Commission's report. Not only does it enjoy the widespread support of educators in New Mexico and throughout the United States, but it also is supported by 15 of our colleagues who have joined as cosponsors.

There is a vast disparity between the United States and Soviet-bloc sponsored scholarship programs throughout the world. For example, in the Caribbean and Latin American countries in 1982, the Soviet-bloc countries sponsored approximately 14,200 scholarships to students of this region, compared with only 1,362 offered by U.S. Government programs. I am persuaded that in the long run, we can do more to improve our relationship with Third World countries by addressing this problem, than by an equivalent amount of aid in other assistance programs. For we will expose a new generation of leaders in those countries to the vibrancy of our American political and economic system.

The Kissinger Commission highlighted the need to increase our International Scholarship Program. The Commission recommended that the "United States expand economic assistance for democratic institutions and leadership training," by establishing a program of 10,000 U.S. Government sponsored scholarships to bring Central American students to the United States. If the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is ultimately adopted, I plan to urge the administration to give first priority to students from the Caribbean and Latin America.

Mr. President, this amendment is a long-overdue attempt to meet the Soviet challenge in offering educational opportunities in the Third World. The program is designed to attract students who could not afford to attend school in this country. We do not want the children of a narrow elite to be educated in the United States, while the children of everyone else aspire only to an education in the Soviet Union.

And this Scholarship Program will not only benefit the developing world. Our own students will be afforded a wider exposure to the realities of life outside the United States. And I would note that all of the scholarship funds will be spent in the United States at the universities and colleges the students will be attending.

Mr. President, I am confident that this important legislation will promote the interests of the United States and the development of many other countries whom we have a vital interest in helping. I am hopeful that the full Senate will act favorably on this amendment.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, the committee has considered the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Maryland. It has been cleared on both sides with all the appropriate parties. Unless the Senator from Mississippi has a comment to make about this amendment, we are prepared to accept it.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I approve of the amendment personally, and I do not know of any opposition on this side of the aisle.

Mr. MATHIAS. I thank the managers of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3629) was agreed to.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending committee amendment be laid aside for the purpose of considering another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3630

(Purpose: To make a technical change in the bill as reported)

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] proposes an amendment numbered 3630.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 13, strike all beginning with the word "Notwithstanding" on line 9 through the word "Act" on line 14 and insert in lieu thereof:

Notwithstanding section 8(b) of the Board for International Broadcasting Act of 1973, as amended, the amounts placed in reserve, or which would be placed in reserve, in fiscal year 1984 pursuant to that section, shall be available to the Board for carrying out that Act until September 30, 1985.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, this amendment is purely technical in nature. It corrects a misprint of the name of the Board for International Broadcasting in H.R. 6040 as reported by the Appropriations Committee.

In addition, it tightens the language to make it absolutely clear that the Board can use all the currency gains received in fiscal year 1984 for its programs. It does not change the law substantively in any way from what was adopted by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3630) was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3631

(Purpose: To permit the Department of Justice to host the General Assembly of INTERPOL which will occur during September or October 1985

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] for himself and Mr. HOLLINGS proposes an amendment numbered 3631.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, add the following:

GENERAL PROVISION—DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Notwithstanding the provisions of 31 U.S.C. 1342, the Attorney General is hereby authorized to accept, receive, hold, and administer on behalf of the United States, gifts of money, personal property, and services, for the purpose of hosting the meeting of the General Assembly of the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL) in the United States in September and October 1985. All moneys received for this purpose shall be credited to the appropriation "Salaries and expenses, general legal activities" notwithstanding 31 U.S.C. 3302. The Attorney General is further authorized to use otherwise available funds from the appropriation "Salaries and expenses, general legal activities" for fiscal years 1984, 1985, and 1986 as he deems necessary, to pay expenses of hosting such General Assembly meeting, including but not limited to reception and representation expenses. The authority of the Attorney General under this section shall continue through September 30, 1986.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, this amendment would allow the Department of Justice to host a meeting of the General Assembly of international police organization called INTERPOL, and allow the Attorney General on behalf of the United States to accept gifts of money, personal property, and services donated for the purpose of hosting the Assembly.

This has been cleared by all appropriate committees and on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment (No. 3631) was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending committee amendment be laid aside for the purpose of hearing the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3632

(Purpose: To stimulate technical and Engineering Opportunities and training)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] proposes an amendment numbered 3632.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 6, line 23, strike all through page 7, line 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For an additional amount for "Economic development assistance programs," $26,000,000, to remain available until expended, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 3151(1) of which $7,000,000 is for a grant to the Institute for Technology Development in the State of Mississippi, and of which $19,000,000 is for a grant to Boston University for the consideration and related costs of the university engineering and technical training center.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, my amendment provides $19 million in support for the development and construction of a university engineering technical training center at Boston University under the Economic Development Assistance Program of the Department of Commerce. This program marks a major step forward, not only for the urban redevelopment efforts at Kenmore Square in Boston but for the Nation's economic development as a whole.

Funds provided by this amendment are for the purpose of supporting the planning, construction, renovation, equipping, and related costs of the engineering and technical training center at Boston University, Boston, MA.

With this amendment, the Economic Development Administration will join a creative partnership with State and local government, with private industry, and with one of our Nation's finest urban universities to stimulate the growth and development of high technology industry in Boston and to provide technical training for young and unskilled workers.

By producing the engineers and technical experts needed to support high technology industries, and by making the Boston University faculty available as a major resource for basic and applied research, the University Engineering & Technical Training Center at Boston University will serve as a magnet for high technology industries to establish plants and research facilities in Boston and the surrounding area. The center will also be a major source of scientific and technical training for the youth of Boston and New England.

Aside from its value in directly stimulating employment, the need for such a center is clear. The Massachusetts High Technology Council estimates that at the present rate of graduation there will be an annual shortage of more than 3,000 engineers and skilled professionals. The center will help to alleviate this shortfall by graduating 2,000 engineers each year for the high technology industry.

The University Engineering & Technical Training Center at Boston University will serve as a focus for the redevelopment of the Kenmore Square area of Boston. The center will stimulate employment and redevelopment and will increase the city's tax base by attracting high technology research and support facilities to Metropolitan Boston.

The University Engineering & Technical Training Center responds to both local and national needs. It will increase substantially the number of engineers and skilled high technology professionals, and it will serve as a national model for cooperative efforts in urban development.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts has in fact been cleared on both sides with the appropriate committees, and I believe I am joined in that with my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, the Senator is correct.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I move adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment (No. 3632) was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. PELL addressed the Chair.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Rhode Island could withhold for a couple of minutes, I think we will get to that.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending committee amendment be laid aside so that we might proceed with another technical amendment from the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3633

(Purpose: To make a technical change in the bill as reported)

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] for himself and Mr. HOLLINGS proposes an amendment numbered 3633.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 10, line 16, after "1983," strike "and 1984" and insert in lieu thereof: "1984, 1985, and hereafter".

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, the Appropriations Committee adopted an amendment last week to modify the cooperative agreement program. This amendment would allow local governments that participated in the program the option of providing space of equal or greater value to hold U.S. prisoners than that which is paid for by the U.S. Marshal Service.

In simpler terms it will simply provide the Marshal Service the flexibility it needs to run the program.

I believe that this amendment also has cleared on both sides and unless there is further discussion I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, that is correct. We agree. There is no objection on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment (No. 3633) was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending committee amendment be laid aside for the purposes of considering an amendment to be offered by the acting chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3634

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] proposes an amendment numbered 3634.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, add the following new section:

GENERAL PROVISION—LEGAL SERVICES CORPORATION

Upon the enactment of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1985, the first proviso under the heading "Legal Services Corporation, Payment to the Legal Services Corporation", in title II of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1985 is amended to read as follows: "Provided, that the funds appropriated in this paragraph shall be expended in accordance with the provisions under the heading 'Legal Services Corporation, Payment to the Legal Services Corporation' contained in Public Law 98-166 except that 'fiscal year 1984', wherever it appears in such provisions, shall be construed as 'fiscal year 1985', 'fiscal year 1983', wherever it appears in such provisions, shall be construed as 'fiscal year 1984'; 'January 1, 1984' shall be construed as 'January 1, 1985'; '$6.50' shall be construed as '$7.61'; and '$13' shall be construed as '$13.57'; and shall not be denied to any grantee or contractor which received funding from the Corporation in fiscal year 1984 as a result of activities which during fiscal year 1984 have been found by an independent hearing officer appointed by the President of the Corporation not to constitute grounds for a denial of refunding:".

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, this particular amendment is a technical amendment with some substance that has been agreed to. Due to an error in drafting in this particular amendment as it is embodied in the State-Justice-Commerce conference report, which should be here from the House of Representatives later on this evening, the amendment in that legislation prohibited an appeal from any ruling of an independent administrative hearing officer appointed by the Legal Services Corporation for the entire fiscal year. It was only intended to cover instances of that nature that had occurred in 1984.

It is agreed to by all the parties.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in reviewing the conference report on H.R. 5712, I noticed in the section concerning the Legal Services Corporation that new language has been added which has a dramatic impact on the Corporation's defunding procedures. Basically, the amendment adopted in conference would abrogate the right of the president of the Corporation to deny refunding to grantees who violate the law. Unless remedied, this amendment would end a right that has been provided to the president of the Corporation even during these last several years of debate and acrimony over the Federal Government's provision of legal aid for the poor.

As I understand, the amendment was adopted in order to ensure that the Western Center on Law and Poverty would be refunded in 1985, despite the decision of the president of the Corporation, Mr. Bogard, to deny refunding to that grantee. Unfortunately, the amendment, as it is written, does much more. It eliminates one of the very core components of the compromise reached by this body in 1983. It uniformly prohibits the president of the Corporation from ruling contrary to a decision reached by the hearing officer in defunding cases.

Thus, the amendment must be changed not only to ensure that the Corporation has the authority to deny funding to those grantees that break the law, but also to protect the compromise reached in 1983.

In 1980, Western Center received $61,000 from the Legal Services Corporation to mount a political campaign to defeat proposition 9, a State ballot measure concerning tax issues. The center also received staff commitments from approximately 30 local programs in the State, all of whom are funded by the Legal Services Corporation. Among other things, these resources were used to train campaign workers in voter registration and get-out-the-vote techniques. The campaign lasted some 3 months and numerous persons at field offices throughout California devoted at least half of their time to the successful defeat of the State referendum.

To me, this effort conducted by the Western Center on Law & Poverty was the most egregious example we have to date of the blatant way in which congressional prohibitions against lobbying have been ignored by the Corporation. Moreover, it is a clear example of how Federal funds have been used to influence local politics.

In an opinion letter dated September 19, 1983, the GAO stated, that the actions by the Western Center were "the precise sort of activities that are prohibited by the statute's injunction against using corporate funds to oppose a ballot measure that is already on the ballot and where client's legal rights are not at issue."

Proponents of Western Center do not argue with this assessment. They simply state that the violation occurred in 1980 and it is wrong to punish the center now, that the campaign was specifically approved by the Corporation, and that it only involved a fraction of the center's annual budget from the Corporation.

An illegal act is never made legal by the passage of time or by the number of persons involved. It is obvious that the Corporation knew about the campaign. They thought so highly of Western Center's actions that they held conferences in 1981 urging other programs to follow suit in opposing the Reagan administration's budget proposals.

The only way we learned of the campaign was that the Corporation videotaped a speech by a representative of Western Center which laid out in great detail the nature, extent and funding of the center's political effort. The videotape was not found until early 1983, and in 1984, Mr. Bogard correctly decided to deny refunding to the center after a lengthy hearing process.

To now overturn the Corporation's decision to deny refunding to Western Center is a tragic mistake. It sends one clear message to the legal services community. Congressional prohibitions are meaningless and that as long as everyone involved agrees to break the law, there really is no punishment for your crime.

In my legal study, I had been taught that no person or organization is above the law. Since coming to Congress, however, I have learned that this rule is by no means hard and fast, but I had hoped that we had reached a point where Congress would be willing to apply this basic legal principle to the Federal Legal Services Program. Apparently, it is not, and we are by no means better off because of this oversight.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I can understand my colleague's concern, and while I do not agree with him in regard to the specific case involving the Western Center on Law and Poverty, I think he is correct in his reading of the breadth of the amendment found in the conference report. Consequently, I am offering an amendment to this supplemental appropriation bill which I believe will conform the fiscal 1985 bill to the compromise that the distinguished Senator from Utah, I, and others reached last year concerning the legal services program.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator for his efforts, and while I feel that they do not go far enough, I do feel they are a step in the right direction.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I believe this amendment also has been cleared on both sides, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, that is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment (No. 3634) was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

THE MARE NOSTRUM FOUNDATION

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, as my colleagues know, I have long been a supporter of efforts to improve our understanding and wise use of this Nation's marine resources. I believe it is essential to elevate the American public's awareness of the importance of the ocean and coastal resources to this country. The Mare Nostrum Foundation was established in 1980 to provide essential information to the general public on the development and management of the oceans.

Mare Nostrum Foundation is now involved in production of a series of 9 hour long television films entitled "The Blue Revolution." The series will examine man's relationship with the sea. The series will be funded primarily from private sources, but some seed money will be required to encourage private sector contributions.

I would like to direct the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration to make available up to $200,000 as a one-time grant to the Mare Nostrum Foundation to begin work on this important project. I must, however, insist that these funds not come from those provided under this act for the "Year of the Ocean Foundation." It is my understanding that NOAA can meet this commitment without reducing appropriations to any other present or proposed NOAA program. By contributing these funds, NOAA will effectively send a signal to the private sector that support should be provided for this project.

Mr. RUDMAN. I thank the Senator for his comments. The Mare Nostrum Foundation project is indeed worthy of support. I would agree that funds should be made available to the Foundation for the Blue Revolution project if no other ongoing NOAA projects or activities are affected.

(Mr. ANDREWS addressed the Chair.)

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Dakota is seeking recognition for the purposes of offering amendment, will the Senator advise me if that is correct.

Mr. ANDREWS. That is true.

Mr. RUDMAN. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending committee amendment be laid aside for the purpose of considering an amendment to be offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ANDREWS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3635

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ANDREWS] for himself and Mr. WEICKER proposes amendment No. 3635.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. Section 5532(f)(2) of Title V United States Code is amended by striking "December 31, 1984" and inserting "December 31, 1985" in lieu thereof.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, the amendment being offered today by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER] and myself is intended to address a critical transportation problem; namely, delays in the aviation system. The amendment simply extends for 1 year the current law provision allowing existing air traffic control personnel to remain on the job as well as collect retirement benefits.

Much has been written lately about delays in the air traffic control system. The press states that delays in the first 6 months of the year are up 72 percent over last year. This problem has been the subject of congressional hearings as well as study by the aviation industry and the Federal Aviation Administration. There are numerous potential solutions to the problem. However, this amendment today is merely a partial answer to keep on the job those controllers who have been allowed to draw their Federal retirement benefits without the usual dual compensation penalties.

Long-term solutions will require cooperation on the part of air carriers using the busiest airports as well as the Federal Government. We applaud the FAA Administrator for convening a task force on the subject. He is currently reviewing a variety of remedies and I know many in Congress await his recommendations on steps necessary to alleviate what has become a serious problem for the flying public.

Traffic projections point to the potential for more system delays. All we intend to do today is make sure that every available person is allowed to remain on the job as the air system returns to full capacity.

As I understand, this amendment has been cleared on both sides.

Mr. RUDMAN. The Senator from North Dakota is correct. It certainly has been cleared on this side and I believe the ranking minority member of the committee, the Senator from Mississippi, has also been informed and consents to the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, may I ask which one was this? I was interrupted.

Mr. RUDMAN. It is the Andrews-Weicker amendment on air traffic controllers.

Mr. STENNIS. On air traffic controllers?

Mr. RUDMAN. Yes.

Mr. STENNIS. If it is permissible to ask the question, is there a scarcity of these people now? Is that the reason for this bill?

Mr. ANDREWS. These individuals are now on the payroll, Mr. President, and if we do not have this amendment, they will expire and we will lose 120 of the most highly qualified aircraft controllers.

Mr. STENNIS. I wonder what kind of precedent we are setting here. But it is solely because of the dire need and the shortage without them.

Mr. ANDREWS. That is absolutely true.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator.

I do not object and I do not know anyone over here who does.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Mississippi.

If there be no further debate, I ask for the immediate consideration of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment (No. 3635) was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending committee amendment be laid aside for the purpose of considering an amendment to be offered at this time by the Senator from Washington [Mr. EVANS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3636

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Washington [Mr. EVANS] for himself and Mr. GORTON proposes an amendment numbered 3636.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 20, after line 2, add—

"If the State of Washington, the Yakima Indian Nation, or any other entity, public or private, prior to an authorization or the providing of an appropriation of funds to the Secretary of the Interior to construct the Yakima River Basin Water Enhancement Project (hereinafter, Yakima Enhancement Project), shares in the costs of or constructs any physical element of that project, including any reregulating dam or fish passage facility, and conveys the same to the United States, the costs incurred by the State, the Yakima Indian Nation, or any other entity in the construction of such elements shall be credited to the total amount of any costs to be borne by the State, the Yakima Indian Nation, or any other entity as contributions toward payment of the cost of the Yakima Enhancement Project; except that no such credit shall be given for any element constructed by the State, the Yakima Indian Nation, or any other entity unless the element has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior prior to its construction. The Secretary shall grant such approval, when requested by the State, the Yakima Indian Nation, or other entity, if the Secretary determines that the element proposed for construction would be an integral part of the Yakima Enhancement Project. The Secretary is authorized to accept title to any reregulating dam or fish passage facility constructed by the State, the Yakima Indian Nation, or any other entity, pursuant to this section, without giving compensation therefor, and thereafter to operate and maintain such facilities. Any such facility shall be operated by the Secretary in a manner consistent with the treaty rights of the Yakima Indian Nation, Federal reclamation law, and water rights established pursuant to State law, including the valid contract rights of irrigation users. The Secretary of the Interior shall negotiate and enter into agreements for the payment of operation and maintenance costs pursuant to Federal reclamation law and other applicable law. Provided, that operation and maintenance costs related to anadromous fish, including costs at facilities in the Yakima River Basin authorized to be constructed by the Secretary of the Interior, which are in excess of present obligations, as determined by the Secretary, shall be nonreimbursable and nonreturnable.".

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I rise to propose an amendment to H.R. 6040. The amendment allows for the crediting of expenditures made by the State of Washington, the Yakima Indian Nation, or any other entity for constructing any element of the Yakima River Basin Water Enhancement Project toward any costs to be borne as contributions toward payment for cost of the project. The amendment conditions the granting of credit, however, on conveyance of the project element to the United States, and the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of the element as an integral part of the Yakima Enhancement Project. The amendment authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to accept title to any facility approved by the Secretary to be an integral part of the project without giving compensation and to operate and maintain the facilities. Finally, the amendment provides that operation and maintenance costs related to anadromous fish at facilities in the Yakima River Basin, in excess of existing obligations, are nonreimbursable and nonreturnable.

The history of irrigated agriculture in the Yakima River Basin traces its origins back to the late 1860's when water was first diverted to irrigate crops. Federal involvement in the development of the water resources of the basin began in 1905 under the Reclamation Service, predecessor of the Bureau of Reclamation. The irrigable lands served by the Yakima Project consist of approximately 464,000 acres on both sides of a 175-mile reach of the Yakima River in south central Washington. In addition to irrigation water supplies, the project also provides hydroelectric power with an installed generation capacity of 23 megawatts, incidental flood control, and recreation and fish and wildlife benefits.

In 1977, drought conditions focused attention on the need for further efforts to both expand and assure existing water supplies in the basin. As a result of this heightened interest, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized, by Public Law 96-162 (act of Dec. 28, 1979), to conduct a feasibility investigation of the Yakima River Basin Water Enhancement Project. The primary objectives of the proposed project are to provide supplemental water to presently irrigated land, provide water to newly irrigated lands of the Yakima Indian Reservation, provide water for increased instream flows for aquatic life, develop a comprehensive plan for the basin to enable efficient management of existing water supplies. The completion date for the study is 1986.

Historically, the Yakima River supported an estimated 500,000 to 600,000 returning adult salmon annually. By 1920, the number of returning salmon had declined to about 11,000 each year as a result of a number of factors including the construction of water diversion dams and canals without fish ladders or protective screens, partial or total blockage of migratory routes and dewatering of spawning and rearing habitats. Beginning in 1920, efforts were taken to correct the most serious fish passage problems through construction of fish ladders and screens at some diversion dams. As a result, the runs slowly increased between 1920 and 1960, reaching a peak of 19,000 fish. Since then, they have declined to an estimated 2,000 fish.

The fish phase of the Bureau of Reclamation feasibility study has been completed and has identified possible elements of a final plan for the project. Among these is the construction of a reregulating reservoir and fish passage and protective facilities in the Yakima River Basin.

Mr. President, the State of Washington has appropriated $14 million to design and construct a reregulating reservoir on the Yakima River. The appropriation by the State, however, is contingent upon being able to secure a credit of such funding toward any future costs the State may be required to bear in the event Congress authorizes the Yakima River Basin Water Enhancement Project. Adoption of this amendment would encourage construction of the reregulating reservoir and would facilitate a cooperative Federal/non-Federal program to provide for fish passage facilities in the Yakima basin. Construction of these facilities would result in a tremendous benefit to the Pacific Northwest and to the Nation as a whole, and would go far in rectifying the damage to the region's anadromous fishery resource caused by the construction of hydroelectric and irrigation dams on the Columbia River system by the Federal Government.

The substance of this amendment is almost identical to the provisions of H.R. 653, a measure passed by the House of Representatives on March 4, 1984, and in a different form by the Senate on May 18, 1984. Differences between the two bodies over other provisions of that legislation, however, make it increasingly unlikely that it will pass both houses of Congress and be sent to the President for his signature before the end of the 98th Congress.

Mr. President, adoption of this amendment would complete the process begun by the House and Senate when they passed H.R. 653. I believe immediate passage of this legislation is critical to the continued viability of anadromous fish runs in the Yakima River and to the eventual solution of water supply problems in the Yakima basin. I strongly urge adoption of this amendment.

Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared, I understand on both sides of the aisle. It merely repeats a proposal which had been adopted prior to this by the Senate and in different form by the House of Representatives but they are attached to bills which seem to have no chance of moving.

Mr. RUDMAN. The Senator from Washington is correct.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I support the amendment and do not know of any opposition on this side.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I join my good friend and colleague, Senator EVANS, in offering this amendment to H.R. 6040. As Senator EVANS noted, this amendment is very similar to H.R. 653, legislation that was passed by both the House of Representatives and the Senate earlier this year. Because the two bodies disagree on other provisions in the legislation, it is unlikely that the bill will reach the President's desk before the end of the 98th Congress. As a result, the adoption of this amendment now is vital to help solve water supply problems in the Yakima River Basin and to restore anadromous fish runs in the Yakima River.

An important feature of this amendment is that it provides that costs incurred by non-Federal entities for features of the proposed Yakima River Basin Water Enhancement Project, currently under study by the Bureau of Reclamation, shall be credited toward the non-Federal share of the costs of such project if it is eventually authorized by the Congress. The State of Washington would like to proceed with the construction of a reregulating reservoir on the Yakima River, one important element of the overall Yakima River Water Enhancement Project. The funds have been appropriated by the State contingent on the ability of the State to receive credit for the project if local cost-sharing is required under the final plan.

This amendment will help to facilitate the construction of the reregulating reservoir and it will help to promote the cooperative efforts of the Bureau of Reclamation, the Bonneville Power Administration, the State of Washington, the Yakima Indian Nation, and other groups to provide for fish passage facilities in the Yakima River Basin.

As I have informed my colleagues before, hydroelectric development in the Northwest and the construction of irrigation diversion dams and canals without fish ladders or protective screens reduced significantly the anadromous fishery resource in the Yakima River. At one time, the Yakima River supported an estimated 500,000 to 600,000 returning adult salmon annually. By 1920, the number of salmon had declined to approximately 11,000 each year. Over the years, the number of fish returning to the Yakima has continued to decline.

This amendment will provide many benefits to the Pacific Northwest and it will greatly enhance the region's ability to solve water supply problems in the Yakima Basin and to restore and protect the important anadromous fishery resource which has been seriously damaged by the development of hydroelectric and irrigation dams on the Columbia River system by the Federal Government.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The amendment (No. 3636) was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment now be laid aside for the purpose of the consideration of an amendment to be offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL].

AMENDMENT NO. 3611

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Congress concerning the future of the people on Taiwan)

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 3611 regarding the future of Taiwan and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] proposes an amendment numbered 3611.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, a point of order. I suggest that this amendment is nongermane.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the calling off of the reading of the amendment?

Mr. GOLDWATER. I object to action on the amendment in that it is nongermane.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator objecting to calling off the reading of the amendment?

Mr. GOLDWATER. No; the amendment can be read, but I will then bring up the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

POLICY ON TAIWAN

SEC. . (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) February 28, 1984, marked the twelfth anniversary of the Shanghai Communique.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

POLICY ON TAIWAN

SEC. . (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) February 28, 1984, marked the twelfth anniversary of the Shanghai Communique signed by the United States and the People's Republic of China;

(2) the communique and the 1979 United States-People's Republic of China normalization agreement greatly improved relations between Washington and Beijing;

(3) peace has prevailed in the Taiwan Strait since the normalization of relations between the United States and the People's Republic of China;

(4) maintaining a sound United States-People's Republic of China relationship serves the interests of both countries and the interests of peace in the Pacific region;

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I make the point of order now that the amendment is nongermane.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under rule XV, questions of germaneness are decided by the Senate without debate. The question before the Senate is, Is the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island germane?

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island germane? The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. EAST], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. STAFFORD] are necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. MATTINGLY]. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber wishing to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 23 nays 69, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. MATTINGLY]. The amendment is held nongermane and falls for that reason.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I indicated at a previous point that I would object to the manager of the bill controlling the floor by setting aside a pending amendment. I have no objection to the pending amendment nor do I have an objection to the amendment to be offered by the Senator from New Mexico. But I believe that the floor should not be controlled by the manager or any other particular individual.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico asked for the floor. The manager of the bill did not ask for the floor.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am advised that the reason this committee amendment has been set aside a number of times is because parties have been negotiating, I believe in good faith, to try to work out an arrangement.

At one time there was a practice that grew up informally in the Senate that that would be the procedure, but we stopped that, at least by general consent at the beginning and now it is done only infrequently.

The Senator from Ohio should know that was not the case here. It was not a design by the leadership or by the chairman of the committee. This committee amendment is being set aside temporarily because I think we can save some time if we work it out.

Mr. President, I can assure the Senator from Ohio that he will have the chance to offer any amendment he wishes. I am sure the manager will concur in that.

I would hope that we would continue to negotiate on this committee amendment.

If that does not work out in the next little while, then maybe we have to do something else. I hope the Senator will accept that.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I appreciate the assurances of the majority leader. The manager of the bill has indicated pretty much the same point. That is that this is not a traffic arrangement, where you are attempting to control who would come up with an amendment.

It is that procedure to which I object. With the Senator's assurance that it is not being used in that situation, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I wish to assure the distinguished Senator from Ohio that that is the case in this instance. We asked the majority to refrain from a practice which was growing here, to refrain from asking unanimous consent at the beginning of action on a bill to allow the two managers of the bill to set aside an amendment without asking unanimous consent each time. That policy, I think, has gone by the wayside.

I can understand the concern of the Senator from Ohio in this instance, because he feels that the Senate should take action on and dispose of the pending committee amendment, but it is my understanding that Mr. SPECTER asked the chairman to lay this aside because Mr. SPECTER feels that negotiations are going forward and they can probably reach a compromise soon if they can lay the amendment aside for a while.

So I hope that, in this instance, the distinguished Senator from Ohio would not pursue the matter beyond this point. He has already indicated he will not, but I think he should be assured that the earlier practice of getting a Senate order that the two managers of the bill may, between themselves, decide that a committee amendment might be laid aside and they avoid asking the consent of the Senate in each instance—that is not being pursued here. I do not think the distinguished chairman of the committee is attempting to set this up as a stopgap.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I did not think so at all, Mr. President.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the minority leader for his explanation, with which I concur, with respect to the procedure. I reiterate my assurance to the Senator from Ohio that that is not the purpose of the effort at this time. I thank the Senator for withdrawing his objection.

Mr. HATFIELD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Ohio for just a moment?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. HATFIELD. I say to the Senator this has become somewhat of a practice because today, we were literally sitting waiting for Senators to come and offer amendments. When Senators came to the floor and said, "We are ready to offer an amendment," I would stand and ask for unanimous consent to lay the committee amendment aside so that the only amendment on the floor was that of the Senator from wherever. That became the practice because we had to literally beg Senators to come to the floor and we were sitting through quorum calls. That happened, that kind of practice, because the only Senator on deck was a Senator ready to offer an amendment, and we obviously set the committee amendment aside to do so. I in no way attempted to control the floor to provide any kind of partisan or favorable treatment to anyone here.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. JOHNSTON and Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I renew my previous request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3637

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] proposes an amendment numbered 3637.

On page 34, line 16, insert before the period the following: ": Provided further, That section 3 of the Act entitled 'An Act to improve the administration of the Historic Sites, Buildings and Antiquities Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 666)', approved September 8, 1980 (Public Law 96-344), is repealed.".

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared on both sides. It repeals the designation of the Georgia O'Keeffe National Historic Site. This is identical to S. 1775, passed by the Senate on November 18, 1983. Unfortunately, that bill has been referred to a House committee and not acted on. Ms. O'Keeffe was expressed a desire that her home not become a unit of the National Park System. I believe we should respect her wishes and not object to this repeal. None of the lands authorized have been acquired.

I ask that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico is correct. It has been cleared on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. STENNIS. There is no objection on this side.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, we are willing to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3637) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3638

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the pending amendment temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] proposes an amendment numbered 3636.

On page 34 line 2 in front of the period insert the following: "and legislation to establish a National Wildlife Refuge within the Atchafalaya Basin if enacted."

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, this is in the nature of a technical amendment. It has been cleared by Senator MCCLURE, chairman of the Interior Committee. All it does is make the appropriation to the Atchafalaya subject to later legislation if enacted and would have no effect unless later legislation is enacted.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Senator is correct. This is a technical amendment. Senator MCCLURE, chairman of the committee, has cleared it. We are willing to accept it.

Mr. STENNIS. There is no objection on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3638) was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3639

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Congress that President Reagan should withdraw the recess nomination of Martha Seger to the Federal Reserve Board)

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be set aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS], for himself and Mr. PRYOR, proposes an amendment numbered 3639.

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following new section:

SEC. . (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) high interest rates are devastating American farmers and small businesses;

(2) the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System sets monetary policy which dramatically affects interest rates;

(3) on June 4, 1984, President Reagan appointed Martha Seger to a full term on the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System;

(4) Article II, section 2, clause 2 of the Constitution empowers the President to obtain the "Advice and Consent of the Senate" to appoint certain Federal officers;

(5) the Senate Banking Committee, consistent with the Senate's constitutional duties, held four days of hearings on the Seger nomination;

(6) on June 29, 1984, the Senate Banking Committee reported her nomination by a vote of 10 to 8;

(7) on July 2, 1984 President Reagan submitted the name of Martha Seger as an appointee to the Federal Reserve Board during an intra-session recess;

(8) this intra-session appointment intentionally circumvents the advice and consent process prescribed by the Constitution;

(9) Martha Seger has no background in agriculture or small business;

On March 1, 1984, the Senate resolved by a vote of 50-37 that the next nominee to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System should be a person with a background in agriculture or small business; and

(11) farmers, small businesses, and consumers continue to be at the mercy of high interest rates and Federal Reserve monetary policy management.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that President Reagan should—

(1) withdraw the recess nomination of Martha Seger to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve system; and

(2) with the full advice and consent of the Senate, nominate a person to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System with a background in agriculture or small business.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, my amendment expresses the sense of the Senate that President Reagan should withdraw the recess nomination of Dr. Martha Seger to the Federal Reserve Board and nominate a person with a background in agriculture or small business.

As everyone here knows, during the July recess, President Reagan appointed Martha Seger to a term to the Federal Reserve Board. He did this to avoid having to subject the nomination to a confirmation vote by the full Senate. Just prior to the recess, the Banking Committee narrowly recommended her nomination to the full Senate.

There are several reasons why the appointment of Martha Seger to the Federal Reserve Board is in my judgment an inexcusable mistake.

President Reagan's appointment of Miss Seger during the Fourth of July recess without the consent of the Senate is a blatant abuse of the recess appointment power.

The President ignored the wishes of the Senate by appointing a person to the Fed with no background in agriculture or small business.

And Martha Seger has failed to articulate any of her positions on important economic issues.

If I would have had the opportunity to cast a vote on the appointment of Martha Seger, I would have voted no. I believe the Senate should have that opportunity despite the President's recent action.

We should not underestimate the importance of the Fed.

Its decisions, especially its money-targeted decisions, send shock waves through financial markets; and that affects our entire economy. If the Fed tightens up, interests rates rise. And that means disaster—especially for farmers and small business men who need basic investment capital to keep going.

Because of this, we must review every Fed nominee carefully, keeping two points especially in mind.

First, we must have a clear understanding of the nominee's basic approach to monetary policy. That way, we're able to debate and decide whether her approach is appropriate.

Second, we must make sure that the Fed isn't filled with "pie-in-the-sky" economists, but also includes some people who really understand the impact high interest rates have on farmers and small businesses and on average ordinary Americans. That's why the Senate has gone on record resolving that the next nominee to the Fed should be a person with a background in agriculture or small business.

In this light, appointing someone to the Board whom we know little about and who has virtually no credentials is simply ludicrous.

Throughout her confirmation hearings, Martha Seger was unable or unwilling to articulate her position on important economic issues. She displayed little understanding of current economic issues. She showed more promise for bringing partisan strife to the Board than balance or commonsense.

Dr. Seger, while not linked to any academic or professional accomplishment, is clearly implicated in some rather bitter partisan battles in her home State of Michigan.

The Seger enigma is compounded when searching for any scholarly writings which one would expect to find from an acadamecian. There simply is not any.

I am also troubled by the direction this appointment seems to take us; away from objectivity and balance and into partisanship and total administration allegiance.

While choosing not to articulate her philosophy on any important economic matter, she has eagerly been outspoken in her support of everything the President is doing and has been described by a former department chairman as being very much against regulation.

In light of what is clearly a weak record, it comes as no surprise that the process surrounding this appointment is fraught with irregularities.

An unusual evaluation procedure was used by the administration in reviewing this nominee. Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker was omitted from the interviewing process and the President chose to make this appointment during a 3 week recess while the Senate was out of town.

Not only do I find this underhanded, but I am outraged that he would employ such action for a position which carries with it such a tremendous impact on almost every aspect of our economy.

Finally, Dr. Seger's appointment also ignores the expressed will of the Senate to appoint a person with a background in agriculture or small business—two of the sectors or our economy most heavily affected by high interest rates.

Take a look at agriculture. Farm debt stands at $216 billion—double that of 6 years ago. Farmers have turned to the Farmers Home Administration in record numbers because they cannot get financing elsewhere.

Prices received by farmers have fallen 15 percent since 1977, while prices paid by farmers have risen 56 percent during the same period, largely due to high interest rates.

The importance of agriculture and small business in our economy is precisely why the Senate wanted someone with expertise in these areas to fill the next vacancy at the FED.

In conclusion, Mr. President, this appointment and the way in which it was handled is not in the best interests of this country. An appointment to the Federal Reserve Board is far too important to be made without the consent of the Senate.

I, therefore, urge my colleagues to support this resolution and urge the President to withdraw the recess appointment of Miss Seger to the Federal Reserve Board.

I might add, Mr. President, the usual recess appointment process is a situation where the position has to be filled. Not this case. As I said, the appointment was made when we were out of session for a few weeks and the Senate clearly could have acted on the confirmation.

I might add, Mr. President, that under the law, unfortunately, Miss Seger can remain in the present position without any Senate action until the end of next year. If the Senate takes action before next year, then, of course, Miss Seger can be removed from office or serve a full 14-year term—whichever is the will of the Senate. But, on the other hand, if the Senate takes no action because the nomination has not come before the Senate, she will be able to keep the job until the end of the year, clearly an abuse of the appointment process. Mr. President, I think it is a matter of institutional integrity and pride that this body should stand up—we should object.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BAUCUS. I gladly yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I think there are many Members of this body who believe what has been done is illegal and could be challenged in the courts. In other words, what has transpired is a stretching of the recess appointment power beyond constitutionally permissible limits; that what the President has done is not only a flaunting of the spirit of the confirmation authority but also a flaunting of the actual text of the confirmation authority. I do not concede that the Seger appointment comes under the recess authority. Therefore, I think it is susceptible to challenge in the courts. That is only a further point to the very excellent case which the Senator has made; in my view what the administration has done in this instance is really contemptuous of the Senate.

I hope to speak at somewhat greater length on that point a little further on in the debate. But there was a very close vote in the committee—as the Senator pointed out, 10 to 8—that committee vote took place just before the recess. It was reasonable to assume that this appointment would be a matter to be considered by the Senate during this current period following our return from the recess but instead the President moved on this and a number of other appointments in effect to circumvent the confirmation authority of the Senate.

I submit that every Member of this body, all 100, should be concerned about this circumvention. This is a game that can be played by any President with either party. Senators ought to stop and think long and hard about what is taking place and perceive the merits of the proposed amendment which the distinguished Senator from Montana has pending at the desk. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. RIEGLE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAUCUS. The Senator from Maryland has spent a lot of time researching this very question. I personally thank the Senator from Maryland for all of his efforts.

I totally agree with the Senator. The appointment of Dr. Seger, in my judgment, is clearly an abuse of the appointment process. I think any Senator who spends time looking at it will agree that this body should not agree to this procedure.

I thank the Senator from Maryland.

Yes, I will be glad to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Montana has put the facts forward in a very clear way. As he indicated, this is a 14-year term, although the recess appointment, as the Senator indicates, does not necessarily run for the entire 14 years. The fact that it is a 14-year term and for such a powerful position on the Federal Reserve Board suggests that that is precisely the kind of appointment the Senate as a whole should be taking a careful look at, especially when there is such a closely divided vote in the committee. Were this an appointment to fill out a term of perhaps a few months or 1 year or for even 2 years and perhaps to a position that was less critical to the overall economic future of the country, then you might begin to be able to make a case for some kind of an interim action—perhaps the Senate making a greater allowance in a given case. But where we are talking about something as important as a Federal Reserve Board appointment, it seems to me we ought to be handling those today with the same care that we handle appointments to the Joint Chiefs of Staff because we are looking at the strategic economic future of the country.

I notice the Senator from Montana indicated that many farmers were having difficulty getting applications processed by the Farmers Home Administration. While this is a separate point to the main argument of the Senator from Montana, did I not read the other day in the paper where the business partner of the Secretary of Agriculture was seeking an emergency loan to the extent of something like $400,000 and somehow or another that particular farmers home loan application was processed with record speed; he got the money, and it has apparently helped stave off some kind of imminent disaster? It sounds to me that not only do we have an emergency condition facing farmers but we are seeing an unequal application of the law in terms of those farmers who are trying to stay afloat and where someone so connected—in fact a Cabinet officer—is benefited in a direct way. It seems to me that it goes right back to the question of the action that the Senate took some time ago when we made it clear that because of the pile up of difficulty in the agricultural sector, we wanted somebody on the Federal Reserve Board at this time who comes either from agriculture or from small business who can relate to the board the problems that people in business are facing with these record high interest rates. It is frustrating in the extreme when we see the administration not only ignore that mandate of the Senate which we passed on a bipartisan basis, but then when their own people get into trouble, with the difficulty of not being able to get farm loans, they get special treatment.

So we find ourselves with an intolerable situation with respect to farmers generally in this country. I may speak a little later on this subject, but I thank the Senator from Montana for focusing on these issues.

Mr. BAUCUS. I thank the Senator from Michigan. He is absolutely correct. We are getting a triple whammy here.

First of all, there is an abuse of the appointive process that is clearly blatant.

Second, it appears that someone is being appointed who has virtually no understanding of and is not sensitive to the plight that affects small businessmen, farmers, and ranchers—those businessmen who are very vulnerable to high interest rates.

The third point is that it appears that this administration is giving unequal treatment to various people. There are some favored few, and the rest of us are not favored.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAUCUS. I am glad to yield to the senior Senator from Montana.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I commend my colleague for offering this amendment. I think it is particularly noteworthy at a time when agriculture and small business are impacted very seriously by the fiscal policies that we find ourselves in, by the high interest rates, and monetary policy over which the Federal Reserve Board has some control. Our monetary policy and high interest rates impact trade, and that is extremely damaging to agriculture and small business.

The amendment offered by my colleague is commendable. Dr. Seger, unfortunately, lacks the qualities and the expertise to be of constructive assistance on the Federal Reserve Board in regard to monetary policy that would be beneficial for small business and agriculture, in terms of interest rates and in the effect that all these decisions by the Federal Reserve Board have on our balance of trade.

In conclusion, I just want to commend my colleague again, and I thank him for his leadership in this amendment.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. BAUCUS. I am glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I support the distinguished Senator from Montana in this amendment.

I do not think the farmers' plight is any different in one place than in another.

I heard the statement recently that the philosophy of this administration is that the bigger they are, the softer they fall. It reminds me of the Continental Bank: "Come unto me all you banks that are weak and laden with bad paper, and we will bail you out."

What do they do for the farmer? The farmer is trying to reorganize his debt. He has to take his banker with him and file his reorganization with a group of people who have been cut back in number, to the point where a farmer who needs help is delayed even further.

Then, when they go with their banker and their reorganization request, fulfilling that, they leave and are on their way back home, and the Federal Land Bank, or whatever it might be, goes to court before the farmer even gets home, to force him into bankruptcy.

We see this, and there is no help at all unless you know somebody high up, and then you get a $400,000 loan for 13 farms in a record time.

I see my small people, my small farmer, going down the drain day after day and cutting back on employees, which hurts the farmer; and the Secretary of Agriculture says, "We have done all we are going to do for the farmers. They are on their own."

So I hope that the President will hear our plea and that he will come forward with an individual who is knowledgeable in this field, to help us support the agricultural community, to help those farmers who are in trouble basically over interest rates. I hope that the Senator's amendment is overwhelmingly agreed to and that we can get bipartisan support.

Mr. BAUCUS. I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

One final point: It is no idle statement that I and others make that farmers, ranchers, and small businessmen are in a slightly different plight from that of other economic interests.

Several years ago, I was in a room with various Senators and Chairman Paul Volcker. I said to Chairman Volcker: "I'm not sure that you and the Federal Reserve Board fully understand the degree to which tight monetary policy adversely affects farmers, ranchers, and small businessmen, compared with big, multinational corporations."

The point is that the big multinational corporations can buy and sell currencies in markets around the world. They have all kinds of ways to handle these high interest rates. Farmers, ranchers, and small businessmen do not have those means available to them. They are stuck. They have to pay those rates. They have to borrow in order to buy their tractor and their combine. Small businessmen have to borrow to meet a payroll. They do not have the resources that the larger banks and larger multinational corporations have.

I asked Mr. Volcker if he fully understood that, and I must say, Mr. President, that I got virtually a nonanswer. I got a bunch of words. I responded by saying, "Mr. Chairman, I don't know if you fully understand the point of my question. I don't mean to be disrespectful, but do you understand the difference?" Again, I got a bunch of words.

So it is critically important that various segments of the American economy be represented on the Fed. I submit that they are not. There is not the across-the-board representation on the Fed that there should be.

I particularly call on Members on the other side of the aisle to put partisanship aside, in a spirit of bipartisanship, in a spirit of togetherness, to do what is right, and that is to bring her nomination up for a vote, if that is what should happen, and, second, let us get better representation on the Fed.

I am sure various Senators here can talk to the President and get someone else appointed who represents farmers, ranchers, and small businessmen and their point of view. I strongly urge my colleagues to support the resolution to tell the President to withdraw the nomination and put better representation on the Board.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I suppose it is the duty of the chairman of the Banking Committee to come out several times a year and defend against a resolution to do something about the Fed. It used to be once or twice a year. Now we have had one yesterday and one today. It comes from both sides of the aisle. It is not a partisan situation.

We have had it from this side and that side, because it is so pleasant to obscure the impact of billions of dollars of deficit and the impact of fiscal policy on interest rates, and that is Congress. So it is nice to have the Federal Reserve be around to whip. We say: "If we just change the Fed; if we just put a farmer, a merchant, or a candlestick maker on the Fed, suddenly we would have peace and tranquility, deficits would go away, interest rates would come down, and that would solve it."

So it comes up, and it will again, because it is so nice to find a scapegoat for the problems created by Congress. I would venture to say that if I had the power to make the Senator from Montana the Chairman of the Fed tomorrow and he would be there a couple of weeks, he would say, "My goodness, what do I do with Congress down there with $200 billion deficits," and find out that when you have that kind of a deficit you have to fund it one way or another, either print it or borrow it. You have to monetize that debt. And we place incredible pressure on the Federal Reserve Board.

I look at the statement here, and I do not know—maybe I should just get a recording and we can plug it in here every time one of these come up, whichever side of the aisle it comes.

I agree with the first resolve, high interest rates are devastating American farmers and small businesses and everyone else.

Second, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve system sets monetary policy which dramatically affects interest rates.

Senator PROXMIRE, the former distinguished chairman of the Banking Committee, before Paul Volcker's reconfirmation hearing, said to him, he said: "You poor devil. If you increase the money supply, the interest rates will go up; if you decrease the money supply, the interest rates will go up."

I think that pretty well sums it up. The Fed has impact on short-term rates, but very little on long-term rates.

So eventually as long as we are placing the pressure on the Fed as we are, I think Senator PROXMIRE was absolutely correct—interest rates are going to go up regardless of what the Fed does.

The Senator also points out on June 29, 1984, the Senate Banking Committee reported her nomination by a vote of 10 to 8.

That is a correct fact. However, I would just point out that it was a party line vote; 10 Republicans voted for and 8 Democrats voted against. I would say that that indicated some sort of partisanship in the matter of this appointment.

Resolve 8 says this intrasession appointment intentionally circumvents the advice and consent process prescribed by the Constitution.

I point out to the Senator that there have been three previous recess appointments to the Board, the distinction being this was an intrasession appointment. The Senator was correct. Those were sine die adjournment.

But I point out that two out of three of them, one Marriner Eccles, the former distinguished Chairman of the Fed for 12 years under the Roosevelt administration, Congress adjourned on June 18, 1934. The recess appointment occurred on November 10. The Senate reconvened on January 3. There had been no nomination, no indication to the Senate before that this would be submitted. The nomination was submitted on January 10, 2 months later. So it was close.

So I cannot figure out what President Roosevelt was thinking. Why that time, and certainly we did not have an open market committee, that with Congress convening in just 6 weeks from that time, he felt it necessary to make a recess appointment?

Interestingly enough, the Senate did not even consider this nomination and confirm him until April 24.

The last one, John Sheehan, was an adjournment appointment in the 92d Congress, December 17, 1971, a recess appointment made on December 23; 6 days later Congress reconvened on January 4, again with no prenotification whatsoever.

In this case to say that deliberately circumvents, the President sent up a notice of that appointment.

The Senator points out that 4 days of hearings were held. They were. I granted the committee all courtesy to extend those hearings as long as they wanted to, and I sat in those hearings, every minute of them, for 4 days. I told Senator RIEGLE and Senator SARBANES whatever time they wanted they could have. At the conclusion of those hearings, they asked time to file minority reports, even though I would like to have had it before the Senate and it was my intention to have it before the Senate before that recess.

In extending the courtesy to the minority, I granted them all the time they wanted on the hearings and told them to take what time was necessary to file their minority views, which they did.

The appointment was reported to the Senate on July 17. I asked the majority leader if that could be brought up for a vote of the Senate the first week we were back. He has been unable to do so during this 3-week period because of Democratic holds on the nomination.

So whatever people feel about the nomination and qualifications, to talk about the President intentionally circumventing the advice and consent when he did send the nomination up, hearings were held, it was reported out of the committee, courtesy was given to the minority, and I think my friends would have to agree with that, that I made no attempt to push them, but gave them any time they wanted, that extended until the recess. That is fine, and I do not know who puts holds on, but the only reason that has not been taken up before this body is because of a Democratic hold.

I am willing if we could go to an executive session right now to hold a vote, if Senators are willing to. If the minority leader can clear it, we could go to an executive session tonight and hold a vote, so it is not the President that is circumventing the advice and consent. It has been a desire to delay that appointment on the minority side, which is entirely in their right.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. GARN. I will not yield until I finish my statement. I sat here patiently listening to all those who disagreed and said no word until they got through. So I wish the same courtesy extended to me.

Mr. SARBANES. The Senator is certainly entitled to that courtesy.

Mr. GARN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SARBANES. I hope the Senator would stay after he finishes so we might direct some questions to him.

Mr. GARN. I have no intention of going any place until the Senate adjourns this evening. I would like to, but I will stay as long as we are in session.

But I think that whatever arguments there are as far as her qualifications, the Senator has a right to do that, but to bring up smokescreens about who is delaying the process, I think the record is rather clear on who has delayed that process.

I would also say in No. 11, farmers, small businesses, and consumers continue to be at the mercy of high interest rates and Federal Reserve monetary policy, I would agree with that statement if we change it to farmers, small business, and consumers continue to be at the mercy of high interest rates and congressional irresponsibility on fiscal policy.

I just get rather tired of trying to find a scapegoat on this, but I know it will not end. It will not be just from the Democratic side. One of these nights I will be out here with one of my Members on my side standing up and trying to shift the responsibility to the Fed and whoever is there for all of these problems.

Again, I think it is important to point out why she has not faced confirmation before this Senate and the reason it was important for the President to appoint Ms. Seger to the Board before Senate confirmation is that the Fed Open Market Committee meets in early July, did meet in early July to confirm money growth for the remainder of this year, and set initial targets for the upcoming year. It was a particularly important Fed Open Market Committee meeting. The President had good reason to want a full Board to vote on those targets, and considering that Governor Teeters had already left the Board.

I do have this letter from Chairman Volcker talking about the three recess appointments, and again the distinction is there to make, that it was during sine die adjournments, but I think the dates of those two appointments of President Nixon and President Roosevelt are rather interesting, and we could question why they made those with Congress going to reconvene in such a short period of time.

I also comment that Dr. Seger was subjected to unusual hearings, not that I thought they should not be that way. I think we should subject all witnesses to that. When it was talked about the extent of these hearings, too many of them we have glossed over.

Comments were made about a 14-year appointment should not be made during a Presidential election year.

I did not hear that argument up with President Carter's last nominee in the spring of 1980 who was also appointed for a 14-year term.

If we are going to have a standard, it should apply to everyone.

We also had a nominee who was appointed under President Carter who had only about three pages of questions. The hearings lasted less than a half-hour. He had very similar qualifications to Dr. Seger, very similar background. He was not subjected to the same intensity, and I do not criticize the intensity of questioning. I think we should have those kind of hearings for these type of nominations on everyone, regardless of which President appoints them, and we treat witnesses the same regardless of which side of the aisle they come from or which President chooses to nominate them.

But again I think the issue here should be one of why do we not vote on her nomination. Why do we not do it tonight?

I wanted to for the last 3 weeks but have not been able to clear that.

We could solve the problem of a recess appointment very quickly by just having an up-or-down vote on the issue.

I do not intend to prolong the debate any further. I would suggest that that be held until such time as we are able to clear the Executive Calendar and have her nomination, and then we can have whatever debate on her merits or demerits for this job that we want to.

I do not think now is the time or place to extend that debate, but I would be happy at this time to yield the floor and respond to a question from my distinguished colleague and member of the Banking Committee from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I first want to say to the chairman of the Banking Committee that I think it is very important to separate out certain aspects of this debate. I first want to stipulate that I think the chairman was eminently fair in his conduct of the hearings with respect to the Seger nomination. There were 4 days, extended days, of hearings. I think those were important. The hearing record is available to Members to examine and the chairman permitted that scrutiny to take place. He did not try to cut that short. I think that has generally been the way in which he has conducted the committee and, as a member of that committee, I want to put that observation right up front.

Now, the chairman made reference to the fact that there were holds on this nomination. I do not know for a fact whether that is the case. But even if it is the case, the recess appointment was made by the President before this nomination ever appeared on the Executive Calendar of the U.S. Senate.

One listening to the chairman a few minutes ago would have thought, from the way it was put, that the President was driven to make the recess appointment because it was being held here in the Senate and there was a refusal on the part of Members of the Senate to address that nomination. Now that is not the case.

This matter was dealt with in the committee—in the committee—the Thursday just before the recess. This nomination never made it to the Executive Calendar until into that recess and the President's recess appointment was made on the Monday after that Thursday when the committee acted. Now I think it is legitimate to call that a circumvention of the confirmation authority of the Senate.

And I am surprised to hear the chairman of the committee—who was eminently fair in giving us the hearing and in treating the matter—stand on the floor of the Senate tonight and defend that conduct. The chairman, more than any Member of this body, all 100, ought to have a strong sense of the nature of the responsibility and the relationship between the Congress and the President.

I have a great deal of respect for my colleague. I must tell him I am surprised to find him here on the floor trying to defend the Presidential conduct. I assume, knowing the chairman, that he did not counsel or advise the White House or the President or those around him to move to make this recess appointment. I hope I will not be disappointed in that assumption.

Mr. GARN. No, I had nothing to do with the recess appointment. But if the Senator would yield so that I could respond to his comment.

Mr. SARBANES. Certainly.

Mr. GARN. I have no trouble defending the recess appointment on the basis that I stated. All of us are concerned about what the monetary policy will be, regardless of how much we may differ on the impact that has on interest rates compared to fiscal policy.

However, there has not been a more important meeting of the Federal Open Market Committee that I know of than the one that would occur in July.

The President made that recess appointment. If the Senator would follow what I said, I indicated that I gave the committee an opportunity to come up with their minority views, as much time as was necessary. It was obvious that it would not be possible then to consider the nomination before we recessed unless there was a waiver. I did not indicate there was any stall on the part of the minority in the Banking Committee prior to the recess. It is within their rights to ask for minority views, which I granted.

It was reported on July 17, which was while we were in recess. The President felt it was important that he have a full board for a meeting of the Federal Open Market Committee that would determine the targets for the rest of this year and tentative targets for 1985.

The only delay that I am aware of, as I stated before, so that the Senator understands exactly what I said, was I inquired of the majority leader if we could bring this up the first week we were back or as soon as possible so that the confirmation process could continue, and all I have been told was there was a Democratic hold. I have no idea who that is and I have not sought to find out. It was simply there was a Democratic hold on bringing it up.

So I have tried. All I am saying is that since we returned from the recess, I have attempted to get that nomination cleared so we could consider it on the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. When was this nomination reported from the Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee to the U.S. Senate?

Mr. GARN. July 17.

Mr. SARBANES. When did the President of the United States make the recess appointment of Miss Seger?

Mr. GARN. I believe it was July 2. I am not certain of that, but it was during that week of the Fourth of July.

Mr. SARBANES. Is it correct that the committee held 4 days of hearings with respect to this nomination?

Mr. GARN. That is correct; 4 full days, morning and afternoon for 4 days.

Mr. SARBANES. Those hearings were on what dates?

Mr. GARN. June 19, 20, 21, and 22.

Mr. SARBANES. When did the committee act? The following week?

Mr. GARN. The committee acted the Thursday of the following week.

Mr. SARBANES. June 28?

Mr. GARN. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. In other words, we acted in the committee a week after the hearings concluded?

Mr. GARN. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. And then immediately upon the Senate leaving for the recess, the President made a recess appointment?

Mr. GARN. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. Does the chairman support that kind of conduct?

Mr. GARN. Well, I say to my distinguished colleague from Maryland, I can answer for the third time, the fourth or fifth. I will say it once more. I attribute no delay to anyone prior to the recess. But it was obvious to me, it was obviously obvious to the administration, that we would not return until whatever date we returned, July 23, and he did want a full board for those FOMC meetings. And I agree that had Nancy Teeters still been there, then I would have not have thought a recess appointment was wise or necessary. But she had left the board. There was a vacancy. And the decisions of FOMC for the next 6 months, I think, were rather important.

So, yes, I have no difficulty at all, considering that they had knowledge that it had passed the Senate Banking Committee, it would be on the Senate Calendar, and they did request that, as soon as we returned, I attempt to bring that nomination before the floor of the Senate and I have attempted to do that.

Mr. SARBANES. Well, I just want to get the chairman on the record. Obviously, what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

Mr. GARN. Does the Senator want me to record the fourth time in saying that with the FOMC meeting, I support what the President did? No. 4; I will do it again. I am on the record.

Mr. SARBANES. I think it is important to get a chairman of a committee, who has responsibility for a nomination, in effect, giving away the authority of his committee to the President to make an intrasession recess appointment of the nature that was done here.

Now the chairman cited three previous instances in which recess appointments have been made to the Federal Reserve Board. I take it the chairman agrees with me that the Federal Reserve Board is an extremely important governmental agency.

Mr. GARN. Yes; I do. I would also comment that I have given away no authority. That recess appointment can be as brief as until we vote on it. It is on the calendar. I am willing to vote on her nomination tonight, which removes the recess appointment. I am giving up nothing for the Banking Committee, nothing for the chairman. It is an appointment that only lasts until the end of this Congress, which is October 4, if we do not come back, or it could be tonight. It is up to this Senate to decide if it is shortened from the end of this session.

Mr. SARBANES. Well, the chairman has already said he is prepared to see the President use the recess appointments in order to get someone on a board to make the decisions, in this instance, at the Federal Open Market Committee meetings, even if there is the prospect that shortly thereafter, the person is going to be rejected by the Senate.

Now that raises interesting possibilities in terms of maneuvering. That raises the possibility of using the recess appointment to put someone on a board at a time when important decisions are going to be made and then you do not really care what happens to them thereafter. You have gotten your use of them.

Now the three instances which the Senator cited of recess appointments to the Federal Reserve Board, were they not all at the end of a session and an adjournment sine die over?

Mr. GARN. Senator, I am a little bit puzzled by the number of times that I have to repeat, unless the Senator was not listening. I made the distinction in my own remarks three times. That was the distinction between this recess appointment and those. They were during the sine die adjournment. I am on the record again. I am willing to put it in writing if the Senator wants me to. I do not understand that we have to be so repetitive when I am not known for being unclear in the statements that I make.

The other distinction I make was the timing of those appointments under both President Nixon and President Roosevelt. And I cannot second-guess them 50 years later—why President Roosevelt found it necessary 3 weeks before the Congress was going to adjourn without having any hearings or anything to appoint them. I just make that distinction. Yes. They were during sine die adjournment. They were very close with a vote of 2 out of 3 to the reconvening of a Congress.

Mr. SARBANES. Why did the committee have all of these hearings that go so carefully into Dr. Seger if we were going to have a recess nomination and place her on the Federal Reserve Board in order to make these important open-market decisions? Why do we go through that exercise in the committee?

Mr. GARN. Senator, the committee did not go through an exercise. The committee went through some important hearings where detailed questions were asked for better than in most hearings that held by most committees—and much more extensively to supply background information to this body, and the whole Senate of the United States in which to make a decision on whether they wish to vote yea or nay on her confirmation. That opportunity is still available. Nothing has been given up. If we do not act, her nomination will have to be resubmitted in January. It is only to the end of this term. Again, I repeat for the third or fourth time, the Senate can act on that nomination anytime it is ready to do so, and decide whether they accept or reject her nomination by the President of the United States.

Mr. SARBANES. Is it the chairman's position that it really does not matter to the Senate whether they consider nominees before they actually assume—Ms. Seger has been sworn in, has she not?

Mr. GARN. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. When was she sworn in?

Mr. GARN. I do not know the exact date she was sworn in.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I have an article from the Congressional Quarterly which states—this is after reporting the vote in the committee 10 to 8—

> The next day, the full Senate adjourned for a 3-week recess before voting on the Seger appointment. The following Monday, President Reagan unilaterally placed Seger on the Federal Reserve Board by using his constitutional authority to make recess appointments and require no Senate action. Volcker swore her in to office later that same day.

The thing that concerns me—I understand the position of the chairman, at least up to a point. But it seems to be that the chairman in this instance ought to be more of a Senate person, and less of the President's partisan in this matter because it seems to me we are dealing with important institutional powers here.

Mr. GARN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SARBANES. Certainly.

Mr. GARN. I have not interjected partisanship in this other than to make one comment about a 10-to-8 vote which was a factual comment—10 Republicans and 8 Democrats. That is the only partisanship. I have talked about these resolutions coming from both sides. The Senator resents the comment just made by the Senator from Maryland deeply. The way I operate that committee with the fairness I have for the last 4 years regardless of how we feel, I resent being accused of I should be more of a Senate man than the President's man. I have treated nominations equally. I did when President Carter sent them up with Lyle Gramley, and I am not going to go back into all of that debate. I can be accused of a lot of things, but not blind partisanship. I would suggest we stick to the merits, and not try to characterize what you may think I am or am not.

Mr. SARBANES. It seems to me that the chairman in this instance ought to recognize that there is a difference between asking the Senate to address a nomination with respect to whether or not it should be confirmed before the nominee has been placed in the position, sworn into office, and exercising the authority of the office and asking the Senate to address a nomination after that has transpired.

Mr. GARN. That was all right when President Roosevelt and President Nixon did it. It is only President Reagan that should not do that with his constitutional authority. As the Senator just stated, it was his constitutional authority to do so.

Mr. SARBANES. The Senator himself made a very important distinction between those actions by President Roosevelt and President Nixon and the current action. I pointed to it earlier. The Senator got very upset because he said he was being asked to repeat, and be redundant. The reason I pointed to it was I think it is a very important distinction, and the Senator in the course of being exercised about it himself said that when he made the statement earlier he had made the important distinction that those recess appointments came after the Congress has adjourned sine die. That is not the case here. This is an intrasession appointment for a recess that lasted 3 weeks.

Mr. GARN. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. SARBANES. Surely.

Mr. GARN. I stated in my remarks on two different occasions that I responded to the Senator so it is clear that it is on the record; that the Senator from Maryland has ignored the other distinction. You are talking about a 3-week period. That is why I pointed out the dates. Why was it necessary for those two Presidents with the Congress convening in just a matter of weeks, in one case a recess appointment of December 23 with the Senate reconvening on January 18, just about the same length of period we were out. So the distinction is correct. But do not ignore one and not the other. I was direct enough to point out before I was even asked that distinction. The Senator from Maryland conveniently ignores the timing or making a distinction between intrasession and sine die adjournment. But the time periods are very close. I do not know why he felt he had to make a recess appointment 3 weeks before the Congress convened. I do not know why President Roosevelt felt he could not wait a month for Marriner Eccles.

Mr. SARBANES. Did the chairman see no important distinction between a recess appointment intrasession and a recess appointment after adjourning sine die?

Mr. GARN. I already pointed out the distinction. Does not the Senator from Maryland see a distinction in timing? What is the difference between 3 weeks here? Answer my question, please, Senator.

Mr. SARBANES. The timing was longer, was it not?

Mr. GARN. Oh, yes.

Mr. SARBANES. What was the Roosevelt timing on the Eccles appointment?

Mr. GARN. The Roosevelt timing on the Eccles appointment was about 7 weeks.

Mr. SARBANES. What were the dates? The Senator has them and unfortunately I do not.

Mr. GARN. The recess appointment was November 15, 1934. The Congress reconvened on January 10. We are arguing about 7 weeks versus 3½ and 4½ weeks versus 3½. Make the debate on the floor for a week or so one way or another.

Mr. SARBANES. That is right. I am trying to find out how far the chairman is prepared to carry this recess appointment authority, and at what point he would draw a line and say this is going too far. Is the chairman prepared to give it all away?

Mr. GARN. The chairman has stated over and over again, and please report this so we make sure it is on the record. The Senator supported a brief recess appointment, which I had hoped would last about 3 weeks. The chairman has attempted for 3 weeks to get this nomination before the Senate so that the recess appointment ends one way or another. The Senator from Utah has not been able to do that because of the hold from the Democratic side which is certainly the right of the minority to place holds on the nominations, as it is the right of our side to do so.

Mr. SARBANES. Once the recess appointment has been made by the President, all bets are off. I do not know who has those holds on them, but I have no quarrel with that. The recess appointment was made by the President like that, as soon as the Senate left. The chairman is saying that is OK; a 10-to-8 vote in my committee; we had a good set of hearings thanks in large part to the chairman. The committee considered it the next week—pretty orderly procedure with a 10-to-8 vote on the 28th of June, and was reported to the Senate on the 17th of July, but on the 2d of July, on the Monday right after the Thursday when the committee acted, the President moves to make his recess appointment. The chairman says, "Well, that is all right by me." We need a recess appointment. We have this meeting coming up. I want this person there in order to pass on the matter at the meeting, and the Senate can take this up later after it comes back from the recess.

Surely, the Senator does not think that the nomination is in the same posture. We are now considering an appointment in which the person has been sworn in, assumed the oath of office, exercised some responsibilities, as compared with an instance in which the appointment is pending on the calendar and the nominee has not yet taken office. Why do we have these various appointments pending on the calendar? Why not get them out of here and let the President make these recess appointments and then confront the problem? Are we going to pull them back or simply leave them there? This appointment is there. Sworn in, exercising all the powers of the office, and the Senate has never passed on the confirmation of this nominee. Now we are told it does not really matter, that we can do it one way or we can do it the other way; either we put it on the calendar and they do not take the office until we consider their confirmation, or it is not even on the calendar and the recess appointment is made. You could even have made the appointment without the committee ever acting. I assume if that had been done, the chairman would have been exercised about it. Suppose that had happened?

Suppose the President had made this recess appointment while the nomination was still pending in the committee? Would the chairman have been exercised about that? Or would he have said, "Well, we have this nomination up here, and we have not really finished our hearings yet or quite gotten to them."

Suppose you had somebody on whom you did not have the clearances yet go in for a recess appointment? It is particularly important in this instance because this is a very important position. This person does not serve at pleasure. Members of the Senate are confronted with a very different reality if the person is in office as opposed to their never having taken office. It seems to me that, as chairman of the responsible committee, there ought to be some concern for, in effect, short-circuiting the confirmation process. This matter could have been taken up after we came back, before Seger ever held the office. If there had then been delay, the Senator might have had some arguments to make on that. We can argue about that, that delay is a normal part of the Senate process. It has been used over the years by all Members of the Senate. But that is a different case.

The Senator now is complaining about delay after the recess appointment was made. The onus here rests on the President for moving as soon as the Congress left town, putting this person on the Federal Reserve Board without her ever been confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

There are a lot of other problems involved in this nomination. This Senate has gone on record calling for the next nominee to the Federal Reserve Board to be a person of demonstrable experience in small business or agriculture. Miss Seger does not even begin to approach either of those requirements.

In fact, the Senate has repeatedly urged the President to respect the requirement of the Federal Reserve Act that there would be due regard for the fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial, and commercial and geographic divisions of the country.

On May 15, 1980, the Senate passed a resolution in that regard, and it is the stated position of this body, taken by actual vote, that the professional background of members of the Federal Reserve Board shall be broad and include members with direct personal experience with and sympathy for the problems of those economic activities, particularly agriculture and small business, which are most dependent on credit financing.

In March 1984, in other words, at the beginning of this year, some 3 months before the committee acted on this nomination, the Senate specifically requested that the President name to the next vacancy on the Federal Reserve Board a person of demonstrable experience in small business or agriculture. That resolution passed the Senate by a vote of 50 to 37.

I must say to the chairman's credit he has insisted on this geographical requirement contained in the Federal Reserve Act, but beyond that, the Senate, by a very stong majority, called for the next vacancy on that board to be filled by someone from small business or agriculture.

That was not done in this instance. That was clearly not done in this instance. Half of the Members of the Senate supported that resolution on small business and agriculture, and had they struck to their positions as experienced in the resolution, this nominee would not have been confirmed. Presented with the nomination would they have stuck with their previously recorded position on the importance of small business or agriculture, or would they, in effect, have allowed that position to go by the board, abandoned it, and confirmed this nominee?

We do not know. We did not get a chance to deal with this nomination in that context.

Now what has been added is the additional fact that this nominee got this recess appointment, was placed on the Board, was sworn in the very day the recess appointment was provided, and has been exercising the authorities of the office.

I think that is a circumvention of the Senate confirmation power.

I think the Senator from Montana is absolutely right in stating in his resolution that this intrasession appointment intentionally circumvents the advice and consent process prescribed by the Constitution. This is one of the reasons I have engaged at such length in this colloquy with the committee chairman, because if you accept this sort of thing you are just opening the door to all sorts of schemes and strategems. Taken at its worst, the assumption of someone who will be defeated, but you give them a recess appointment and get them in there long enough to cast a vote in some important decisionmaking case that is coming along and subsequent to that they get knocked out by the Senate.

I submit to you it is more difficult to take them off the Board once they have been put in, even by a recess appointment, than it is to deal with a nomination head-on on its merits before that has ever transpired, and I think the President was moving to do just that.

I am concerned by the comments I have heard here that, in effect, seem to sanction that conduct.

I know the chairman is in a difficult position. The administration has acted. They are looking to him to defend this action. But it seems to me that he should have been far more gentle in doing so because I submit to him that he is setting a very bad precedent for the future.

Mr. HATFIELD. Will the Senator yield without losing his right to the floor?

Mr. SARBANES. Certainly.

Mr. HATFIELD. I should like to make an inquiry, since I have had a number of our colleagues ask me about the timing of when they could expect to bring up their amendments. Can the Senator from Maryland indicate some idea of the time that he will require to complete his statement? We have 12 amendments that are to be offered yet sometime this evening. I am merely asking for this information to try to get some kind of estimate so that I can convey to our colleagues what they might expect.

Mr. SARBANES. I understand the chairman's situation. It is not my intention to go on indefinitely, but it is my intention to try to get some things into this RECORD about this appointment. I feel very strongly that what was done was an outrage to the U.S. Senate in this instance.

Mr. HATFIELD. I am not trying in any way to circumscribe the Senator's rights to do that.

Mr. GARN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SARBANES. Surely, Mr. President.

Mr. GARN. When I came on the floor, I intended to take minimum time, and did—less than 5 minutes—in opposition to this resolution. I stated that we would have plenty of time to debate. I do not want to prolong this. I assume that eventually, we shall be allowed to vote on the nomination.

As a matter of fact, I make the offer again: We can clear it, go into executive session and vote up or down on her nomination. I am sure that will not be agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I think that is moot now. The President gave her a recess appointment, they swore her into office. Unless this body shows more concern about its role as an institution, that is going to be just a pro forma action. As I indicated to the chairman before, I am distressed by his own indication of not feeling a strong sense of institutional concern about what has just been done here.

Mr. GARN. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SARBANES. Surely, Mr. President.

Mr. GARN. The point I was trying to make is that we can debate this tonight. The Senator can make his points. That will force me to get into the whole record of the hearings and we could go on for a long, long time. I am sure that is what will take place. I felt I would make my statement briefly and we could vote up or down or on a tabling motion on this when the confirmation comes up.

I simply cannot agree with the Senator on the line he is pursuing and the position he is trying to paint me in. It is one thing to debate the merits of whether the nominee is qualified or not. I cannot believe this line of direction and the aspersions that the Senator tries to cast on me about the institution while praising me for my fairness.

I understand the tactic. I use it myself often. You praise them before you condemn them so you kind of soften it and it kind of averages out in the middle.

The point here is that debating the merits is one thing when the nomination is up. To say that this is some subversion, after we all recognize that Presidents have the constitutional right to make a recess appointment—whether it be for the Fed or anything else, they can do that—and to say that I am setting a precedent when this was for a brief period of time, was asked by the administration and it was their intention that it only be brief and that we consider it as rapidly as possible. So whoever is prolonging this on the Senator's side, I do not know, but they are preventing consideration, the advise and consent process, by someone on the Senator's side of the aisle. I am prepared to debate on that issue, whether the nominee is qualified or not, when that is brought up. But on a supplemental appropriation bill, on which I could make a point of order that would be sustained by the Chair on germaneness, to take the time of the Senate to go into all of this tonight, and also to indicate that it is already done—I do not think that changes anybody's mind on whether she stays or not, because if we do not vote on it, the day we adjourn from this session, her interim appointment, her recess appointment, is over.

What we are talking about is a full 14-year term. The longest we are talking about may be 3 months if we come back in a lameduck session.

This is not over and done with. The chairman has set no precedents. If we reversed the situation and we had a Democratic President and the Senator from Maryland were chairman and a recess appointment was made while he was in Maryland, he cannot reverse it; it is a constitutional authority granted to the President, unless we want to go to a constitutional amendment and take it away from him. All you could do as chairman and all I could do as chairman, what I have been attempting to do for 3 weeks, is get a nomination before this body. I shall be happy to do that anytime I am allowed to and we can have debate on whether she is qualified or not and we can let the Senate speak.

I am certainly willing to end this. The Senator can go on as long as he wants. I simply make a determination that I will not use all this and debate whether she is qualified or not tonight. The Senator can do so if he wants. I shall wait until I am given the opportunity to have her nomination before us for a full 14-year term and I can debate it at that time.

Mr. SARBANES. I say to the Senator that I have not really gotten into the qualifications or, indeed, more accurately the lack of qualifications of Martha Seger to serve on the Federal Reserve Board. That is another——

Mr. GARN. The nomination is not before us. If the Senator wants to do that, that is fine.

Mr. SARBANES. That is another very lengthy subject. And I have not yet, this evening, addressed that issue. I have addressed only the use of the recess appointment authority by the President to circumvent the confirmation authority of the U.S. Senate. I want to say to the chairman of the committee, as sincerely as I can, that had I been the chairman, with the President of my party playing this trick, I would not have taken the floor of the Senate in order to protect it.

It having happened, and the Senator having played that role, I shall have to see in the future if a comparable situation arises.

But this play is not going to work if what is sauce for the goose is not sauce for the gander. It is not going to work if we do not have some respect for basic procedures and how we deal, the Executive with the legislature. It is technically not going to work if certain Members of the legislature, when the Executive misdeals with them, in effect, say, "Well, that is the way it goes."

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just once more?

Mr. SARBANES. We cooperated with the chairman in holding these hearings. We thought they ought to be extended because we did not think this nominee had the qualifications to go on the Federal Reserve Board for a 14-year term, which will last to 1998, 2 years short of the end of the century. In this instance, it is equivalent to a life tenure.

We held those hearings; they were good hearings. In my judgment, they revealed the lack of qualifications of this nominee to go on the Federal Reserve Board. But that could be argued and we would have had a good argument, I assume, on the floor of the Senate about this nomination.

Now, what happened is, with the committee proceeding in the orderly course of business, doing its job—when did this nomination come to the committee?

Mr. GARN. I do not have the date, I say to the Senator. It came before the committee. I worked with the distinguished ranking minority member to establish a date for the hearing. How long it came up before the date of the first hearing, I do not remember.

Mr. SARBANES. It is here in the report. I had not noticed it: June 4. So the hearing began 2 weeks after the nomination was submitted by the President.

Is there any Member of the Senate who regards beginning hearings 2 weeks after a nomination has been submitted as being unnecessary delay? That strikes me as pretty prompt action—pretty prompt action. We cooperated with the chairman in that effort.

Mr. GARN. May I say once again, Mr. President, there has been no indication, directly or indirectly, that there was any delay prior to the recess. I continue to make that point.

Mr. SARBANES. Then the delay occurred after the recess?

Mr. GARN. I do not care what President was there. You can interject partisanship again. I do not care if a Democratic President was there. He would have a constitutional right to make a recess appointment regardless of whether it was a Republican or a Democrat. My response would be exactly the same as it is tonight. The President acted under his constitutional authority and we have a constitutional authority for advice and consent. We still have that before us. This is not a 14-year term; this is a maximum of a 3-month term.

This Senator does say there has been delay since the recess because there has been a hold, from what source I do not know, on bringing that up so we can have the debate the Senator wishes to start tonight, which is not before us. The reconfirmation is not before us.

The reconfirmation is not before us. All I can say, once again, I do not know how many times I have attempted to bring that up for the last 3 weeks and have been unable to do so. So there was no delay before the recess. There has been delay since the recess.

Mr. SARBANES. I cannot believe that the chairman of the committee is telling us that he thinks it is an acceptable course of conduct, when the committee considers a nomination, acts on it in a reasonable period of time, has a very sharp division on whether the nominee ought to be confirmed and then takes a 3-week recess—a 3-week recess particularly in the course of a session—for the President to move during that period to make a recess appointment and then confront the Members of the Senate in considering the appointment with the additional proposition of having to remove this person, who has been sworn into office and has been exercising the responsibilities of the office, from the Board. You cannot consider this nomination now in the same light in which you could have considered it had this recess appointment never been made.

Mr. GARN. Would that not be true of Marriner Eccles or the other three, an exact same situation, recess appointments, regardless of when they occurred? Would the Senate have to confirm them or take them out of office? The distinguished former chairman served for nearly 5 months in that position, longer than it is possible for this nominee to serve. The Senate had an opportunity with any one of those three to do the exact thing. My only argument with the Senator tonight is that I find it difficult to believe his line of argument. If he is arguing against confirmation, certainly I respect those differences of opinion. But when he talks about what is good for the sauce or gander or whoever it was or whatever it is, he is implying a different standard. He is making arguments that now you cannot take them out of office. But apparently that did not apply to Eccles or the others. I keep trying to get disengaged from this so we can move on. I am not going to make a point of order against this. This is not the time or place to debate the nomination. I would seek the help of the Senator in trying to get the nomination before us and then we can debate it. But I simply am now going to retire from this debate because I am a little tired of repeating myself.

Mr. SARBANES. Let me read to the chairman from a legal brief of the American Law Division of the Congressional Research Service:

> The Framers of the Constitution were silent as to the intended scope of the recess appointment clause. A recess for such purposes was initially conceived to be the period after the final adjournment of Congress for the session and before the next session began (23 Opinions of the Attorney General 599, 1901).

Now, all of the instances previously involving the Federal Reserve Board which the chairman of the committee has cited fall into that category.

> However, it has more recently been interpreted to include lengthy adjournments during a session.

And then there are some citations to such adjournments, every one of which cited in this legal memorandum was in excess of the length of the adjournment here involved.

Now, what is happening is that there is an effort to drive that time period down. Pretty soon we are going to have recess appointments made on Thursday evening when we go over to Monday so the appointee can go to a meeting on Friday and cast some important decision and the Senate can thereafter be confronted with the more difficult task, I submit, of pulling the appointee off of the Board on which the appointee has been placed.

I submit that there has been an abuse of the Senate role in the confirmation authority in this instance.

Mr. GARN. Will the Senator yield for one more comment?

Mr. SARBANES. Yes, without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. GARN. I just thank God every night I did not attend law school so I could nitpick with all of the words, and so on.

Mr. SARBANES. I simply say to the Senator on that score we are a nation of laws and a government of laws and not a government of men, and no single person is above either the Constitution or the laws. To some extent that is at stake. I do not want to overdo that issue because we have dealt with that issue in contexts far more serious than this one. But this in effect is the erosion of the institutional arrangements and the allocation of powers provided for by the Constitution.

Now, the chairman may want to put down lawyers. I am not going to quarrel with that. I am a lawyer myself, but I occasionally engage in the same practice.

But I submit to him that what has occurred is a significant erosion of the role of the Senate. I am simply staggered to hear the chairman take the floor and defend it.

Mr. GARN. The Senator from Utah does defend it. I am just staggered that we continue to go on nitpicking over this issue under a constitutional authority granted the President. Why do we not bring up the nomination and the Senator debate his reasons why he does not feel she is qualified for the Board rather than spending an hour and a half nitpicking over 3 weeks and ignoring the time involved with those other appointments whether they were sine die or whether they were a little old recess in July. I just cannot believe it. I have great respect for the Senator from Maryland. He is a valuable member of the committee. There is lots of substance that he can argue against her nomination. But this line that the Senator is surprised at the chairman, well, fine, be surprised at the chairman. I state my position once more. It was legal, it was proper, and the chairman has been attempting to get this nomination before the Senate so that it can operate in its advise-and-consent process—not stalled by the President of the United States, stalled by a Member of this body.

Mr. SARBANES. I simply say to the chairman, the Members of the Senate should have been able to consider this nomination on its merits without the nominee having been sworn into the position for which the confirmation was being sought and not be placed in the position of having to consider this nominee after the nominee has been sworn in.

Mr. GARN. Between the 1934 Congress and 1972 Congress, that standard applies. That standard applies to the other recess appointments, that they should not have been placed in the position of having to vote for somebody already occupying the position. Let us not have a double standard.

Mr. SARBANES. We are not having a double standard.

Mr. GARN. One way or the other. One way or the other.

Mr. SARBANES. There has been no prior instance in which you have an intrasession appointment for this short length of recess.

Mr. GARN. Well, there is the attorney coming out in the Senator, nitpicking over whether it is in or out and ignoring the arguments he does not like about the same amount of time, roughly, although there is a difference of 3 or 4 weeks. Let us argue about her qualifications when the nomination is before us. And again I ask the Senator's help in getting the nomination before this body so we can argue on substance and not nitpick over recess appointments, whether they are in or out of session, and take the time of the Senate when we have important business to do on a supplemental appropriations bill.

Mr. SARBANES. What limit does the chairman think there is on a recess appointment?

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Maryland will yield?

Mr. SARBANES. Sure.

Mr. HATFIELD. Will the Senator update me now as to whether, with these dozen amendments, we might look at the time factor? I would really appreciate a little help on this because we are going to have to stay in session tonight until we complete this bill. We have $700 million for food stamps. I respect the right of the Senator to make a point. But I have been here now for about a half-hour. It sounds like we are getting a lot of repetition in this debate. I must have some cooperation from Members of the Senate to get this bill through.

Mr. SARBANES. I say to the chairman, if the Senator is not going to pursue the exchange, which obviously he is doing, I am prepared to go on and make some other points. I know there are others who want to speak.

Mr. GARN. The Senator from Utah has tried to get out of the exchange for hours so we could vote and move on. But the Senator from Maryland keeps making statements about he is surprised at me.

Mr. SARBANES. I am. I told the chairman that I am surprised at him.

Mr. GARN. I am surprised at the Senator from Maryland, very surprised.

But the Senator from Utah is happy to shorten the debate if the Senator from Maryland will proceed with whatever he wants to do without being so surprised and shocked by the Senator from Utah and I will not have to respond any more.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I think we will all be surprised if we do not move on. I urge the Senator to give us some indication, if he can, because we are getting calls—and most of them, by the way, from Senators on his side of the aisle—asking when Senators can come over to offer their amendments. And for the convenience and courtesy of our colleagues, can we get some kind of commitment from the Senators from Maryland and Montana as to when they might be willing to find their way clear to end this?

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I might say to the Senator from Oregon, as far as I know, besides the Senator from Maryland, there is one other Senator who wishes to speak on this side. I know of no other request. As far as this Senator is concerned, I am willing to go to a vote as soon as those two Senators have completed their statements.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator from Montana. It does help.

Fifteen minutes, an hour?

Mr. SARBANES. Certainly not the latter. Perhaps the former.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SARBANES. I say to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, whose situation I appreciate and understand, I obviously think there is a very important issue involved here. I think the Senate has been abused by the President on this recess appointment. It was not only this one. There were 17 others that were made at the same time. There were a couple made where the nominee had not even been before the committee, so the committee had not had any chance to act on the nomination. I think that is a violation of comity between the two branches in terms of how to deal with confirmations.

It is really a very tempting way to place someone in office and then worry about the confirmation later.

This kind of pattern, if it is allowed to continue, undermines the ability of the Senate to present its case effectively—those who are opposed to the nomination—because we are confronted with a fait accompli.

Actually, in this instance, by the time we act on this, this person will have cast some very important decisions, without her nomination having been confirmed by the Senate of the United States, some very important decisions with respect to monetary policy in this country, a matter of great concern to a wide range of people across the Nation. The farmers and small businessmen continue to be at the mercy of high interest rates and the monetary policy of the Federal Reserve.

This appointment completely violates the Senate resolution which was passed and which called for someone coming from farming or small business. Some of these recess appointments, made by the President, who assumed their authorities, were subsequently rejected; but in the interim they exercised the powers of the office, in my judgment, to the harm of the Nation.

One could go at great length into Miss Seger's lack of qualifications to serve on the Federal Reserve Board. Those are spelled out very carefully in the minority report from the Committee on Banking and Housing with respect to the Seger nomination, which outlines the importance of the Federal Reserve Board in making policy, discusses the lack of qualification of the present nominee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SARBANES. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. It is my understanding that the Federal Reserve is a creature of Congress and was created by Congress in 1913. Is that the understanding of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SARBANES. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SASSER. It is my understanding that the Congress of the United States, in the Federal Reserve Act in 1913, set the terms of the membership on the Federal Reserve Board, and that it is our duty to participate in the selection of members of the Federal Reserve Board, to participate under the advice and consent provisions of the Constitution. I ask the Senator from Maryland, is that not correct?

Mr. SARBANES. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SASSER. The first step of that advice and consent procedure, hearings to be held in the Senate Banking Committee, took place. There were hearings of long duration. I agree with what the Senator said, that the chairman of the Senate Banking Committee exercised fairness and patience during the course of those hearings. But is it the Senator's point here this evening that the executive branch of Government is frustrating the clear intent of the Federal Reserve Act of 1913 in acting here to make a recess appointment 2 or 3 days after Congress went out on a brief recess?

Mr. SARBANES. Absolutely.

As the Senator from Tennessee points out, this is being done with respect to a board of our Government which is supposed to be independent in character and is a creature of Congress. This is not even being done, technically speaking, within the executive department of the Government. That is a very important point, which was made earlier by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. SASSER. I inquire of the Senator from Maryland what would be the rationale of the administration here in acting so precipitately, as if in an effort to frustrate the will of the U.S. Senate in its constitutional duty to give advice and consent on the appointment of this individual to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. SARBANES. The chairman of the committee said that there was an important meeting of the Open Market Committee coming up during the recess period, and the President wanted this nominee present to cast a vote, even though the nomination had not been confirmed by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. SASSER. I ask the Senator from Maryland this question: He will recall that on at least two occasions, this body passed resolutions, one in May 1980 and one in March 1984, clearly indicating that it was the intent of the U.S. Senate that there be due regard to the fair representation of agricultural and commercial interests, that these two sectors be represented on the Federal Reserve Board. Is that not a fact?

Mr. SARBANES. The Senator is correct. The most recent was in March of this year, and that was by a vote of 50 to 37.

Mr. SASSER. I ask the Senator from Maryland this question: Did not the chairman of the Senate Banking Committee support the purposes of that resolution, which indicated that it was the intent of the Senate, by a clear majority, that the next member of the Federal Reserve Board come from the farming community or the small business community?

Mr. SARBANES. I say to the Senator that I am not sure on that point, as to how he actually voted or whether, in fact, he was here to vote; but I know that on occasion he has expressed the view that there be geographical and professional balance on the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. SASSER. My question to the Senator from Maryland is this: Knowing that this resolution had passed the Senate on two occasions, calling for representation of the agricultural sector of our economy and small business sector of our economy on the Federal Reserve Board, and knowing that this question had been raised, as to whether or not this nominee qualified under those resolutions in the Senate Banking Committee; and knowing that the chairman of the committee, on at least one occasion, had supported calling for the appointment of a representative from the agricultural community or the small business community; could it be that the administration was seeking to circumvent debate on this individual's qualifications on the floor of the Senate, as to whether or not she fell within the clear purview of these resolutions that had previously passed, with regard to specifically stating that the next member of the Federal Reserve Board should come from the agricultural sector of our economy or the small business sector of our economy?

Mr. SARBANES. I think the able Senator from Tennessee is putting his finger on a very important point; 50 Members of this body, as recently as March of this year, supported that resolution. It is reasonable to asume that, faced with a nominee who did not meet that requirement, they would stick with the position reflected in the resolution and vote against the nominee.

What they have now done is presented those Members not with that clean decision to make but with an instance in which this nominee has now been put on the Board, has been sworn into office, has already since July 2, a period now of over 1 month, exercised the responsibilities of the office, so Members who supported that resolution and I assume would have stuck to that position when confronted by this nominee, now have it complicated because sticking with that resolution requires them now to take the nominee off the Board after the nominee has been sworn in. Now that is loading the deck. That is what that is, plain and simple. And I think the Senator is right in perceiving that, indeed, it may have been an effort to so tilt the situation that it would make it more difficult to deal with this nominee.

That is why I think the assertions by the chairman of the committee now that he wants to bring this nominee up and really have a debate are to some extent academic. The point to have done that was before the nominee ever took office. Now they have her in office, so you have that additional weight, particularly if Members of this body refuse to recognize the institutional issue that is involved. In other words, if Members of this body are not going to say as Senators each Member, all 100 are not going to say as Senators we are being trifled with here, we are being in effect here dealt with in an unfair way and this recess appointment power is being abused, if they are not going to take that position, then the use of the recess appointment power as it was done in this instance enables the President to put someone in there in order to make it a decision coming up. They are quite open in admitting this and also loads the deck for the Senate when it then has to face the actual confirmation.

That is what is transpiring here.

This candidate is not qualified for this office. Of course, we have not gotten into that part of it yet, and I am prepared really to accept the proposition that that should come up when you are actually considering the nominee. But what has happened here is that we are starting down this path. What has happened now the assertions made by the chairman of the committee are in effect to discard the distinctions as to recess appointments made at the end of a session, adjourning sine die, and also to reduce the length of the recess in the intrasession period to the shortest it has been in any instance yet dealt with.

I think that is a clear erosion of the confirmation authority of the U.S. Senate and I think every Member of the Senate should be concerned about that and should be speaking to it and not defending the action which the President took.

Mr. SASSER. If the Senator will yield just for a question, would it be a fair statement to say that the Senator from Maryland is concerned about the constitutional prerogatives of the U.S. Senate and concerned about the prerogatives of this institution being safeguarded? Is that a fair statement?

Mr. SARBANES. I think the Senate has a role under the Constitution of the United States, and I do not think we should simply sit here and allow the executive to erode that role, to look in the other direction and allow them to play games and put this appointee on the Federal Reserve Board.

We are not talking about some unimportant nomination, although any nomination you are talking about requiring confirmation of the Senate rises to some level of importance in any event, but in this instance, we are talking about the Federal Reserve Board. Those members get 14 years. They deal with one of the most sensitive economic policy areas that we have in the country. Our small business people and farmers are suffering in the opportunity to obtain credit. That is why we passed that resolution and, as the able Senator from Tennessee pointed out, we are dealing with a board that is a creature of Congress not even technically a part of the executive branch. It is not an executive department of the Government. It is not within an executive department of the Government.

So you are not talking about the line people who serve the President in his executive capacity, although even there I would have problems with a similar course of conduct. But here to compound the situation you are talking about an independent agency established by Congress to deal with the question of an independent monetary policy. Proof of that is we give these people a 14-year term.

I think the Senator is absolutely correct in underscoring what is transpiring here.

Mr. President, because I think it should be included in the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that the minority views of the members of the Banking Committee who voted against this nomination be printed in the RECORD here, and particularly I hope Members will address the sections dealing with the recess appointment of the nominee as well as the special importance of the Federal Reserve Board.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINORITY VIEWS OF SENATORS PROXMIRE, RIEGLE, SARBANES, DODD, DIXON, SASSER, AND LAUTENBERG

I. THE SPECIAL IMPORTANCE OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

Congress established the Federal Reserve System in 1913 as an independent agency of government, accountable to Congress under the "money power" granted to Congress in Article I of the Constitution. At that time, Congress recognized, from the troubled history of central banking in the United States, the unique importance and the difficulties of the step it was taking. It was the intent of Congress to design an institution that would meet and consistently uphold the most rigorous standards of professional integrity and competence, and commitment to the public interest.

Consistent with this objective, Congress recognized the special necessity of selecting persons of the highest caliber to serve on the Federal Reserve Board. The Federal Reserve Act accordingly provided for Presidential appointment and Senate confirmation of Board members. It established a long term—14 years—to assure independence of those members from the short-term political interests of the executive branch and from the pecuniary interests of the Federal Reserve System's member banks.

The central role of the Federal Reserve Board has never been more critical than it is today. U.S. and world financial markets are in turmoil. U.S. deficits are taking our Nation into uncharted financial waters. Debt crises in Latin America and elsewhere demand a high order of skill, initiative and dedication if they are to be dealt with effectively. Rapid financial innovation places new and increasingly complex demands on the Federal Reserve's regulatory acumen. Consumers, faced on all sides by new financial institutions, new financial instruments, new investment opportunities and new risks, must be able to look to the Federal Reserve and other regulatory agencies for assurance that the integrity of financial services at the retail level will not be weakened.

It is in the face of these extraordinary circumstances that the Senate Banking Committee has the special responsibility to evaluate the nomination of Dr. Martha Seger to one of the seven positions on the Federal Reserve Board.

II. QUALIFICATIONS REQUIRED FOR THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

Membership on the Federal Reserve Board remains one of the most complex and important assignments in our government. It requires an exacting analytical mind. It requires independence of judgment. It requires integrity. And it requires a strong sense of public service.

The present members of the Federal Reserve Board meet these qualifications. Those with academic backgrounds have made distinguished published contributions in their fields. Those who rose through business, banking, government or the Federal Reserve itself had established reputations for excellence before their nominations to the Board. While several members of the Board have had partisan affiliation, none were appointed for partisan reasons. All are known for independence of judgment and personal devotion to the highest standards of objectivity.

In addition to these personal characteristics, which should be mandatory for any nominee to so important a post, the Senate has in recent years sought to require a degree of balance in geographic origin and professional background on the Federal Reserve Board.

The Senate has repeatedly urged the President to respect the requirement of the Federal Reserve Act that there be "due regard for the fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial, and commercial interests, and geographic divisions of the country." On May 15, 1980, the Senate passed a resolution which reads as follows: "Resolved, continued insensitivity to the requirements of the Federal Reserve Act in selecting nominees to the Federal Reserve Board shall not be overlooked by the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, or by the United States Senate."

It is the stated position of the Senate that the professional background of members of the Federal Reserve Board should be broadened to include members with direct personal experience with, and sympathy for, the problems of those economic activities, particularly agriculture and small business, which are most dependent on credit finance. In March 1984, the Senate specifically requested that the President name, to the next vacancy on the Federal Reserve Board, a person of demonstrable experience in small business or agriculture. The Senate approved a resolution to this effect by a vote of 50 to 37.

Several members of this Committee, including Senators Armstrong, Mattingly, Dixon, Dodd, Riegle, Sarbanes, and Sasser, went on record in support of this measure.

And Chairman Garn himself has noted that he would oppose and stop nominations that did not adhere to the notion that there be geographical and professional balance on the Federal Reserve Board.

III. QUALIFICATIONS OF THE PRESENT NOMINEE

At the time of her nomination to the Federal Reserve Board, Dr. Martha Romayne Seger was largely unknown to this Committee, to the Senate, to the economics profession, to the financial community outside the State of Michigan, and to the public at large. This was true with respect to her views, her qualifications and her experience.

It is especially pertinent in Dr. Seger's case that there exists no written record of her views on economic and monetary matters. The nomineee was unable to provide the Committee with a single piece of writing, whether scholarly or popular in nature, on any financial, economic or monetary topic.

We would underscore this point. It is not that Dr. Seger's written work is not regarded as semial, or that it has been criticized by her colleagues. It is that the writings that might reasonably be expected of a professor of economics who has been nominated to the Federal Reserve Board do not exist.

Without such a record, the Committee and the Senate are placed at a severe disadvantage. It is difficult to make a judgment on the professional competence of the nominee. It is difficult to determine whether her familiarity with the economic issues of our day is profound or superficial. We cannot tell whether she has an independent and a creative mind. We have no sense of her ability to contribute to the policymaking process.

In principle, it is possible for a professional economist to achieve a wide reputation without a large volume of published work, but there are generally recognized channels for doing so. An astute forecaster may build a reputation in a business setting—or a wise analyst may command respect in the financial markets, or a gifted teacher may occasionally achieve prominence in a university without benefit of published works. Dr. Seger has not demonstrated distinction in any of these dimensions, and in her chosen field, the academic, she has never stayed at any university long enough to face a tenure decision, a fact which strongly suggests a modest if not mediocre academic career.

Other members of the Federal Reserve Board have been confirmed despite the absence of significant written work, but in all cases nominees have demonstrated competence in business or other related fields. Dr. Seger would not, however, bring a broader professional background to the Federal Reserve Board. She is not herself a businesswoman or labor leader. She has not held a leadership or decisionmaking role in the private sector financial community. She has no personal experience of small business or, apart from the fact that her mother was born on a farm, of agriculture. Her industrial background is slight and she has not demonstrated a good grasp of the acute problems of the midwestern industrial region, which is all the more extraordinary in view of the fact that she has spent most of her life in Michigan.

Furthermore, there is no evidence that Dr. Seger will prove to be the strong advocate for consumer protection that her responsibilities as Dr. Nancy Teeter's replacement on the Federal Reserve Board would require her to be. During her tenure on the Board, Dr. Teeters assumed responsibility for the administration of the Truth-in-Lending Act, equal credit opportunity, home mortgage disclosures and other consumer affairs, and it is likely that these responsibilities would pass to Dr. Seger if she were confirmed. To the extent that Dr. Seger has a record on these questions, it must be inferred from her 2-year tenure as banking commissioner for the State of Michigan, and her service in that position suggests a strong predisposition to side with the preferences of the banks over the concerns of consumers of financial services.

In short, given the nature of Dr. Seger's professional career, it is reasonable to expect a published record of her views and research. Furthermore, such a record is essential to clarify her views and demonstrate her competence in areas where she has very limited direct experience or where her experience, for example with respect to consumer issues, raises serious questions about her actions if she were to be confirmed to the Federal Reserve Board. The written record simply does not exist. Prior to the hearings, therefore, it was extremely difficult to ascertain the professional competence of the nominee—to determine whether her familiarity with current economic issues if profound, or superficial, whether she would be able to contribute to the policymaking process. It was not even possible to say with any confidence what her views are.

IV. FLAWED SELECTION PROCESS FOR THIS NOMINEE

The question arises: Why would an obscure academic, of no distinction in her field, with no published research and no record outside of the economics profession that would suggest her suitability for the Federal Reserve Board, be considered for this appointment?

We believe that this nominee was selected for political rather than professional reasons.

The nominee is an active and outspoken member of the Michigan Republican Party with very strong partisan views. She was an ardent supporter of gubernatorial candidate Richard Headlee in 1982. In 1983, she was named chairman of a Michigan Republican women's group which seeks to promote and publicize the Administration's positions on economic equity issues. In 1984, she became a State chairman of the Fund for a Conservative America, founded by New York Republican gubernatorial candidate Lewis Lehrman.

The nominee has continued to demonstrate her partisanship by engaging in a running political battle this spring with other Republican leaders in Michigan over the conduct of the 1982 gubernatorial campaign. In so doing, at a time when she knew that she was under active consideration for the Federal Reserve Board, she has raised questions about her judgment.

In May 1984, Dr. Seger submitted a letter to the editor of the Record Eagle and other Michigan newspapers involving the 1982 Blanchard-Headlee race for Governor of Michigan. The letter was published in early June. Dr. Seger's article specifically mentions the activities, during that campaign, of Helen Milliken, the wife of the former Republican Governor of Michigan, and Elly Peterson, the former GOP state chairman and national vice-chairman. Dr. Seger's outspokenness on political questions is in sharp and puzzling contrast to her ambiguous and hesitant statements in response to questions about economics and mandatory matters.

After reading the Seger letter, Mrs. Peterson was moved to respond, "I am stunned that this woman, who has been appointed to a sensitive job, one requiring calmness of rhetoric, would allow herself to be manipulated into raising an 18-month-old issue with a letter that erred in every paragraph."

Mrs. Milliken and Mrs. Peterson jointly sent a letter to the Committee during these confirmation hearings asking "to be on record concerning the inaccuracies (Dr. Seger's) letter contains." They submitted a list of the errors contained in Dr. Seger's article and, at one point, state that Dr. Seger "outrageously distorts" a position of the Michigan Women's Assembly, made up of 28 statewide Michigan organizations, including the League of Women Voters, the YWCA, the American Association of University Women, and Business and Professional Women. Mrs. Milliken and Mrs. Peterson assert that "The plan which Ms. Seger so outrageously distorts reflects one recommended by the American Law Institute and American Bar Association. Twenty-five states have already enacted it into law." Other alleged inaccuracies in Dr. Seger's article are also detailed. In responding to questions about the Peterson-Milliken views. Dr. Seger was unable to substantiate her charges, saying only that she would apologize if she could be proved to have been in error.

Equally flagrant, when Dr. Seger was introduced to the press by the President at the White House as his nominee for the Federal Reserve Board, she made a categorical declaration of loyalty to him and to his political program, saying: "I support everything he is doing."

The selection procedure for this nomination reflects its partisan political character. Dr. Seger was first considered for but not nominated to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. At a later date, her name was forwarded to the White House personnel office, for appointment to the Federal Reserve, and she was interviewed by several junior staff. She was one of only three names forwarded to Treasury and Federal Reserve Board members and to the Chairman of the Banking Committee. At least one of the prospective nominees was disqualified since she was not from an appropriate geographic region of the country.

By her own account, the nominee had a cursory meeting with Treasury officials, including Undersecretary McNamar, and met for perhaps less than half an hour with Treasury Secretary Regan. She discussed little in the way of substance with the Secretary.

The nominee also met with the Vice Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Preston Martin. At no time did she meet Federal Reserve Board Chairman Volcker until after her nomination was made official by the White House on May 30.

V. PERFORMANCE OF THE NOMINEE IN HEARINGS

For the reasons just outlined, the hearings in the Senate Banking Committee on Dr. Seger's nomination were of unusual importance. The Committee held 14 hours of hearings over 4 days to explore the nominee's views, qualifications, experience and competence to serve on the Federal Reserve Board. This extensive and searching inquiry was necessary, first, because Dr. Seger has no written record of established reputation in her field and second, because in the course of the hearings, the nominee revealed an extraordinary reluctance to give Committee members a clear statement of her positions.

The nominee did not present an opening statement. She declined to have her views on economic issues characterized in any particular way: for example, as a monetarist, supplyside or Keynesian. She pled ignorance on a wide range of important technical issues on which she might reasonably have been expected to have a view. She declined to specify her position on important current policy debates, such as that between CEA Chairman Feldstein and Treasury Secretary Regan over the relationship of deficits and interest rates. She appeared to hold no firm views on a program for deficit reduction. She declined to identify deficit reduction as the most important economic challenge we face, or to specify whether, in her view, inflation would be better fought by deficit reduction or monetary tightness. She had no view on the size of the "structural deficit" or the lowest feasible non-inflationary rate of unemployment, or what rate of price inflation ought to be considered serious. She could think of no alternatives to the tight monetary policies which helped bring on the recession of 1981. In short, in instance after instance, the nominee confined her responses to the banal, the tautological, and the evasive.

It is impossible to convey, without lengthy quotation, the arduous character of Dr. Seger's confirmation hearing. The very length of the interrogation bears witness to the difficulty of obtaining a clear, straightforward statement of views from the witness. Perusal of the transcript confirms this impression, and we urge our colleagues to review the transcripts for themselves.

Dr. Seger's performance at her hearing led eight Senators on the Banking Committee to vote against her confirmation, which was approved by a vote of only 10 to 8. Senator Cranston summed up the view of the eight in the following way:

Dr. Seger, during extensive hearings, has made statements supporting almost every side of the issues she has been questioned on. Indeed, she appears to have no grounded philosophy of her own. In these troubling times, we need persons on the Fed who are seasoned, independent thinkers who can bring some new ideas to the table. Dr. Seger does not fit that description.

VI. THE RECESS APPOINTMENT OF THE NOMINEE

Finally, we are deeply concerned by the decision of President Reagan to make a recess appointment of Martha Seger to the Federal Reserve Board.

The decision to make an appointment of a nominee whose confirmation was a matter of considerable controversy constitutes a serious infringement on the Constitutional prerogatives of the Senate.

In providing the President with the authority to make recess appointments, we do not believe the Founding Fathers intended that it be used by a President as a means to circumvent a potentially adverse vote of the Senate on a controversial Presidential nomination. Rather, the authority seems designed to allow the President to fill important vacancies during the long periods of time when the Congress was expected to be out of session.

If left unchallenged, this recess appointment could allow Dr. Seger to serve on the Board through the end of 1985 and to vote on monetary policy even if her nomination is rejected by the Senate. At the very least, it will allow her to cast an important vote at the next meeting of the Federal Open Market Committee without having been confirmed by the Senate.

Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution of the United States clearly states that "The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of the next session."

The vacancy which Dr. Seger has been appointed to fill "happened" February 1, 1984, when the term of Federal Reserve Board Governor Nancy Hays Teeters expired. This vacancy did not happen during the recess of the Senate.

In addition, there is no evidence of an emergency on the Federal Reserve Board that would justify the extraordinary actions of the President in cutting Constitutional corners and making this appointment in this manner. Indeed, in the entire history of the Federal Reserve Board, only three members have been granted recess appointments. There are six other members of the Federal Reserve Board who are perfectly capable of determining monetary policy in the weeks ahead pending a vote in the Senate on the Seger nomination.

Past interpretations of the recess power by Attorneys General of the United States have benefited the executive branch both by a flexible interpretation of the word "recess" to include many intrasession adjournments and then by a literal interpretation of "next session" to mean the next full session of a Congress. In the process of stretching executive power, there has been an unwarranted diminution of the Senate's Constitutional role in the appointment process and a movement away from the plain meaning of the Constitution. We believe that a fresh evaluation of the recess appointment power is necessary to return it to its original purpose and to avoid misuse of it in the future.

When the Senate reconvenes, we plan to examine what remedies the Congress may have in restricting the authority of the President to make recess appointments during temporary adjournments of the Senate and prior to official termination of a session of the Senate.

VII. CONCLUSION

The nominee before the Senate to the position of Governor of the Federal Reserve System, Martha Romayne Seger, does not meet the high standards of professional accomplishment, independent judgment, clear-mindedness, demonstrated ability and non-partisanship essential to function as a Governor of the Federal Reserve System.

The Federal Reserve Board is one of the most important institutions we have to shape economic policy. Its powers are wide-ranging and its effect on the economy is profound. The American people have a right to expect the highest qualifications of a Governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

The President could have done better by sending forward a more qualified nominee. The Banking Committee should have done better by not approving this nomination. The Senate must do better; the nomination of Dr. Martha Seger to be a Governor of the Federal Reserve Board must be rejected.

ADDITIONAL MINORITY VIEWS OF SENATOR RIEGLE

Membership on the Federal Reserve Board constitutes one of the most complex and critical assignments in our government at this time.

With U.S. and world financial markets experiencing unprecedented turbulence and dangers, Federal Reserve Board policy now and in the future is of the highest strategic importance to our nation. Selections to the Federal Reserve Board must now be made with the same care that is used to select those who will serve on the Joint Chiefs of Staff at the Pentagon.

We are in a period of maximum risk within the United States and international financial structure as evidenced by the recent near collapse of the Continental Illinois Bank and other dangerous conditions, including foreign loans in or near default, a massive and growing trade deficit, massive fiscal deficits, and rising interest rates.

Federal Reserve policy decisions in the immediate future will have a critical bearing on the financial future of our nation and the world.

It is in the face of these extraordinary circumstance that the Senate Banking Committee has the special responsibility to evaluate the nomination of Ms. Seger to one of the seven positions on the Federal Reserve Board.

One major consideration that arises immediately is the appropriateness of confirming a Federal Reserve Board nominee to a 14-year term some 4 months prior to a Presidential election.

The recent practice as seen in 1980, and other Presidential election years, is that short-term appointments have been handled routinely prior to a national election, while long-term appointments have often been set aside until the American people have spoken in a national election. In 1980, of 207 appointments considered after June 1, nearly half (95) were set aside and not acted upon until after the national election.

This 14-year term, in essence a lifetime appointment for Ms. Seger, is one that would continue through the next 3 Presidential 4-year terms of office and into a fourth. If Ms. Serger is confirmed, she would serve until 1998—and she has indicated that is her intention.

I believe the extraordinary importance of this position, the 14-year term, and the upcoming national election, indicate that this nomination should not go forward at this time and instead be taken up again early in 1985.

While it is my view that the Senate should withhold final action on this nominee at this time for the reasons just stated, there are additional factors attaching to this particular nominee that are of conern to me.

As the nominee is from my home State of Michigan, I have felt a special responsibility to examine the nomination very carefully, as the nominee has not been previously known to me or widely known within my State.

Questions have arisen with respect to the depth and breadth of the nominee's professional background. These questions take on greater meaning in light of the fact that the nominee was unable to provide the Committee with a single example of her written views on any financial, economic or monetary topic. For a person seeking one of the highest and most complex financial policy positions in our Nation to have produced no written professional work over the years that would demonstrate her competence, her views and her vital and searching interest in these subjects, is virtually without precedence in my 18 years in Congress.

As a result, the Committee found it necessary to conduct 4 days of hearings to attempt to gain some understanding of the nominee's views on important financial and monetary policy issues and her thought process.

A careful reading of that Committee record does not reveal the depth of understanding on current economic issues by the nominee that one would have expected.

Another concern is the fact that the Senate, in March of this year, passed a resolution stating that the next nominee to the Federal Reserve Board should be a person with a background in small business or agriculture, and this nominee does not meet that requirement. Small business people, farmers, consumers, and others are at the mercy of high interest rates and Federal Reserve monetary policy mangement. This nomination clearly ignores that Congressional mandate.

Other concerns have arisen over the maintenance of the independence of the Federal Reserve and the need to prevent any attempts at politicizing its views or actions. An unusual evaluation procedure was used by the Administration in evaluating this nominee, where Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker was pointedly omitted from the interviewing process of the nominee, and that has troubling implications that have not been satisfactorily answered.

Under the law, the Federal Reserve is responsible to the Congress, and therefore we here have a special responsibility to monitor and safeguard the continuing independence of the Fed.

Finally, the nominee has been sent forward on the basis of providing certain geographical representation on the Fed Board as require by law.

In the instance of Ms. Seger, that takes on special regional importance as it relates to industrial base problems, the future of the U.S. auto industry, the continuing trade invasion of foreign goods and the tremendous economic pressures facing middle class families and workers in our region of the nation.

In probing the nominee's knowledge and concern in this critical area, I was generally disappointed in her grasp of these problems and her thoughts as to what might be done to alleviate them.

If she were confirmed as a regional representative, and was unable to bring this special regional insight to the Board's deliberations, it would be greatly damaging to the country and particularly damaging to our region.

For these reasons among others, I believe this nomination should not go forward at this time.

DON RIEGLE.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I just want to make the final point that this is not an isolated instance. During the recent recess Seger was 1 of 16 recess appointments made by the President during the break of Congress over the July period.

He also selected, among others, a member of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, an Assistant Secretary of the Interior, and seven members of an advisory board of the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Some of those nominees were controversial, including, of course, obviously, Seger who barely made it out of the committee on a 10-to-8 vote.

It is estimated that during his term in office the President has made an estimated 80 recess appointments and 20 percent of them were made just now. And this, of course, permits the nominees to take the office and to present the Senate with a fait accompli, and I submit that this course of conduct must be brought to an end. That is a separate issue from the qualifications of Seger. It is compounded in this instance because she lacks the qualifications. But the same argument could be made that has been made here this evening even with the most qualified of persons.

What is happening is the recess appointment authority of the President is being abused and I think this body should start drawing a line on that important issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. HATFIELD. Does the Senator from Montana wish to make some closing remarks?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the floor.

Mr. HATFIELD. I wish to make a tabling motion to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana. We have been already 2 hours on this amendment. We have heard I think some very eloquent arguments. I assume by now the arguments have been exhausted at the first two or three go arounds but I would not want to cut any Senator off to make any further statements.

Mr. SASSER. If the Senator from Oregon will withhold for 2 minutes I would like to make a short statement.

Mr. HATFIELD. I do not understand.

Mr. SASSER. If the Senator from Oregon would withhold his tabling motion for 2 minutes I would like to make a short statement.

Mr. HATFIELD. I am happy to withhold my tabling motion.

Mr. BAUCUS. I say to the Senator from Oregon I have just a few brief words to make. It is not going to last more than 2 or 3 minutes.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, without losing my right to the floor, I am very happy to yield for those remarks for a few minutes, whatever the Senator from Tennessee needs.

Mr. SASSER. I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. HATFIELD. And the Senator from Montana, whatever time he needs.

Mr. BAUCUS. Three minutes.

Mr. HATFIELD. Three or four mintues.

I repeat, after yielding to the Senators for that purpose, without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the distinguished chairman.

Mr. President, I rise first to commend the Senator from Montana for bringing this matter before the U.S. Senate this evening, a matter that I consider to be very important, and to commend the Senator from Maryland for the very eloquent argument he has made here this evening on the matter of the recess appointment of Martha Seger to the Federal Reserve Board.

As I indicated earlier in a question that I propounded to my able friend from Maryland, the Federal Reserve is a creature of the Congress. It was created in 1913 by the Congress of the United States. In that legislation, the Congress set the terms of membership. It is our duty, as U.S. Senators, to participate in the selection of Governors on the Federal Reserve Board under the advise and consent provisions of the Constitution.

Clearly, the first step of that advise and consent procedure is for the Senate Banking Committee to hold hearings. That was done at great length. I wish to commend the chairman of the committee for the fairness and patience that he exhibited during the course of those hearings.

The hearings were frustrating on occasion. I well recall, I say to my friend from Oregon, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that some of those hearings took place on the morning after another one of these all-night marathon sessions that we have had on appropriation bills. I know the Senator from Oregon knows of my great respect and affection for him. But I must say on the floor this evening that I think this is an exceedingly poor way to legislate, to keep the Senate in session until the wee hours of the morning and on occasion all night. But, nevertheless, we dragged ourselves into those hearings in the Senate Banking Committee to delve further into the qualifications of this nominee one morning after, as I recall, an all-night session. We voted by a vote of 10 to 8 to vote her out. This is not a resounding endorsement by any stretch of the imagination. It was evident in the hearings and in the vote that questions, serious questions, about the qualifications of this nominee remain.

I submit that those concerns should have been aired in the full Senate, that all Members of this body should have been allowed to fulfill their constitutional duties to advise and consent on this nomination. But I suspect that the administration took the concerns that had been expressed in the Senate Banking Committee, looked at them and saw that they were valid. And, thus, overriding, ignoring, and sidestepping the Senate, the administration made a very questionable recess appointment. I submit that it was legally questionable, as the Senator from Maryland has so ably pointed out here this evening. And, as one who practiced law for 15 years, I wish to commend him for his statement that we are a nation of laws and not of men.

I submit that this appointment was politically questionable, as the hearing records will clearly show. I agree with the Senator from Maryland that it is the constitutional prerogative of the U.S. Senate to advise and consent on nominations to these very important boards such as the Federal Reserve Board and in this instance we have been deprived of that constitutional prerogative by a precipitous and unjustified recess appointment on the part of the administration.

I commend the Senator from Montana for bringing this matter to our attention. I thank my friend from Oregon for yielding such time as I have consumed.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to yield the floor for the purpose of comments to be made by the Senator from Montana for 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. GORTON]. Without objection, it is ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. First of all, Mr. President, I want to commend the Senator from Maryland. He has displayed a masterful understanding of the Constitution, the constitutional process, and the legislative process which is so important to this country. Particularly, Mr. President, in these unsettled times, as times become more complex, it is important, in my judgment, that the Senate of the United States operate under an orderly procedure and, more important, operate in a procedure which adheres to the Constitution, not only the letter of the Constitution, but the spirit of the Constitution.

This is no idle matter at all. The Senator from Maryland has very ably pointed that out.

I might add that once this appointment is made, it lasts for a long time. Under article II, section 2 of the Constitution, a recess appointment lasts not only the year during which the recess appointment was made, but it lasts until the end of the next session of the Congress. So theoretically a recess appointment could be made which will in effect last 2 years. This recess appointment was made in July. Theoretically, this recess appointment could last for approximately a year and a half.

So I call upon Senators to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States. That is the oath of office we took, to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States.

Now there is no direct constitutional provision that this action, the appointment of Dr. Seger, is unconstitutional. But it is absolutely clear that it violates the spirit and the intention of the Constitution of the United States, not only the appointive power but the confirmation power that resides in the U.S. Senate.

I strongly urge Members to think upon the oath of office that we took when we entered this body, to uphold the Constitution.

I urge Members to follow the dictates of their conscience and vote down the tabling motion so that we do uphold the Constitution of the United States and uphold the process, which we know is an important and necessary ingredient of this Government if we are going to proceed in a manner that has the respect of the people of the United States.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move to table the Baucus amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] to table the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS]. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] is necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who wish to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 43, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I move to lay that motion on the table, Mr. President.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from Oregon.

SECOND EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the pending amendment is the committee amendment, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The clerk will state the committee amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

On page 42, line 1, strike"

VOCATIONAL AND ADULT EDUCATION (TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

For expenses necessary to establish a model retraining program for displaced workers to be conducted in the Johnstown, Pennsylvania, area under section 171(a)(1) of the Vocational Education Act, $570,000, to remain available until expended, is hereby transferred from funds available under the head "Department of the Interior, Bureau of Mines, Mines and Minerals": Provided, That none of these funds shall be used for the construction of facilities: Provided further, That up to 3 percent of the funds transferred may be used for related Department of Education administrative expenses.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I urge the defeat of the committee amendment for a limited purpose, which I think has the agreement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the chairman of the Subcommittee on the Interior [Mr. McCLURE]. I urge the defeat of the amendment in order to allow the funds to assist the retraining of many of the unemployed steelworkers and coal miners in the Johnstown area.

As I have said, Mr. President, I have spoken to the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. McCLURE] regarding this matter, and also to the chairman of the full committee [Mr. HATFIELD]. I believe there is no objection to the deletion of the committee amendment.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Senator is correct. I urge that we vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, if I may have the Senate's attention, I believe I have some good news. According to the list that the managers have been keeping on amendments that we have listed with us, there are about eight amendments left. Of those eight, I think six are noncontroversial, either that we have already worked out or we have an understanding with the authors of the amendments. There are two possible amendments on which it has not yet been fully determined as to whether they will be offered. They may create a little more difficulty. I do not see them as being great problems. I wish to indicate to Senators at this time that if they will remain on the floor, I think we can work out all of these amendments, probably within the next 15 or 20 minutes.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. BIDEN and Mr. ABDNOR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

AMENDMENT NO. 3641

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Congress that the President should use all practicable means to negotiate an end to the use of unfair trade subsidies for poultry and egg exports by countries of the European Economic Community and Brazil)

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], for himself, Mr. NUNN, Mr. MATTINGLY, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. EAST, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. DENTON, and Mr. HOLLINGS, proposes an amendment numbered 3641.

On page 105, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following new section:

SEC. 305. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the export of American poultry meat products has reduced our nation's annual trade deficit by over $275,000,000 but has declined for two straight years;

(2) an even more drastic decline in the exports of American shell eggs has occurred over the same period of time and many foreign markets have been completely lost;

(3) the decline of such exports is largely a result of the use of unfair trade subsidies for poultry and egg exports by countries of the European Economic Community and Brazil;

(4) the United States has been engaged for almost three years in negotiations with such countries to end the use of such subsidies but has been unable to make substantial progress in ending such subsidies; and

(5) further negotiations to end the use of such subsidies are expected to be held in October, 1984.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that the President should use all practicable means to negotiate an end to the use of unfair trade subsidies for poultry and egg exports by countries of the European Economic Community and Brazil in order to permit American producers to compete more fairly in international markets and to avoid the imposition of such subsidies by the United States.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, today I am joined by a number of my Senate colleagues in offering a sense of the Congress resolution which urges the President to show some progress in negotiations with the European Economic Community and the Brazilians over their use of export subsidies for poultry products, including eggs.

The U.S. Trade Representative, Ambassador William Brock, has been engaged in negotiations for almost 3 years, to try to bring about a reduction in foreign subsidies that have contributed to the loss of major international markets for American poultry producers. I admire his perseverance in staying with the negotiation process for so long, but I am concerned that the lack of progress is hurting our producers.

Through this resolution, we hope to make it clear to the President and Ambassador Brock that Congress believes 3 years is more than enough time to study the advantages foreign producers have gained as a result of their governments' subsidies. It's time to find out whether or not the Europeans and the Brazilians are sincere in discussing reductions in the subsidies that are giving them unfair advantage in international markets.

At a time when many American industries are suffering from all types of subsidized foreign competition, it may be easy to disregard the poultry growers as just one more in the long list of industries looking for protection. This is not the case.

The American poultry industry has always been willing to do battle with foreign competition, but on terms that reward the most efficient producers, not growers who have talked their governments into granting them huge export assistance programs.

Let me outline a few of the disadvantages the American poultry industry suffers in competing in the world market. Knowing how these foreign subsidy programs work will make it clear why we are calling for stronger action on the part of the U.S. negotiators in this dispute.

Suppose a French company wants to start or expand a poultry exporting business. The extent of the programs offered by the French Government to assist such a company every step of the way is astounding.

The French Government will make grants available to the company if it is creating or extending employment. Up to 25 percent of the investment in poultry operations may be subsidized under this program.

The French also have capital grants available for firms which process or distribute agricultural products and foods. These grants may cover another 20 percent of the investment.

If the company wants to invest in equipment for the preparation, processing or distribution of food products, the French Government has another grant program that will subsidize up to 30 percent of the investment.

If you have been doing your arithmetic with me, you know these programs, taken together, may provide up to 75 percent of the investment in a new or expanding poultry export business. That is no small advantage in a highly competitive market.

But apparently, someone in the French Government sat back one day and realized that maybe their subsidy programs were getting a little out of control. So, in 1977, the Government told its poultry producers that henceforth the combined total subsidy of investment in poultry slaughtering plants would be no more than 50 percent. If this is an example of restraint, we have a long way to go in the negotiations.

I emphasize that these are only the programs to assist poultry processors that are offered by the French Government. They do not include the community-wide EEC programs to help all European poultry producers.

Assistance to exporters is equally impressive. The French introduced direct subsidies for poultry exports in 1967. They were reigned in to some extent in 1974, but by 1980 they had been restored, as strong as ever.

The subsidy is based on a formula that uses a number of factors, including the amount by which European poultry is overpriced for the world market, the extent to which they are overproducing for their own market and must get rid of the surplus, and the extent to which they set their grain price so high that poultry raised on European grain is too expensive for the world to buy.

I am not sure how American farmers are to be expected to compete with subsidized poultry processed in subsidized plants and sold on subsidized credit terms.

In January 1984, the French subsidized whole chicken parts to the tune of $132 per metric ton. By February 1983, the subsidy had increased to $220 per metric ton. When the price of poultry in the Middle East, a major export market, is $1,200 per metric ton, the French exporter has roughly a 15-percent price advantage over his American counterpart—and 15 percent is an enormous advantage in a market as price-sensitive as the poultry market, where sales are made or lost on penny-per-pound differences.

The Brazilians are also using subsidies to push us out of export markets, and their creative juices were certainly flowing when their system was developed.

The Brazilian Government provides reduced credit terms for exporters, exemption from income taxes, reduced loan rates for growers that cover all of the operating and input costs, subsidized corn, and even more subsidized credit for specific export sales.

That is a pretty impressive array of helping hands for Brazilian poultry producers to grab in their competition with unsubsidized American growers. In 1981, Brazilian subsidies amounted to a 10-percent price advantage that American farmers had to overcome just to make a sale.

This competition from the EEC and Brazil—if it deserves to be called "competition"—has all but cleared American producers out of the Middle Eastern market. It is a wonder our growers can sell anything at all under such disadvantageous circumstances—and it is important to note that the disadvantage is through no fault of American producers.

Simply put, no other country has better production efficiency or technology. Our problem is that we are still abiding by the rules of fair competition, while the other teams have made up their own rules to their own advantage.

The result of this unfair competition has been a precipitate drop in U.S. poultry exports.

For example, from 1976 to 1980 we averaged nearly 2,000 metric tons per year in poultry sales to Saudi Arabia. In 1981, we sold the Saudis only 509 tons, a 75-percent loss of sales in just 1 year's time. In 1982, we were able to sell them only 222 metric tons, another 50-percent loss.

Sales to Kuwait are down nearly 90 percent over the same period. Sales to Jordan were down more than 95 percent. Outside of the Middle East, sales to Hong Kong were down 60 percent.

At this point, I believe we have two options. We can continue to negotiate, hoping to reach a fair settlement before we lose the rest of the world market, or we can take unilateral action to help our poultry growers export successfully under what appear to be new international rules.

I prefer the first, which is to negotiate with the European Community and Brazil to bring down the level of their subsidies. This is what Ambassador Brock has been trying to do for almost 3 years.

I am willing to continue trying to reach agreement, but at some point we will have to reexamine the situation and see if our trading partners are negotiating in good faith or just stalling.

If the first option fails, we will have to consider the other option, which both Congress and the administration have been trying to avoid—and that is to match the foreign subsidies.

In the long run, nobody gains from that kind of competition in subsidies, but our farmers should not be penalized indefinitely for the inefficiency of foreign farmers.

The point to this sense of Congress resolution, Mr. President, is to put the European Community and the Brazilians on notice that our patience is wearing thin.

Negotiations have been dragging on for 3 years. American poultry sales abroad have been declining for 3 years. That parallel is a little too neat to be entirely coincidental, and it can not continue.

I believe a little harder push by the administration now will clarify the intentions of the Brazilians and the Europeans.

That will provide Congress with the insight it needs in considering actions that may be needed to restore American poultry farmers to a position equal to their foreign competitors.

Mr. President, I have conferred with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. MATTINGLY] who had requested that I amend my poultry amendment to include eggs. The amendment so reads.

I understand that both the minority and the majority are prepared to accept this amendment. I have discussed the matter with the junior Senator from Mississippi. As I understand it, the amendment is agreeable with him, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am aware of the tremendous impact the decrease in poultry and egg exports is having on the U.S. poultry industry, not only in my State of Mississippi, but across our Nation. I am also aware that the European Community and Brazil—the other parties involved in the section 301—of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended—petition action that our Government has filed with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT], have continued to be very reluctant to negotiate toward an acceptable resolution.

I am pleased to support this amendment in anticipation that our foreign competitors will realize that this unfair use of export subsidies and practices will not continue to be allowed to go unchallenged. U.S. poultry producers seek an equitable share of world poultry trade.

We must let our foreign competitors know that we are united in the effort to remove unfair trade actions that are continuing to severely erode U.S. poultry and egg exports and our fair share of world trade.

I am prepared to recommend that this amendment be accepted by the Senate.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I would like to compliment the Senator from Delaware for his amendment. His effort in this regard closely tracks many of my own past attempts to call greater attention to the severe economic losses that are being caused to American poultry and egg producers by the employment of unfair, predatory foreign production, and export subsidies. Such subsidies allow foreign producers to dump their products on the world market at prices well below the cost of production for similar American products. I have sponsored report language, amendments and legislation addressing this problem in each of the past 3 years. Unfortunately, I don't think we have yet convinced those in countries which employ these unfair methods that we are really serious about our demands for fair trade in the world markets. In an amendment last year, the Senate adopted my language which earmarked $5 million for the express purpose of providing a small dose of direct subsidy for American poultry and egg producers so that we could give the predator nations a taste of their own medicine. That language was regrettably modified in the conference committee and the mandated use of the $5 million was removed. But again, Mr. President, I want to commend my colleague for this continuing effort at this time.

Mr. President, I would just like to note that those engaged in the egg producing business have suffered as much if not more than those in the export of broilers and other poultry meat products. In 1976, U.S. eggs dominated the Middle East market. Since then that market has expanded tremendously in annual volume, but the U.S. share of the sales has fallen to almost zero. And as my colleague correctly points out, this drastic loss of market share is due almost entirely to unfair foreign subsidies.

Mr. President, I support this effort by the Senator from Delaware, and I urge adoption of his amendment. I would, however, like to thank the Senator for making some minor changes in his proposal which reflected the problems which are being experienced by the shell egg industry in this country and expressing our desire that that product also be included in the future negotiations. I proposed this modification and I thank the Senator for his willingness to modify his amendment in such a manner.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment (No. 3641) was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to reconsider the vote, Mr. President.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3642

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. ABDNOR] proposes and amendment numbered 3642.

On page 62, after line 11 insert the following:

UNITED STATES CUSTOMS SERVICE

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

[TRANSFER OF FUNDS]

For an additional amount for "Salaries and expense, United States Customs Service", $3,000,000, to be derived by transfer from "Salaries and expenses, United States Secret Service", to remain available until expended

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared on both sides. It transfers $3 million from the Secret Service to the Customs Service. The Secret Service budgeted much higher for candidate protection, that was necessary. This money became available because of the early drop out rate of so many Presidential candidates. Customs will use the money to purchase voice secure radio equipment. No new money will be involved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this amendment has been approved on this side of the aisle. I believe it has been approved on the other side of the aisle also.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I support the amendment. I think all on this side of the aisle do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3642) was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3643

(Purpose: To provide additional funding for Farmers Home Administration loans to farmers)

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration on behalf of myself, Senators EXON, BOREN, HOLLINGS, and SASSER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. HUDDLESTON] for himself and Mr. EXON, Mr. BOREN, Mr. HOLLINGS, and Mr. SASSER proposes an amendment numbered 3643.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 4, line 19, after "$25,000,000", insert the following: "; and guaranteed operating loans, $650,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1985: Provided, That operating loans shall be available for the refinancing of existing indebtedness, as provided under section 312(a)(7) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1942(a)(7))".

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator BAUCUS be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, the Farmers Home Administration Farm Loan Programs are in need of additional lending authority for fiscal year 1985 and the balance of fiscal year 1984 if those programs are to meet the urgent financial needs of our Nation's hard-pressed farmers.

This amendment, providing a significant increase in loan-guarantee authority for operating loans, can do much to ease farm-credit problems without incurring excessive Government outlays. The amendment is consistent with a proposal I initiated several weeks ago to greatly expand the Farmers Home Administration Operating Loan Guarantee Program.

At that time, several of my colleagues joined me in sending a letter to Senator COCHRAN, in his capacity as chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee with jurisdiction over FmHA programs, urging him to support an increase in operating loan guarantees.

I was pleased that the subcommittee acted favorably on my request by recommending $650 million in operating loan guarantees for fiscal year 1985. However, as I pointed out during the full committee markup of the supplemental appropriations bill before us, additional loan guarantee authority is needed immediately.

In this regard, the committee agreed to report an amendment to the 1985 agriculture appropriations bill that would make the $650 million in operating loan guarantees available immediately on enactment. This action was taken with the understanding that if the 1984 supplemental appropriations bill was considered before action was taken on the 1985 agriculture appropriations bill, the committee would support a similar amendment to the supplemental appropriations measure. This amendment, which makes $650 million in operating loan guarantees available immediately, implements that understanding.

NEED FOR OPERATING LOAN GUARANTEES

The FmHA Operating Loan Guarantee Program can be of great assistance to farmers who have a reasonable chance of working out of their current financial difficulties. These guarantees will enable commercial lenders, in many cases, to continue forbearance and refinance loans to farmers who cannot service their debt as presently structured. Since guarantees cannot exceed 90 percent of the principal amount owed, commercial lenders will share in the risk in addition to assuming responsibility for loan servicing.

Also, loan guarantees will reduce the number of farm loans that bank regulators might otherwise adversely classify and will help to minimize the forced sale of mortgaged farmland and other farm assets in today's depressed market. The use of loan guarantees will allow time for improvements in interest costs and resolution of other economic problems now adversely affecting indebted farmers.

The amendment provides an adequate loan guarantee program level so that, after State allocations are made, each State will have enough guarantee authority for a workable program. This significant increase over current loan guarantee authority is needed to ensure that the desired results are realized.

Federally guaranteed farm loans made by cooperative or commercial lenders incur budget obligations only if loss settlements occur. Historically, loss settlements under the FmHA Loan Guarantee Programs have been minimal, in the range of 5 percent or less.

CONCLUSION

The farm credit crisis is one of the most serious problems facing our Nation. We should not allow our productive farmers to become victims of excessive interest rates and tight credit. Providing Farmers Home Administration loan guarantees is a relatively modest first step in providing assistance to financially stressed farmers.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the letter to Senator COCHRAN be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, June 28, 1984.

Hon. THAD COCHRAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Agriculture and Related Agencies, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Farmers Home Administration farm loan programs are in need of additional lending authority for the balance of fiscal year 1984 if those programs are to meet the urgent financial needs of our Nation's hard-pressed farmers. We urge you to take action, when the Subcommittee on Agriculture and Related Agencies considers upcoming legislation to provide supplemental funding for fiscal year 1984, to provide authority for additional FmHA farm lending to meet the immediate needs of U.S. farmers.

In addition, a significant increase in loan guarantee authority for operating loans in fiscal year 1985, as well as for the remainder of this fiscal year, can do much to ease farm credit problems without incurring excessive Government outlays. The Independent Bankers Association of America has proposed that, to help meet the credit needs of farmers, a total of $1 billion in loan guarantee authority be provided for the FmHA operating loan program, over the balance of the current fiscal year and in fiscal year 1985.

H.R. 5743, the House-passed fiscal year 1985 agricultural appropriations bill, contains only $150 million for such loan guarantees. We strongly urge you to support appropriations that would provide a total of $1 billion in authority for operating loan guarantees for the remainder of this fiscal year and fiscal year 1985. We want to emphasize that this expanded loan guarantee authority should be in addition to adequately-funded direct loan programs.

The FmHA operating loan guarantee program can be of great assistance to farmers who have a reasonable chance of working out of their current financial difficulties. These guarantees will enable commercial lenders, in many cases, to continue forebearance and refinance loans to farmers who cannot service their debt as presently structured. Since guarantees cannot exceed 90 percent of the principal amount owed, commercial lenders will share in the risk in addition to assuming responsibility for loan servicing.

Also, loan guarantees will reduce the number of farm loans that bank regulators might otherwise adversely classify and will help to minimize the sale of farmland and other farm assets in today's depressed market. The use of loan guarantees will allow time for improvements in interest costs and resolution of other economic problems now adversely affecting indebted farmers.

Congress must provide an adequate loan guarantee program level so that, after State allocations are made, each State has enough guarantee authority for a workable program. A significant increase over current loan guarantee authority is needed to ensure that the desired results are realized.

Federally-guaranteed farm loans made by commercial banks incur budget obligations only if loss settlements occur. Historically, loss settlements under the FmHA loan guarantee programs have been minimal, in the range of 5 percent or less.

We believe the farm credit crisis is one of the most serious problems facing our Nation. We should not allow our productive farmers to become victims of excessive interest rates and tight credit. Providing Farmers Home Administration loan guarantees is a relatively modest first step in providing assistance to financially-stressed farmers.

Sincerely,
Walter D. Huddleston, John C. Stennis, Lloyd Bentsen, Alan J. Dixon, Sam Nunn, Roger W. Jepsen, Howell Heflin, Quentin N. Burdick, John C. Danforth, Chuck Grassley, Edward Zorinsky, David L. Boren, Patrick J. Leahy, Ernest F. Hollings, Max Baucus, Jim Sasser, Larry Pressler.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, given that dismal situation on America's farms, the difficulty many farmers are having in securing loans, and the difficulties that our small banks are having in meeting the credit needs of their farm customers, it is obvious that the Farmers Home Administration farm loan programs are in need of additional lending authority for fiscal year 1985 and the balance of fiscal year 1984.

While the 1985 agricultural appropriation bill normally would be the appropriate vehicle for a proposal such as this, the Appropriations Committee agreed that we ought to make this assistance available to farmers just as soon as possible. It was also agreed that this supplemental appropriations bill would offer an opportunity to make these loan funds available immediately to our American farmers. That is our purpose tonight, to make sure that this bill is enacted and finally signed by the President so that this loan authority will be available to help our Nation's farmers.

My amendment, providing a significant increase in loan guarantee authority for operating loans, can do much to ease farm credit problems without incurring excessive Government outlays. The amendment is consistent with a proposal I initiated several weeks ago to greatly expand the Farmers Home Administration Operating Loan Guarantee Program.

At that time, several of my colleagues joined me in sending a letter to Senator COCHRAN, in his capacity as chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee with jurisdiction over FmHA programs, urging him to support an increase in operating loan guarantees.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thank my friend and colleague from Kentucky. I thank the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the ranking minority member, and also the chairman of the Agriculture Subcommittee, the junior Senator from Mississippi, for their total cooperation on this matter.

Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague from Kentucky in offering an amendment to the supplemental appropriations bill which will provide $650 million in guaranteed farm operating loan money to be available from passage of this bill through September 1985. This amount is identical to that which is currently in H.R. 5743, the agriculture appropriations bill.

I would like to further explain to the Senate the great need for this amendment which relates to the $650 million in guaranteed loan money which will be available upon enactment.

Immediately after the House of Representatives had passed H.R. 5743, appropriating only $150 million for the guaranteed Farm Operating Loan Program, I was contacted by farm representatives and members of the commercial lending industry directly involved with agriculture loans and asked to seek an increase in the program. These agriculture leaders convinced me that the House amount was seriously deficient and would never meet the current needs or those of 1985 given the serious financial situation which now exists in the Farm Belt. As a result, I introduced an amendment which I had intended to offer to H.R. 5743 when it reached the floor increasing the amount for the 1985 guaranteed Farm Operating Loan Program by $300 million over the House amount.

I continued to work with agriculture leaders, particularly, on this very pressing need. Shortly after I introduced my amendment, the IBAA came to me and requested that I support their proposal to add $1 billion to the guaranteed Farm Operating Loan Program for the remainder of fiscal year 1984 and 1985. I agree to this and so indicated my support for this increased amount to the very able chairman of the Agriculture Appropriations Subcommittee and its ranking minority member. I am also aware that this proposal received the support from other Members of the Senate whose States face similar credit problems among the family farmers and ranchers.

I was very pleased that the Agriculture Appropriations Subcommittee included a $500 million increase in this program bringing the total amount for the guaranteed farm operating money to $650 million. Furthermore, H.R.

5743 stipulates that this $650 million would become available upon enactment which would have greatly benefited our struggling agriculture sector.

To briefly demonstrate the need, I would like to draw the Senate's attention to the deterioration in the farm debt situation.

Mr. President, a large segment, 35 to 40 percent of all commercial-sized farmers, are leveraged above 40 percent of the total value of their farm assets. This segment of about 250,000 commercial farmers own about two-thirds of the $215 billion total farm debt outstanding. In many instances, these farmers will not be able to service their debt as presently structured—especially as interest rates continue to rise.

Although the FmHA holds about $25 billion of the most highly stressed farm debt, commercial lenders now hold abnormally large amounts of the problem debt. Nonaccruing farm loans at commercial banks at the end of 1983 totaled roughly $2.6 billion and the farm loans 90 days overdue or in the process of liquidation in the Farm Credit System, totaled $2.2 billion as of March 31, 1984. Of course, this only partially indicates the scope of commercially held stressed debt.

Mr. President, problem farm loans are now seriously affecting the capital base of agricultural banks—available capital averaged 9 percent of loans and other assets in agricultural banks at the end of 1983—and a rather small, but growing segment of the Nation's approximately 4,300 agricultural banks, with at least 25 percent of loan portfolio in agricultural loans, is coming under severe financial stress. In 1983, average loan losses at agricultural banks reached 93 percent—up 375 percent from the average of loan losses during the 10 years 1970-79; 7 percent of agricultural banks show a negative return on equity for 1983; and agricultural banks accounted for a substantial part of the almost 200-percent increase in the formal enforcement orders issued in 1983 by the FDIC and Comptroller of the Currency. Perhaps 10 percent of the Nation's agricultural banks are experiencing severe stress, and a substantially larger number of problem loan classifications and incidences of enforcement orders, issued by the bank regulators thus far in 1984, indicate a seriously deteriorating situation for agricultural banks per se.

Mr. President, as the Members of this body know, there is currently no certainty that the Senate will be able to take up H.R. 5743 before we adjourn this week. It is for this reason, and the fact that passage of the fiscal year 1985 agriculture appropriations bill would accomplish the same end, had it been considered prior to the supplemental bill, that I join in offering this amendment today. I believe it critically important that we move on this particular item immediately in an effort to assist our hard-pressed agriculture sector.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am prepared to recommend that this amendment be accepted. Let me explain that the funds made available by this amendment are not additional to the amount provided in the agriculture appropriation bill for 1985. We had included this $650 million guaranteed operating loan program in the agriculture appropriations bill for fiscal year 1985. The Committee on Appropriations, in discussing this supplemental, instructed that an amendment be offered on the floor when the agriculture appropriations bill was brought up, to say that the money would be made available immediately upon enactment to permit the refinancing of loans and to provide other benefits under this loan program to farmers throughout America who might find themselves in situations where they were threatened with the foreclosure of a loan that had been designated as a troubled or problem loan.

I am suggesting that we go ahead and put this authority in the supplemental appropriations bill. If this provision is adopted in conference and signed by the President, then the money could be made available immediately. Placing the provision in this bill provides an alternative funding mechanism, should the agriculture appropriations bill be delayed for any reason. In that case, a program would be in place, and the program would be deleted from the fiscal year 1985 agriculture appropriations bill in that event. I am hoping the Senate will approve this change in the supplemental, and I recommend that it be accepted.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is cleared on this side of the aisle.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I am supporting this amendment, I cannot say that all on this side of the aisle are, however.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Kentucky for his leadership on this matter. I am very proud to join with him as an original cosponsor of this amendment. I also express my thanks to the Senator from Oregon and the senior Senator from Mississippi, the chairman and ranking member of the full committee, and in particular Senator COCHRAN, the chairman of the subcommittee. He has worked so diligently to assist us on this matter both as chairman of the Subcommittee on Agriculture Appropriations and also a fellow member of the Agriculture Committee. There is an urgent need for this amendment.

This amendment will provide $650 million in loan guarantees for the regular operating program for fiscal year 1985.

Despite the general signs of economic recovery in our Nation, there is one sector that shows no signs of recovery—agriculture. In fact, just last week, the Commerce Department announced that all sectors of the economy experienced a 2.5-percent gain in personal income, excluding the farm sector. As usual, the farm sector is the first to fall during economic decline, the hardest hit, and the last to recover.

According to FmHA data, 98,014, or 36 percent of its farm loan borrowers were behind scheduled payments on April 30, 1984. In dollar terms, $5.8 billions was delinquent, or 24 percent of the outstanding principal owed by all borrowers under FmHA's major individual farm loan programs, on March 31, 1984, compared to $4.5 billion, 20 percent, 1 year earlier.

The number of foreclosures and bankruptcies in 1983 rose over 1982. FmHA data shows that more than 15,000 FmHA farm borrowers were forced to liquidate their operations during the past 2 years. In the first 7 months of fiscal year 1984, 4,306 FmHA borrowers went out of business. If this trend continues, a record number of FmHA borrowers could go out of business this year.

In my home State of Oklahoma, we have seen a 50-percent increase in the number of Farmers Home Administration foreclosures since 1982. Federal land bank foreclosures in Oklahoma have increased 37 percent since mid-1983.

In overseeing record numbers of farm liquidatons since 1981, FmHA has taken possession of thousands of family farm operations and currently has over 2,000 farms in inventory. Prior to 1981, the number of farms held by FmHA had never exceeded 260. The farms now held by FmHA consist of about 418,000 acres having a value of $440 million.

The Farm Credit Administration, in 1983, reported that Production Credit Association loan losses for the previous 3 years exceeded the combined losses for the preceding 47 years. In Governor Wilkinson's annual report to Congress submitted earlier this year, he stated that PCA's in 1983 were subject to the worst financial pressure since the 1930's. The estimated $240 million to $250 million in losses sustained by PCA's in 1983 represents, in 1 year, approximately 40 percent of all losses throughout the 50-year history of the farm credit system. Further, the Governor told us that the system will likely face more difficulty in 1984 than in 1983.

In addition, a survey conducted by the Independent Bankers Association of America found that, among its mostly rural member banks, the lenders expect about 17 percent of their present farm borrowers to be unable to meet all of their loan payments in 1984.

A survey conducted by the agricultural division of the American Bankers Association found that nearly 66 percent of the bankers surveyed estimated that the net worth of their farm borrowers declined during 1983.

As foreclosures and liquidations have increased in Oklahoma, land values have fallen. Nonirrigated land values declined 11.5 percent between April 1982 and April 1984. Irrigated land values declined by 19 percent during the same period.

The prospects for recovery in the agricultural sector do not look good. The Department of Agriculture projects that net cash income for farmers in 1984 will decline substantially from the 1983 estimated range of $37 billion to $41 billion. After adjusting for inflation, net cash income to farmers in 1984 could be down by more than 25 percent.

U.S. farm export volume is expected to decline in fiscal year 1984, for the fourth consecutive year. The reduced volume of shipments has weakened market prices for many agricultural commodities.

The outlook for agriculture is bleak and we must act now if we are to prevent a total collapse of this vital sector of our economy. Americans need only look back at history to learn a simple, invaluable lesson. It was the collapse of agriculture, leading to dispersal sales of land and equipment which signaled the start of the last depression. The domino effect which would result from a collapse of agriculture threatens our entire economy in the 1980's.

There are many who say that the American economy is recovering from the recession. I remind my colleagues of one simple fact, there will be no recovery unless the agriculture sector also recovers. We must remember that the strength of this Nation lies in agriculture. The Nation's largest industry is agriculture, with farm assets totaling over $1,050 billion and representing approximately 70 percent of the capital assets of all manufacturing corporations in the United States. Agriculture is also the Nation's largest employer, with 22 million people working in some phase of agriculture. Approximately 1 out of 5 jobs in private enterprise is dependent upon a thriving agricultural sector. Agriculture generate about 20 percent of the gross national product. As is obvious, the agricultural sector must be put back on its feet.

The immediate future does not look good for agriculture. Continued financial stress for some farmers will keep the number of producers leaving the sector above average in 1984, according to the USDA publication "Agricultural Outlook." Farm debt is forecast to rise by 3 percent. Greater demand for operating and intermediate-term credit because of expanded acreages will spur the increase.

Mr. President, during this time of low prices and tightening credit, it is imperative that we make certain that farmers are provided with ample credit. More and more farmers are coming to Farmers Home Administration due to PCA's Federal land banks, and commercial banks' tight credit policies. These farmers are those who have never needed Federal assistance before. Now, they are in need of credit assistance. I remind my colleagues that the Farmers Home Administration was established to aid farmers who, through no fault of their own, are experiencing temporary difficulties. Now is precisely the time Farmers Home Administration should be there to help. Yet, over the past few years, an inadequate amount of funds have been available and due to FmHA's policy of serving current borrowers first, many creditworthy farmers have been left out in the cold.

I support this amendment because I believe we must aid these producers through the current rough times. The FmHA is designed to provide credit assistance to farmers facing temporary difficulties through no fault of their own. The assistance provided is in the form of loan guarantees or insured loans that must be repaid with interest at a rate that is tied to the Government's cost of borrowing.

The credit crisis we are facing today is real, Mr. President. Several weeks ago, the Sunday Oklahoman published a series of articles concerning farm foreclosures. I ask unanimous consent that the articles be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will carefuly examine these articles and see the effect these foreclosures are having upon the economy of Oklahoma. In view of the econmic condition confronting the Nation's farmers and the impact this ultimately will have upon the Nation's economy as a whole. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

FARM FORECLOSURES POSE LEGAL, LAND-USE ISSUES IN STATE—QUESTION IS WHAT'S GOVERNMENT GOING TO DO WITH ALL THE LAND?

(By Kevin Laval)

Foreclosures of farm land in Oklahoma have increased dramatically during 1984, but observers of the state's agriculture industry disagree about the public policy implications of land lost by family farmers.

Forecasters cite a budding recovery in the state's economy generally. But state and national observers of agriculture say the rate of farm failures is considerably higher than normal and does not appear to have peaked for the immediate future.

Nellie Perry, a Hobart lawyer who specializes in farm bankruptcy cases, says loss of farms to foreclosure is disturbing to the nation as well as to the respective farmers.

"We believe the federal government is the largest landowner in this country (Kiowa) at this time," she said. "So much of the land has been deeded back to the government and its lending agencies.

"To me, the question is: 'What's the government going to do with the land?' Right now, we don't know, and they don't know."

Spokesmen for the two largest single lenders to Oklahoma farmers say their institutions' policy is to try to sell land acquired by foreclosure to other farmers. Although the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) reports having acquired a historic total of such land, a spokesman says the amount is not yet cause for alarm.

An official of the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) upset some farm state legislators two weeks ago by saying that the rate of farm failures nationwide this year should be no greater than normal. The Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City disagrees, saying a survey of banks in seven Midwestern states suggests the rate this year will be two or three times the average.

Marla Borowski, a researcher at the Kansas City Fed, said the rate in Oklahoma, which she would not disclose, is substantially lower than that in other states in the bank's district. But she said it remains above normal for Oklahoma.

Lenders report they are acquiring Oklahoma farm land through foreclosure. But their reaction to that fact is less worrisome than that of Mrs. Perry and two other lawyers, Jon Ford of Enid and Randall Allen of Oklahoma City, who also specialize in farm bankruptcies.

"The total of acres we've acquired is probably higher now than it's ever been, but is accumulated over the years," said Frank Evans, director of the FmHA in Oklahoma.

Evans said the FmHA foreclosed on 17 Oklahoma farm mortgages in 1982, 32 in 1983 and 34 to date in 1984. He said the agency's inventory of farms acquired totals 86, comprising 24,590 acres.

Distributed evenly across the state, Evans said, the agency's inventory would equal one farm of about 300 acres in each of Oklahoma's 77 counties.

Foreclosures also increased in recent years for the Federal Land Bank of Wichita, whose district encompasses Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado and New Mexico. Monte Reese, vice president of the Wichita bank, said that institution's mortgage foreclosures in the four states totaled 381 in the middle of 1983, 508 at the end of 1983 and 608 at the end of June.

Reese said his institution's current inventory of farms acquired through foreclosure numbers 95.

A spokesman for the Federal Land Bank in Enid said that office's foreclosures in the four counties it serves greatly increased during the last two years. He would not disclose the exact number of foreclosures or the total of acres acquired.

The scope of land lost from production may not be as great as the FmHA's statistics might suggest. As a lender of last resort, the FmHA's percent of loans in foreclosure and number of farms acquired would figure to be higher than that for other lenders because its borrowers are greater credit risks.

The 86 farms in the FmHA's inventory in Oklahoma is 1.4 percent of its total of real estate mortgagees in the state. But the land bank's 95-farm inventory is only .14 percent of its real estate lendings in its four-state district.

The bank, a private lending cooperative of farmer-owned local land banks, is not a lender of last resort.

Moreover, the FmHA's share of the mortgage market is small. At the end of 1983, the USDA reports, the FmHA was provider of 13.3 percent of the agriculture land loans in the state. Other farm lenders and their percentage of Oklahoma farm mortgages at the end of last year were: Federal Land Bank, 46.7; commercial banks, 8.3; insurance companies, 6.9; and individuals and others, 24.8.

Some economists say agriculture's problems merely reflect an imbalance of fundamental market supply and demand. They say weaker producers should be allowed to fail, arguing that less production will raise prices by better aligning supply and demand.

Mrs. Perry, Reese and others say that explanation of the difficulties on the farm is simplistic, although they acknowledged that commodity surpluses are troublesome.

Nonetheless, Mrs. Perry said loss of a particular farmer, though painful for him, is not the most significant issue. She said entrepreneurs can always be found to enter farming when the economics of agriculture are attractive.

The broader question, she said, is whether farm land can always be found.

Evans said the FmHA, which provides farmers more liberal credit terms than conventional lenders, tries to sell to other farmers the land it acquires. He said the amount of land the agency has gained does not particularly concern him.

Evans said good land in the FmHA's inventory sells well.

Jack Craig, Oklahoma's commissioner of agriculture, said the foreclosure rate is not lost on his agency.

"That's always one of my concerns," Craig said. "I've been trying to figure out where we could help out."

Craig said Massachusetts, a state much smaller and more densely populated than Oklahoma, has experimented with a program to preserve agriculture land. He said that state has paid owners the difference between what they paid for the land and what developers are offering for the property to buy it for non-farm use.

If landowners accept the state's offer, they include in the deed a stipulation that the property will remain agriculture land. Craig said other Northeastern states also have adopted land-use policies intended to protect agriculture production.

Craig said most Oklahoma farm land is different because it is not threatened by urban sprawl.

But Mrs. Perry said the amount of land that may be lost to farming is likely to increase.

"We've been saying the same cliche around here for two years—that we've only seen the tip of the iceberg," she said. "We're still saying it."

Reese agrees that the immediate prospects for farming are bleak, although he said the delinquency rate on his institution's loans has been improving since the first of the year. He also said the quiet prosperity of established farmers is overshadowed by the often-traumatic difficulties of newer, debt-ridden producers.

Reese said the bank is not yet concerned about its inventory of acquired farms, which it tries to sell to other farmers.

"You'd like to not own any properties," he said. "But there's never been a month during the six years I've worked here when we didn't own property.

"If conditions worsened so that we had enough properties that it would be a depressant on the market, we'd have to take a hard look at what we're doing."

ECONOMIC DISASTER LOOMS, LAWYER SAYS

(By Kevin Laval)

Beset by rising costs and falling income, Oklahoma farmers seeking to salvage their operations through bankruptcy reorganization are now vexed by declining real estate values, three lawyers who specialize in farm bankruptcies say.

The three say their caseload of farm bankruptcies is high and rising. The fundamental problem, they say, is that some farmers do not earn enough money to pay both their operating expenses and interest on their loans.

Farmers may be forced to accept drastic changes in bankruptcy reorganization. Many sell land; some must part with unprofitable or marginal segments of their business.

But the lawyers say others are virtually precluded from reorganizing. As the value of farm land fell, farmers who pledged all of their property as security for loans discovered that their libabilities exceeded their assets.

The result is that no collateral remains to obtain financing necessary for even a smaller, restructured farm.

"All of the sudden, we have the makings of an economic disaster that I think will be far worse a year from now," said Jon Ford, an Enid lawyer and farmer. "The rate of bankruptcies has increased dramatically the last 12 months.

"I think the actual liquidation of farms is much higher than we realize."

Hobart lawyer Nellie Perry said her husband, lawyer John M. Perry, filed between five and 10 farm bankruptcy cases during the first 20 years he was a lawyer.

Mrs. Perry said she assumed the firm's farm bankruptcy work when she began practicing law, two years ago. During those two years, she said, she has worked in 24 farm cases.

Randall Allen, of the Oklahoma City firm Sullivan, Graves, Combs & Densmore, said this year's rate of farm filings is greater than last year's phenomenal rate. Ford said his firm's filings during the last 12 months do not reflect what he suspects are many farms that simply allow creditors to foreclose.

The three lawyers say the principal challenge for contemporary farmers is to pay debt service, or interest owned on loans. Because of the price of land and equipment, a farmer's debt service often is great.

But operating costs increased in recent years as crop and livestock prices declined. Many farmers do not earn enough from sales to pay both operating expenses and iterest.

Statistics compiled by the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) show that prices received by farmers nationwide for their products rose 34 percent from 1977 through 1983. For the same years, prices paid for interest and operating expenses rose 61 percent.

Moreover, the disparity between income and costs worsened during the last three years. The USDA reports that the trend rose for most expenses since 1981.

But statistics from both the USDA and the Oklahoma Crop and Livestock Reporting Service show that prices received for most farm products declined from 1981 levels.

The attorneys say most of their farm bankruptcy clients try to remain farmers by using Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code. It provides protection from creditors' claims while the farmer seeks to reorganize his farm into an operation that will produce profits for paying debts.

Mrs. Perry said she advises clients to reduce the size of their farm as much as possible. She also suggests that at least one adult member of the farm family get a non-farm job to diversify the family's sources of income.

Allen said he also frequently advises clients to sell some of their land. Generally, he said, he encourages the farmer strengthen his profitable operations and reduce or eliminate his unprofitable businesses.

But the three lawyers said reorganizing farmers has been complicated by depreciation of farm land. According to the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City, the per-acre price of non-irrigated land in Oklahoma fell 11.5 percent from the first quarter of 1982 to the first quarter of this year.

Also during that 24 months, the Fed reports prices fell 19 percent for irrigated land and 5 percent for ranch land.

The USDA reports that land prices in Oklahoma fell 5 percent from April 1982 to April 1984.

Ford said one of his clients paid $230,000 for 240 acres of land a few years ago. Two weeks ago, Ford said, the land sold for $112,000.

Mrs. Perry said some land in western Oklahoma has declined in value 30 to 40 percent. "No land that I have seen has held its value," she said.

Loss of equity in the land affects more than the farmer's net worth.

Allen said all of the property of many newer farmers was pledged as security for loans to buy that property. As land appreciated during the 1970s, farmers used the equity, or the appreciated value of the land, as security for other loans.

Allen said farmers also were encouraged to borrow against their land equity by the oil and gas boom of 1981-82. He said income from energy production royalties provided additional cash and further increased land values.

That supplemental income has been credited for a lower rate of farm liquidations in Oklahoma than in other states, although much of it evaporated with the bust of the most recent oil boom.

As land became less valuable to energy explorers, its price declined. Allen said the property of many farmers who borrowed to the hilt is worth less than it was when it was pledged as collateral.

Chapter 11 allows farmers to force lenders to reduce the secured portion of their notes to the present value of the security. The portion of the note that exceeds the collateral value becomes an unsecured debt.

But that scenario provides no unencumbered property for securing new lendings for equipment, supplies and services needed to operate the reorganized farm.

Mrs. Perry said the reorganized farmer is further hampered by a $5,000 limit imposed by the Oklahoma Legislature this spring on the value of machinery that is exempt from creditors' claims.

Allen said his firm is extremely selective in accepting farms for reorganization. Ford said his farm Chapter 11 cases appear to be succeeding.

Mrs. Perry said reorganized clients who can survive the short term are faring better than those dependent on immediate price improvement that has not developed.

"They usually come to us way after there's any reorganizing we can do for them," she said. "They don't want to know they're losing money. That's why many of them don't want a bookkeeper."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator ZORINSKY be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment (No. 3643) was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3644

(Purpose: To provide additional funds to carry out Part B of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] proposes an amendment numbered 3644.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 45, between lines 22 and 23, insert the following:

DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES ASSISTANCE

For an additional amount for carrying out Part B of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act, $387,000.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this amendment adds $387,000 to the appropriations level for the University Affiliated Facilities—UAF's—and Satellite Centers of the Developmental Disabilities Program bringing it up to the authorization ceiling levels as accepted by the House and Senate in Public Law 98-221. This addback is essential in order to help provide services for the 3.9 million developmentally disabled people of our Nation.

The Developmental Disabilities Program was originally passed to coordinate and furnish services where necessary for the more severely handicapped persons in America. Developmental disabilities are defined as severe, chronic handicaps attributed to mental or physical impairments manifested before the age of 22 which cause substantial limitations in at least three areas of major life activity and result in the need for services over an extended period of time. Possible limitations include self-care, receptive and expressive language, learning, mobility, self-direction, capacity for independent living and economic independence.

Developmental disability legislation provides a vehicle to help eliminate gaps in services with emphasis on providing them to rural and underserved regions. Although the program is divided into four major components consisting of State grants, protection and advocacy, special projects and university affiliated facilities with each having a major role or function in the provision of services to developmentally disabled persons, the UAF's were the only program to receive fiscal year 1984 appropriations less than fiscal year 1983 levels. Thus my amendment only adds funding for the UAF's.

The University Affiliated Facilities Program is integral in meeting the service needs of individuals with developmental disabilities. UAF's and satellite centers are the only providers of interdisciplinary training and information for the professionals, paraprofessionals, parents, and volunteers providing care, treatment, and services. The UAF's also provide major demonstration sites for testing more effective and efficient methods of service delivery so that technology can be transferred to services agencies in the community which provide on-going care, treatment, and services.

Grants are made to university affiliated facilities and satellite centers to assist them in administering and operating demonstration facilities for the provision of services to developmentally disabled persons. They also furnish interdisciplinary training programs for the personnel needed to provide specialized and generic services to handicapped individuals. This training promotes primary and secondary prevention of disabilities and makes possible the placement of handicapped individuals in public programs and community settings. These facilities also provide technical assistance to State agencies, as well as dissemination of information and applied research.

The Developmental Disabilities Program money also serves as a catalyst for generating other funds. It provides the University Affiliated Facilities with an administrative base on which to build the services and training programs needed within specific States and regions. Without HHS support, this money would not be available.

The Administration on Developmental Disabilities [ADD] funds 36 UAF's and 5 satellites. In 1981, the network served 67,000 severely disabled children who, for the most part, were referred to UAF's for treatment and diagnosis unavailable elsewhere. The satellites were created to bring services to the rural and other unserved areas. Last year, an ad hoc working group under the auspices of ADD—[HHS]—recommended that additional UAF's and satellite centers be established in geographical areas not currently served. Obviously, without additional funds, new UAF's and satellite centers cannot be created.

The 1984 Senate appropriations language earmarked $35,000 of the UAF appropriation to conduct feasibilities studies for new satellite centers because the UAF/satellite distribution is geographically inequitable. ADD responded with awarding grants for seven feasibility studies at a cost of $7,000 each for a total of nearly $50,000. Since this money was not originally budgeted and a conference committee cut the fiscal year 1984 UAF appropriation level to that below fiscal year 1983, cuts had to be made in UAF core grants. In addition, the current 36 UAF's and 5 satellites have not received any significant increases in funding since they were established. In a study conducted by the Congressional Research Service, the constant dollar value of UAF appropriations has declined by 29.4 percent. Without even cost-of-living increases, UAF's and satellites cannot even maintain their high performance of achievement let alone hope to grow and expand their services.

UAF appropriations

	Millions
1977	$5.25
1978	6.5
1979	7.4
1980	7
1981	6.49
1982	7.2
1983	7.5
1984	7.4

I urge my colleagues in the Senate to vote for my amendment to increase fiscal year 1984 appropriation funding for the university affiliated facilities and the satellite centers from $7.413 to $7.8 million. Adding this small amount of money will help them more adequately serve the 3.9 million developmentally disabled persons living across the entire Nation.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am proud to join Senator HATCH as principal sponsor of this amendment to increase the funding for the University Affiliated Facilities and Satellite Centers under the Developmental Disabilities Act. The $387,000 added by this amendment will bring the UAF Program up to the full authorization ceiling specified in Public Law 98-221.

The UAF Program provides interdisciplinary training for personnel who work with developmentally disabled individuals, innovative services demonstration, and biomedical, behavioral, and programmatic research. Without this program, we cannot continue to increase the quality of services for our 3.9 million citizens who are severely handicapped which in turn increases the quality of their lives.

This is a very modest amendment to restore to the UAF Program the cuts it received this year. I urge the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this amendment is cleared by the subcommittee chairman and by the managers of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment (No. 3644) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, on page 27, beginning at line 17, there is an item relating to the National Institute of Building Sciences. Now, what has happened is that this group, which, as I understand it, is a nongovernmental group—it does not consist of any Presidential or congressional appointees; it is a private group—was set up, as I understand it, to draw building codes for the country. This was back in 1974.

It was further my understanding that this group was to become self-supporting after a certain period. Instead, this budget provides a supplemental appropriation for the remainder of this fiscal year of a quarter of a million dollars. That is all right; I am not going to argue about that, whatever it is for.

But thereafter it follows that there is an entitlement program set up for this group whereby it will receive up to $500,000 a year. That is half a million dollars a year in perpetuity. They are not supervised by anybody. I know that the Appropriations Committee will take a look at them now and then, but I think this is bad business.

I would like an explanation by someone as to what this group does. If it is a legitimate organization then let us make an annual appropriation for them. If it is not, then let them go on their way and support themselves. So whoever is cognizant of what this group does, I would appreciate hearing more about it.

Mr. GARN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. GARN. This is not my night. It seems that everybody has an amendment to my section of the bill, so once again I am forced to get up to respond.

The National Institute of Building Sciences was set up many years ago to be a cooperation between Government agencies, HUD primarily with housing, with the private sector, with the labor unions, and trade people to attempt to come up with uniform building codes to improve the efficiency of production and construction of new homes and specifically work toward uniformity of building codes so that you were not having differences from one local jurisdiction to another, to look at performance standards so that rather than having old archaic building codes that say you must have 6 inches of this or 4 inches of that, have performance standards rather than absolutes.

It was the original intention that it would become self-sustaining through contributions, and a good part of their operations can come from contributions from various groups.

It was the intention a couple of years ago that that appropriation would be the final one but there was a recession and great difficulty in the savings and loan business and in the construction business, which I think everybody knows went flat on its back. Hundreds of thousands of trades people were put out of work, and hundreds of homebuilders and construction people were hurt. As a result, the private sector contributions did not come in as they anticipated. So they were not able to become self-sustaining. I told them, in any event, that there would be no further appropriations, that I felt there was a commitment to become self-sustaining.

Over the period of the last year, we have been negotiating and finally came up with a solution that was very painstakingly worked out and agreed to by a lot of people. Rather than continue annual appropriations, this $250,000 would be the very last, and then we would set up this trust fund at the Treasury.

The agreement is very specific and in writing, that they would continue to have the Government input from the interest of that trust fund and would be required to continue to seek private contributions to match.

So that is where we are. I think it is a good solution to a difficult problem. I opposed going back into the annual appropriations, and they agreed in writing, with a letter to me and other members of the committee, that they would not seek any additional appropriations after this one and that they would be bound by living off the interest from that trust fund, and even the interest is limited. If the trust fund earned more than specified for them, it would be returned to the Treasury.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I have some trouble with this. Am I correct in believing that this item was not requested by the administration?

Mr. GARN. That is correct. It was not originally requested by the administration. I have no official position from them, but they are aware of the compromise that was worked out.

Mr. CHAFEE. And it is also not in the House bill?

Mr. GARN. That is correct, it is not.

Mr. CHAFEE. Why is this group so special that they come around and bitterly complain and are unable to raise the money they were meant to have raised, and they can come in and get $250,000?

As I say, let them have that. We will not complain. But then they get what, in effect, is an entitlement program in perpetuity—namely, the income from $5 million, or $500,000, forever. Why is that right?

Mr. GARN. I do not think it is fair to characterize it as coming in and complaining bitterly, and so on. This was a painstakingly worked out agreement; and it was felt that for them to continue to be successful, they needed a partnership between Government and the private sector. They specifically needed HUD input, because the implementation of many of these codes is in HUD projects. I think NIBS has been successful and deserves to continue. I believe this is a better route to go than to get back on an annual appropriations basis.

Mr. CHAFEE. Is there a sunset to this? Does this end at any time?

Mr. GARN. There is no specific sunset; but, as the Senator knows, Congress, if it desires in the future, can certainly change it.

Mr. CHAFEE. Who is going to check to see what these folks are up to?

Mr. GARN. The Banking Committee and the HUD-Independent Agency Subcommittee will have oversight, to make certain that the agreement in writing is kept and that they live up to their part of that agreement.

Mr. CHAFEE. What would the Senator's reaction be to a sunset provision?

Mr. GARN. I would oppose a sunset. There are a lot of parties involved, and I cannot speak for all of them. I can speak only for myself. I would not like to upset the applecart now and have them come and say, "That is not what we agreed to," and request an annual appropriation.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the hour is late. I simply say that I do not think this is a very good arrangement. Somebody comes around and gets a project set up that is meant to terminate, but they cannot seem to get their funding. So they ask us to cover their deficit, which we generously do for a quarter of a million dollars; and, without any authorization or appropriation, following this procedure, they will receive a half million dollars a year in perpetuity. I think it is bad business.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAFEE. I yield.

Mr. GARN. I suggest that if the Senator from Rhode Island could have served on the Banking Committee, as I sincerely desired him to do, he could have been part of the negotiations.

Mr. CHAFEE. I would like to have been on the committee, but there was no opening. There was no room at the inn, and I was unable to stay. I had to leave.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield for a question?

Mr. CHAFEE. I yield.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I commend the Senator from Rhode Island for raising this point. The amounts involved were first a quarter of a million dollars and $500,000 a year. As a matter of fact, does the bill not actually provide for an appropriation of $5 million for this National Institute of Building Sciences trust fund?

Mr. GARN. It does provide $5 million to set up the trust fund. The $500,000 would come from interest if the interest rate were 10 percent.

Mr. METZENBAUM. But it is another $5 million from the National Treasury to put into a fund.

Is it not a fact that the President of the United States is the one who has been talking about private groups picking up the tab for their responsibility and making charitable contributions? This is just a business organization that is involved, is it not?

Mr. GARN. No; it is not just a business organization. As a matter of fact, since 1974 it has been in the private sector—labor unions, tradespeople who work under these building codes. It was set up by Congress to receive annual appropriations by Congress until this year.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Does the chairman of the Banking Committee know of any other instance in which we have appropriated money for a group similar to this?

Mr. GARN. No; I am not familiar with any identical to this. I simply have not researched it. The $5 million is not spent, and that is the reason why it was set up in that way, so that they would only derive income from that trust fund.

Mr. CHAFEE. The chairman of the subcommittee says that it is a partnership of Government, business, and industry. I noticed, as the Senator mentioned, that the administration is not for this.

Mr. GARN. I did not say they were not for it. I said they did not request it.

Mr. CHAFEE. That is right.

Who is on the board of this group? Who runs this operation?

Mr. GARN. I do not have a listing.

Mr. CHAFEE. I do not mean the individuals, but is it anybody from Government?

Mr. GARN. I was not aware that this was going to be brought up, or I could have prepared to have a listing by name of those who serve on the board.

Mr. CHAFEE. I am not interested in names. Is anybody from the Federal Government on the board? It is my impression that there is not. Am I correct in that?

Mr. GARN. I am not aware that there is anybody directly on the board. HUD has been involved in this process.

Mr. CHAFEE. I am informed—and I might be wrong—that it is strictly a business and labor group that makes up this board.

Mr. GARN. As I said, HUD is not represented on the board itself.

Mr. CHAFEE. We have been very generous around this place with the building industry lately. I recall when we put through a special extension of the depreciation schedule for them. They should have a lot of money. I do not see why they cannot support this thing themselves; $5 million for those people is nothing.

Mr. GARN. Again, let us not misunderstand.

Mr. CHAFEE. Make it $500,000, because it is the income from the $5 million.

AMENDMENT NO. 3645

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] proposes an amendment numbered 3625.

Beginning with page 27, line 23, strike out all through page 28, line 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, we have discussed this a little bit. If there is some kind of sunset provision on this, that would appeal to me.

I know that the chairman of the subcommittee was not anxious to enter that.

Do I hear any answers to the bidding here? How about the chairman of the full committee?

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. [Mr. SIMPSON]. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I pose the question to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee about a sunset provision here so that at least this thing would end within some foreseeable time and if he wants to suggest a figure that is certainly short of 10 years and if he wants to come down toward something like 5 years that will be acceptable to me.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island to put a sunset provision of 5 years.

Mr. CHAFEE. I suppose if that is agreeable as a procedural matter perhaps we could go on any other amendments and redraw this and come back to it in a satisfactory fashion. Unless someone else in the Chamber has a different view, I take the 5 years.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, may I just suggest that the Senator has the right to modify his amendment if he wishes to modify it at this time so we could finish it and move on. I would reluctantly agree to accept the 5-year sunset, and if the Senator would modify his amendment at this time.

Mr. CHAFEE. The only reason is we do have to spend time with a quorum call so I would just as soon pass over it and come back to it.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield as moment, I think if the Senator will withdraw the amendment and redraft it at that point it would be the simplest procedure we could follow, and then accept the amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. And meanwhile go on with something else?

Mr. HATFIELD. We will go ahead and the Senator withdraw his amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. That is fair enough.

Mr. President, I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right. The amendment is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT NO. 3646

(Purpose: For additional funding for the International Atomic Energy Agency)

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. PERCY], for himself, Mr. GLENN, Mr. MATHIAS, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. DANFORTH, and Mr. MCCLURE, proposes an amendment numbered 3646.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 68, line 4, beginning with the figure "$40,000,000" strike all that follows through line 6 to the period, and insert in lieu thereof the following: $42,050,000: Provided, That of this amount $40,000,000 shall be available only for payment to the International Fund for Agricultural Development: Provided further, That of this amount $2,050,000 shall be available only for payment to the International Atomic Energy Agency: Provided further, That of the amount made available for the International Atomic Energy Agency under this chapter and the funds made available for the International Atomic Energy Agency in Public Law 98-151, not less than $7,000,000 shall be available only for the safeguards program.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, the amendment I am offering would add $2.050 million to the amount appropriated for international organizations and programs, and would earmark these funds so that they would be available for payment only to the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. President, I want to emphasize the importance the administration has placed on this request. I have a letter from the Acting Secretary of State, copies of which Senator GLENN and I have circulated to all Members, which says in part:

The IAEA is crucial to our support of the international nonproliferation regime and our efforts to strengthen safeguards against the diversion of peaceful nuclear materials.

It further states that:

A reduction in the U.S. commitment at this time, particularly just prior to the upcoming 1985 NPT Review Conference, would signal developing countries that the U.S. will not stand by its obligations under the NPT.

Mr. President, I know there is strong sentiment in the Senate that we should do everything we can to prevent the spread of nuclear explosives around the world. Many of us have studied this vital problem, and have come to the conclusion that there is no more pressing concern, no more vital interest than reducing the threat of nuclear holocaust. And when nations that do not now possess nuclear explosives obtain them, the odds of such a holocaust increase. The risk that nuclear weapons will be used in anger in some unstable region of the world may be much greater than the risk of a nuclear war between the superpowers.

This is the threat of nuclear proliferation. It is not new. It has been with us since we first crossed the threshold into the nuclear age. For more than 30 years, we have realized both the promise and the peril of nuclear energy. But right at the outset, our leaders wisely and urgently explored how best to contain the peril, so that the benefits of this new energy source could be more widely shared. That is why the United States first proposed the creation of an International Atomic Energy Agency, and worked to establish it. It is why—ever since—this country has supported the Agency.

The fundamental purpose of the IAEA, as laid out in article II of its organic statute, is to accelerate and enlarge the contribution of atomic energy to peace, health, and prosperity throughout the world. It shall ensure—the statute continues—so far as it is able, that assistance provided by it or at its request or under its supervision or control is not used in such a way as to further any military purposes.

The vital task of deterring any diversion of nuclear materials into military applications is thus written into the Agency's fundamental mission. And the principal program which fulfills this mission is the safeguards program, a system of recordkeeping, audits, and inspections. Safeguards create risks of discovery and action by the IAEA itself, by the United Nations, and by nations which have a vital interest in preventing the spread of nuclear explosives.

The facts are, however, that the safeguards mission is large, and the resources the IAEA has to accomplish that mission are small. For instance, the Agency recently reported that in 1983, there were 455 facilities under IAEA safeguards or containing safeguarded material. But in 1983, the safeguards staff of the IAEA was only 398.

The volumes of nuclear materials under safeguards are also large. Plutonium and highly enriched uranium are the raw materials for nuclear explosives. In 1983, the Agency maintained safeguards on 11 metric tons of highly enriched uranium, 6.8 metric tons of separated plutonium, and another 92.9 metric tons of plutonium in spent fuel. The figures for low enriched uranium and source material are far higher. Although the safeguards system is far from perfect, I hope my colleagues understand that it is the best means available for assuring that significant quantities of this material are not diverted into clandestine military programs. We cannot afford to back away from our commitment to an effective Safeguards Program—the risks for our own security and that of millions of people in many regions of the world are simply too great.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the safeguards program is vital to the successful operation of both the Treaty on the Nonproliferation of Nuclear Weapons—perhaps the most successful and certainly the most widely adhered to Arms Limitation Treaty in history—and the Nuclear Nonproliferation Act of 1978. For that reason, I have drafted my amendment to ensure that not less than $7 million of the amount appropriated in fiscal year 1984 will go to the Safeguards Program.

Mr. President, the Congress of the United States has frequently urged the President to give greater support to nonproliferation programs, and to the IAEA in particular. When this subject arose last year, I discussed the enlightened role the Congress has played—from ratification of the Agency's statute in 1956, and passage of the IAEA Participation Act shortly thereafter, to ratification of the NPT and passage of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Act in 1978. Our commitment to the Agency has helped it carry out these vital program.

This year we are at another crossroads. In January, the People's Republic of China became a member. Next year, there will be a conference to review the Nonproliferation Treaty. As matters stand, the nuclear weapons powers, including the United States and the Soviet Union, may be criticized by some for failing to negotiate reductions in the world's stockpiles of nuclear arms, as called for in article VI of the treaty. As one Senator, I earnestly hope we can achieve progress on this vital matter even before the Review Conference begins. But I certainly hope we will not signal the nations of the world that we are now willing to reduce our support for the Agency which provides us with the best means available for deterring illegal diversion of nuclear materials.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this small addition of funds. The IAEA is a small Agency, and its task is large. The amount of funds added by this amendment is small, but it is an important investment in our long-term security. I certainly hope my colleagues will approve it.

Mr. President, I wish to point out that this Agency has the responsibility of policing the whole world for safeguards. It has a force less than the force of the police department of Washington, DC, substantially less.

I yield at this time to my distinguished colleague, Senator GLENN, who has worked with me through the years on nuclear nonproliferation matters.

We authored together the law that is now the law of the land and on what I think is the paramount issue of our time: are we going to prevent other nations from going the nuclear weaponry route? That is the task, that is the job, that is the direction of Congress. This is the Agency, the only international Agency that can police that effort.

I am happy to yield to my distinguished colleague from Ohio.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I appreciate the courtesy of the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

We have worked for a long time on these matters together, on nuclear nonproliferation, and the Nuclear Nonproliferation Act of 1978 was a notable example.

We have worked together in the past to increase funding for the International Atomic Energy Agency, the IAEA.

I say to my colleagues, without giving a lengthy speech at this hour of the evening, that the IAEA is a very thin line of protection and it needs all the help we can give it. It is an information-gathering agency that performs materials accounting and inspection at nuclear facilities. The results of these activities are given to the rest of the world so we can know what is going on in this most important area. We can talk all night about nuclear freezes and whether we are going to enforce our export laws and all these different things, but it means little unless we have the information, the data base, on which to base our judgments.

That is what IAEA does. It basically gathers the information, monitors these plants, and lets the rest of the world know what is going on, and the American financial contribution to this activity is not all that large.

We are trying to increase it here, as the Senator from Illinois has already outlined.

I urge my colleagues to support this, and I am just sorry it cannot be several times over this amount because that is what we really need, in order to enhance the Agency's technical asssistance and monitoring capability. I urge everyone to support this amendment.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, the amendment being offered by the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee would provide an additional $2,050,000 for the International Atomic Energy Agency. The committee had recommended no funding for this Agency, against the administration's request of $3,686,000—the latter amount was also what the Senator from Illinois was originally going to offer. I was prepared to oppose these additional funds because frankly I had thought the funds provided under the continuing resolution were sufficient, and, furthermore, despite the administration's desire for these additional funds, the Appropriations Committee has been put in a position by the administration on other items under the international organizations and programs account where because of significant reductions recommended in budget requests for the U.N. Development Program and UNICEF—programs very popular in Congress—we have had to add significant amounts to the budget.

I believe it is a game the Department of State plays, and therefore, I am not too anxious to help the State Department add funds for a program which has grown dramatically over the last several years.

In fiscal year 1982 Congress provided $12,750,000. In fiscal year 1983, we provided $14,500,000. And now in the current fiscal year they are suggesting $18,500,000 and for fiscal year 1985 they are proposing $20,500,000. All this at a time when they are recommending huge reductions, as I said, to UNICEF and UNDP.

Mr. President, I will go along with this reduced amount, and I am suggesting that we earmark the total requested for safeguards, which is of primary concern to the Senator from Illinois, but I do not intend to be put in this position again in subsequent appropriations bills

Mr. President, my understanding is that the ranking member of the subcommittee agrees with this, and if there is no objection from the chairman and ranking member of the full committee, I have no objection to accepting this amendment.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the managers of the bill on both sides of the aisle have cleared the amendment and it is acceptable.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise to lend my support, as a cosponsor to this amendment. It will restore reductions in the proposed level of appropriations to the International Atomic Energy Agency; restorations which will strengthen the international nuclear nonproliferation regime. I commend the Senators from Illinois and Ohio for their efforts and leadership in this direction.

This is a vitally important task, and the small voluntary contribution before use, to the International Atomic Energy Agency, is clearly one of the more worthy expenditures in this entire bill. The proliferation of nuclear weapons is among the most serious threats to human life which we face in the world.

We are all familiar with the scenarios of horror raised by the threat of the reckless and needless use of nuclear weapons. We have all heard of these possibilities many times. Much has been written and spoken about them and a great imagination is not indeed in order to realize that such eventuality would be disastrous for the entire human race.

The International Atomic Energy Agency has worked for several years to expand its program of worldwide nuclear safeguards. These measures are intended to ensure that special nuclear material, which could be used in the manufacture of nuclear weapons, is not diverted from peaceful to military weapons uses.

The United States, recognizing the importance of strengthening the effectiveness of such safeguards, has worked with the Agency to transfer its advanced technology in the areas of nuclear material detection, systems analysis, and other relevant fields, to the international organization. The Agency then applies the information, instrumentation and help received from the U.S. Government and other countries, to render more effective its inspections of nuclear facilities in nonweapons states around the world.

I understand that the adequacy of IAEA safeguards has been questioned in the past. While significant improvements have been made in recent years, we cannot afford to slow further technical improvements in these safeguards. Given the enormity of the stakes involved, it is my feeling that maximum assistance should be given to the Agency, in order to help it better perform its task of preventing the further spread of nuclear weapons. I cannot think of a better investment, since the consequences of a failure in the system could be incalculably high.

I wish to point out, in addition, that many of the proposed funds will go, not abroad, but to domestic laboratories which are developing new capabilities and techniques to advance the level of safeguards technology.

For all of these reasons, I urge my colleagues to continue our effort in preventing the spread of nuclear weapons in the world. Indeed, we should make every effort to strengthen the nonproliferation regime in the world, not only for altruistic reasons, but because of our concern for our own safety as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment (No. 3646) was agreed to.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3647

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] for himself and Mr. STEVENS proposes an amendment numbered 3647.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place insert the following:

"REPORT BY THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

"The Secretary of Commerce is directed to submit, within thirty days of the date of enactment of this Act, to the appropriate committees of the Congress a report specifying a proposal to meet the funding obligations of the Fishermen's Guarantee Fund.".

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared by both sides. It is a simple directory amendment. It directs that the Secretary of Commerce will, within 30 days of enactment of this act, submit to the appropriate committees of Congress his plans for meeting the funding obligations for the Fishermen's Guarantee Fund. This has been necessitated by the unfortunate seizure of American fishing vessels. The fund which Congress created in order to reimburse owners in that unfortunate situation currently is without funds.

It simply requires that there be some submission by the Secretary of his plan to meet the obligations imposed by law.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the amendment has been reviewed by both sides of the aisle and it has been cleared and we are willing to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON].

The amendment (No. 3647) was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the Chair and I thank the distinguished manager.

AMENDMENT NO. 3648

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], for himself, Mr. JEPSEN, Mr. ABDNOR, and Mr. PRYOR, proposes an amendment numbered 3648.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

On page 22, line 10, before the period, insert the following: ": Provided further, That the amount of an urban development action grant under section 119 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 may not exceed $15,000,000 and no grantee may receive more than $25,000,000 in such grants during any fiscal year".

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I introduce this amendment which is cosponsored by Senator JEPSEN of Iowa, Senator ABDNOR of South Dakota, and Senator PRYOR of Arkansas.

Mr. President, I want to be perfectly candid and say that this is a fairly controversial amendment. There has already been some opposition to it mentioned to us in private.

Those of us who are sponsoring this amendment feel that the present formula for the distribution of UDAG funds is very unfair to certain segments of the country. Through this amendment we would put a cap on a specific UDAG grant of $15 million and a cap of $25 million for UDAG grants to cities during any fiscal year.

Through the formula that now exists, a large amount of the total funds are going to certain sections of the country much to the detriment of other cities in other States which also have urban problems that must be dealt with; that formula does not give proper weight to the encouragement for private funds to be leveraged or adequate weight to the number of jobs being created. They are very important factors that should be considered to a greater degree than they have in the past or in the current formula.

We offer this amendment as one way of creating a fairer distribution of the funds. At the same time, we would prefer to be dealing directly with the formula that we think is unfair, but because of the matter of time, we have taken this course to place limits on the amount of funds going to any one grantee as a way of dealing with the problem short term. We hope that while these caps are in place, encouragement will be given to the various committees to look at the formula and to change the formula for a more fair distribution of funds.

As a strong supporter of the Department of Housing and Urban Development's UDAG program, I am concerned that the Department has developed a set of criteria which discriminates against most States.

When the UDAG program was first developed in 1977, I fought as a Member of the House of Representatives to make sure that small communities of less than 2,500 were included in the program. At that time they were not to be included in this program.

If this program is to continue, and be successful, it must be one that serves the entire country, not just one that serves a small part of the Nation.

This year we have appropriated $440 million to fund the UDAG Program. It has created several times that amount in investments by the private sector. It has also helped to create thousands of jobs and is redeveloping some of our distressed areas.

Until December last year this program was national in scope, serving large and small communities that had proven a need for redevelopment.

As our economy turned around and the private sector again started to invest, this program became so popular that HUD found for the first time they could not fund all the projects that were considered fundable under a set of rules they had used since 1977. They then set in place, without regulations or legislation, a set of criteria that eliminates virtually three-fourths of the States from being able to receive funds. Under their new point system they are using data on cities that is in some cases 6 to 8 years old. I know that the cities in Iowa have changed in that period of time as I am sure your cities have as well.

If a community has already met the test of being distressed enough to be on the eligibility list, then they should not be discriminated against by this new system used by HUD.

You will find that since December a city such as Los Angeles, which I am sure you will all agree does have some distressed areas that need help, has only had one project funded. The city had been able to have 12 projects funded since 1978. At the same time, one city alone has received 13 grants since December, others have received 8 grants, and several have received 6 grants. I could cite time and time again where communities have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to become fundable but have not been funded due to the present system. These projects sometimes create hundreds of jobs and stimulate millions of dollars more in private investment than the projects that are funded. Yet even when they meet the requirements to be considered distressed cities, their projects are not competitive on the merits of the new formula.

This is wrong.

Today, Senator JEPSEN and I, along with others, are offering an amendment to H.R. 6040 which we feel will help eliminate some of the inequities in the system. Our amendment would place a cap of $15 million on a grant to one project and would also place a limit of $25 million awarded to each city in a single year. This is not unreasonable. It is one way to ensure a more equitable distribution of the UDAG funds in order that every State will have an opportunity to take part in the program.

I would take this opportunity to thank Senator JEPSEN for his leadership and guidance on this issue. He has been of great help to me in identifying the issue at hand. I would also mention that he has met with Secretary Pierce on the issue early in March. Iowa thanks you, Senator JEPSEN.

Why should we take this action now? It is important because of the upcoming funding rounds in September and October. Without these limits, HUD will be considering one project alone that wants over $40 million UDAG. That is almost 10 percent of the total UDAG money available for the full year. HUD has already funded other $40 million projects, as well as ones that are in the $20 to $25 million range. This is not a fair and equitable distribution of funds. Most States suffer from this type of discrimination.

It is anticipated that around $200 million will be distributed during the September large-city round. I know it, you know it, and I can assure you that the cities know it. It has stirred a great deal of interest in making sure that an extremely large number of projects are going to be considered. You can be sure that those cities that have an advantage will be requesting that 6 to 8 or even 10 of their projects be funded. I can assure you that they will be funded before most of your cities.

Our amendment is not the whole answer, but it will help. It is my hope that the Banking Committee will begin to hold hearings and take a long, hard look at the real problem, that of the formula used by HUD in their allocation of funds. It is the only way that this program will survive. Some Members have stated that they do not wish to support our amendment because they would rather not solve the problem by piecemeal means. As I stated earlier, I hope that the Banking Committee will take a look and make changes in the program. Even if this happens, the limits we are talking about are not unreasonable and should be implemented. Now is the time to do it.

If your cities have had a problem getting their projects funded recently, than I can assure you this amendment will go a step toward solving that problem. Unless we take action now before these upcoming large and small cities rounds, your projects will not be funded, and the funds will continue to flow to the same 23 cities that are presently receiving the bulk of the funds.

All we ask is for our projects to be given a fair and equal opportunity for funding. Please support this amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that a list of States and their cities adversely affected by the present UDAG formulas be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Impaction is the comparative degree of economic distress among applicants, as measured by a weighted average of three factors: Age of the housing stock weighted at 50 percent, the extent of poverty—30 percent, and population growth/lag—20 percent.

[2] For the small cities distress criterion, up to 10 points will be allocated for Per Capita Income and 20 points for LSAs. This criterion will not include job lag data or unemployment which are not available for all small cities. Within the LSA measure, 10 points will be allotted if the city is within a county that meets the LSA threshold. One point is then added for every unemployment percentage point above the LSA threshold. Conversely, one point is deducted for each percentage point by which the city is under the LSA threshold.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes; I know that the Senator from Tennessee has an interest in this, and I would yield to him. Also, I think my colleague, Senator JEPSEN, wanted to speak, also.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I object. No Member may yield the floor to another. Each has a right to be recognized in his own right.

Mr. BAKER. That is not the rule. That is not what I asked. I asked if the Senator would yield to me for a question.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I have no objection to him yielding to the Senator for a question.

Mr. BAKER. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, first of all, I commend the Senator. May I inquire if there is some willingness on the part of the distinguished Senator from Iowa to consider that, with the broad support that I believe he has on this amendment—and incidentally I support this amendment, and I agree with much of what he has said, with all that he has said on this subject—if there would be a willingness on his part to consider further negotiations with Secretary Pierce and his Department on this subject to see if we can arrive at a means of resolving this issue without going the legislative route?

Specifically, the basis for my question is this: As the Senator probably knows, as I believe I told him earlier, as I know I told Senator JEPSEN earlier today, I have talked to Secretary Pierce today. As the Senator may also know, my colleague from Tennessee, Senator SASSER, and I met with Secretary Pierce just a few days ago here in the Capitol. I am convinced that Secretary Pierce is sensitive to this issue. He does understand the special concern that States like Tennessee and Iowa and many others have. Secretary Pierce today said to me that he would like another couple of weeks to see what he could work out. Those were his words to me. Incidentally, Secretary Pierce called me; I did not call Secretary Pierce.

My hope would be that we could have a further dialog and discussion of this matter, but that at some point may I inquire if the Senator might be willing to consider withdrawing this amendment, after we have had whatever discussion and debate may be necessary, in favor of trying to have further negotiations with Secretary Pierce to try to resolve this issue? May I say, by the way, that for my part I am willing to contribute whatever effort I can to see that the Secretary meets with us at an appropriate early time. And I will urge the Secretary, as I have previously in the case of Tennessee, to consider the special circumstances that exist in Iowa, Tennessee, and I am sure many other States.

Mr. HEINZ. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GRASSLEY. First, the Senate majority leader asked me a question, and I would like to respond to him.

What I am really after, Senator, are results and some sincere desire of the people not only on the Hill, but more importantly at HUD, to look at the situation and to deal with it in a way that can be done so successfully, instead of the promises that we have had from the Department in the past to look at it and make changes, while in reality taking no action.

I think that is probably the position the Senator is in as the leader in the Senate. In your direct conversation with the Secretary if you have the feeling that there is a sincere desire to address this issue, then yes, under those circumstances, I am willing to withdraw the amendment, assuming my cosponsors will agree as well.

Let me suggest that earlier this afternoon, when the "Dear Colleague" letter went out, I had discussions with Senator D'AMATO. He said that he was willing to work with us on trying to get the issue addressed. I had some discussion with Senator GARN, and I did have some discussion with you as well, but not in the detail that you have addressed the issue here on the floor of the Senate.

I decided to go ahead with the Grassley-Jepsen amendment, though, to get a commitment on the issue. I am satisfied with what you have said now at this point concerning Secretary Pierce.

I do not know what more I can say if you are saying to me that in 2 weeks we will be able to sit down with the Secretary and that you sincerely believe that he understands there is a problem and that we have got a legitimate gripe and that it will be addressed. Then I am satisfied.

Mr. BAKER. Yes, Mr. President, that is what I am saying.

Mr. HEINZ. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRASSLEY. I will yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania first, and then I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. HEINZ. I thank my friend and colleague from Iowa for yielding.

I just want to pursue the line of inquiry of the Senator from Tennessee, which I think is a fruitful line of inquiry. As I understand the Senator, the Senator from Iowa appears to be willing to withdraw this amendment. Let me state by way of preamble that I hope the arrangement that the Senator from Tennessee has proposed and the subsequent discussions with Secretary Pierce are useful. I say that as a member of the Banking Committee and of the Housing and Urban Affairs Subcommittee.

This is a relatively recent problem. It is only within the last several UDAG rounds, as I understand it—I will let the Senator correct me if I am incorrect——

Mr. GRASSLEY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HEINZ [continuing]. That this problem has developed. The UDAG program has been with us since 1977. It has been a useful program. The Senator agrees then that this is a fairly recent problem that he is trying to address.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes, within the last 12 to 15 months. Would you agree on that time span?

Mr. HEINZ. It would be my hope, I say to the Senator from Iowa, that we can avoid an unnecessary legislative confrontation. I would have to say to my friend from Iowa that I have to oppose his amendment for two reasons: One, I think the authorizing committee has to have the opportunity to deal with the issue, and, second, I do not believe that the Senator's amendment is either germane or passes the test of whether or not it is legislation on an appropriations bill. Having said that, I would like to assure the Senator that I would be pleased to work with him, with Senator GARN, and with Senator BAKER to see this program operate fairly and equitably. I hope that the Senator and his cosponsors accept the offer of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I would like to ask my friend from Iowa if I would be incorrect in thinking that in the discussions which he contemplated with the distinguished majority leader it was suggested that all of the Senators who have expressed an interest in this matter, and the different sides for different regions, are involved in a very successful program. We certainly want to see the thing grow, not diminish, and we all want to be involved, all be heard, and try to reach a consensus as we have done when we established this program in 1977.

Mr. GRASSLEY. It has never been, and it would not be, my desire to exclude any point of view as long as it deals with the issue of how the formula might be changed to bring into consideration factors where the taxpayers are getting more for their money in the sense of the private dollars that are leveraged, and the number of jobs that are being created with combination of private sector and public sector dollars.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I think my friend does not exclude any solution to a problem which we want to address for the same reason he does.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I consider the request reasonable, and I would not desire to exclude any point of view or anybody.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I have already said, if the Senator from New York heard me, that his junior colleague from the State of New York expressed to me his opposition to the amendment, and some feeling that it needed to be looked at, that there may be some unfairness, and that he was going to help us address the issue.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. We can work this out, and I look forward to working with the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. JEPSEN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GRASSLEY. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. JEPSEN. I ask my distinguished colleague from Iowa to put in the RECORD that my staff did assist on this, and worked diligently for many hours and many weeks in developing this issue. With your approval, I would like the RECORD to show that.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Besides the statement that the Senator just made, not only from the standpoint of his staff having worked hard on this, I would say that the Senator himself has done a great deal of work on this. And the only reason why I am sponsoring this, I assume, instead of your sponsorship of it is that I had a part in the UDAG program originally when I was a member of the Banking Committee in the other House, and at that point had long taken a position of equal justice for the smaller communities of America in equal treating of the UDAG grant.

Mr. JEPSEN. Will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes.

Mr. JEPSEN. It is my understanding that the Senator from Utah, Mr. GARN, has expressed an interest and concern in this matter.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I was not discouraged by the Senator from Utah in proceeding with the concept of the amendment. He did express objection to an amendment like this being placed on an appropriation bill, but he did not find fault with the substance of the amendment.

Mr. GARN. Will the Senator yield for a comment?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARN. The Senator is correct, and the Banking Committee has been concerned about this. I have had conversations with HUD. I think there are some problems with the formula the way it has been distributed. So I have sympathy with what the Senators from Iowa are attempting to accomplish. But I did express that I felt this was the wrong time and the wrong place in the supplemental appropriations bill to try dealing with that. So I do think it is possible to work it out. Senators who are opposed, like the Senators from New York, showed a willingness to talk about it, and I do think that we can proceed, work with HUD, and see if we cannot come up with a formula that is more equitable.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I believe the Jepsen-Grassley amendment would be an important first step in the efforts to dispense UDAG funds more fairly across the Nation. I tend to favor setting a $15 million cap per UDAG grant and $25 million cap per city. In addition, I agree that we should more fully examine the entire selection system.

Mr. President, my State of Tennessee has received only one UDAG grant in this fiscal year while three cities have received 53, 50, and 37 grants. Tennessee has suffered the loss of jobs and private investment while a handful of cities are assured of increased UDAG dollars with a minimum private investment and limited number of jobs. Certain cities are essentially guaranteed approval of their grants because 70 percent of the weight is based on the characteristics of the city, and the system gives only 30-percent weight to a project's specific benfits such as private investment and jobs. With such a heavy emphasis on the city characteristics—impaction and distress—and so little on the project factors, the system excludes a large number of distressed cities from participation in the program.

The criteria which has skewed this system is weighted heavily on such factors as pre-1940 housing which is no real indication of economic distress on a nationwide basis. Therefore, I am faced with a number of distressed metropolitan areas and small cities in Tennessee which are unable to benefit from the private investment, jobs, and improved tax base which are part of the UDAG Program.

The Jepsen-Grassley amendment, if it were implemented, is only one of the changes which I believe are crucial to the future of the UDAG Program and our cities.

Mr. JEPSEN. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague, the junior Senator from Iowa. Indeed, I am a consponsor of it.

It is no secret that I am dismayed by the formula recently developed by the Department of Housing and Urban Development [HUD] to award and distribute the funds in the Urban Development Action Grant [UDAG] program. In March of this year, I met with HUD Secretary Sam Pierce to discuss the difficulties which Iowa and several other States face due to this formula. He was sympathetic and understanding about the situation. But as of yet no positive action has been taken to alleviate the difficulties.

What is the problem? Simply put, Iowa and some other States such as Utah, Oregon, Tennessee, California, and Kansas, will basically be precluded from participating in the UDAG Program due to circumstances beyond their control.

This is not acceptable to the people of my State.

Pre-1940 housing stock, poverty, population growth lag, per capita income, certainly have their place in any formula, but so does the ratio of private to public dollars and the number of permanent jobs created. Competitiveness in project should be encouraged, not discouraged as it is in this formula. Money should not go to communities just for the sake of giving them money. UDAG projects should be highly competitive so as to achieve the maximum for each tax dollar invested.

There have been economic problems in Iowa, too, but the formula does not recognize them. The UDAG Program has been very beneficial in helping Iowa communities, large and small, to retain and to develop businesses and industries.

The UDAG program has helped save a pork packing plant, retain a 125-year-old family run industry, build a new shopping mall in an economically deprived area of the State, bring 90 jobs to a town of 1,200 people and many other beneficial things to Iowa.

It has been a boon to my rural State and we do not intend to give it up to a few urban locations which have pre-1940 housing. The rest of America needs help too.

I appreciate the need for an objective system to award the UDAG funds. But that system should be inclusive of all America not just certain areas.

This amendment will help insure objectivity, while at the same time bringing about more fairness for the rest of the country. The limit placed upon individual project awards and on amounts which would go to cities is fair and just. It will stretch the already too few UDAG dollars farther and to more needy communities.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter written to Secretary Pierce by the two Senators from Iowa be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, March 13, 1984.

Hon. SAMUEL R. PIERCE, Jr.,
Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY PIERCE: We understand that, due to heavy demand for Urban Development Action Grant (UDAG) funds during the most recent awards cycles, you have developed a formula to rank fundable applications in determining which ones receive preliminary approval from HUD. The system you have used apparently gives 40 percent weight to the relative economic distress of the applicant (impaction) based on a percentage of pre-1940 housing stock (.5), extent of poverty (.3) and population growth lag (.2); 30 percent weight to the distress of the applicant (distress) based on per capita income, unemployment and job lag/decline; and only 30 percent weight to the actual quality of the project proposed, such as the ratio of private to UDAG dollars and the number of permanent jobs created.

While we appreciate the need for an objective system to award UDAG funds, we do not believe that the current rating system, which gives only 30 percent weight to a project's specific benefits, is mandated by the UDAG legislation or regulation; nor do we believe that the system makes the best use of the Department's flexibility in creating the competitive program that Congress intended. We greatly fear that by placing such overwhelming emphasis on impaction (weighted heavily on pre-1940 housing) and distress and so little on the project factors, you may in effect be excluding a large number of "distressed" cities from participation in the program, while at the same time not utilizing the limited UDAG funds in the most effective manner.

For example, in the December 1983 metropolitan cities round, one project recieved the maximum number of points for the project factors, but still did not rank high enough to be funded because it was in the lower half of the distress and impaction lists. The project had an investment ratio of $19.20 of private funds for each UDAG $1.00 (which is extremely high) and would have created 500 new permanent jobs at a cost per job of only $1,750 of UDAG funds. Despite these exceptional project factors, the project was not funded because the City is on the lower quartiles of the distressed and impaction lists.

Similarly, under the formula followed in the last round, it is possible that no Iowa city could receive a UDAG, no matter how competitive the projects are, simply because Iowa cities do not have excessive degrees of distress and impaction, as defined by HUD. Because five of the seven eligible Iowa cities are within the lowest quartile in distress and all but one city is in the third or fourth quartiles in impaction, a project in any of these cities could score maximum points for the project factors, but still not be granted the UDAG.

This system is particularly skewed by the fact that one-half of the weight for determining the impaction level is the percentage of pre-1940 housing, which is itself a questionable variable for determining the relative economic distress of a city. Perhaps the most striking evidence of this is the extremely low ranking of all the Puerto Rico cities based on the current impaction formula. In addition, the current system creates the anomaly that projects in "pockets of poverty" cities, which are not subject to ranking by impaction and distress levels, would have a chance of funding while those of some "distressed" cities would not. Distressed cities, as you know, are not permitted to submit "pockets" projects.

Mr. Secretary, we ask that you reexamine the selection system which you are about to implement and strongly urge that you take action to return the UDAG program to a fair and competitive status.

Thank you for your cooperation.

Sincerely,

ROGER W. JEPSEN,
U.S. Senator.
CHARLES E. GRASSLEY,
U.S. Senator.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to this amendment. Let there be no mistake about what its effect would be. It would alter the primary objective of the Urban Development Action Grant Program by diverting UDAG funds away from the economically distressed communities the program was created to help. The amendment would gut the strict UDAG targeting requirements, and divert scarce UDAG grants to the newer, more prosperous cities of the South and West.

I wish to remind my colleagues of what we intended UDAG to accomplish when we created the program in 1977. We intended to establish a program which would spark urban revitalization in our most distressed cities and urban counties. Under this scenario, distressed cities and urban counties would apply for funds under a project-specific format. The primary objectives of projects would be to alleviate physical and economic deterioration and population loss. What would be unique about UDAG is that the small Federal grant would act as the catalyst in leveraging far greater amounts of private capital.

In short, we created a specific program intended to provide limited Federal assistance to stimulate investment in strictly targeted areas of economic distress. And in this respect, the program has been very successful.

The program was never—and I repeat never—intended to provide assistance to all, or even most cities. But that is what this amendment would accomplish.

Mr. President, we have had other economic development programs that started out with strict targeting requirements. They, too, were opened up when Senators found that too little funds were reaching their states. Take the programs of the Economic Development Administration for instance. EDA grants and loans were originally targeted to only a few of the economically hardest hit areas of the country. However, within 10 years, there was virtually nowhere in the country that could not qualify for EDA assistance. As a result, EDA is now a classic pork barrel.

But what about the areas that really need assistance, the areas for which EDA grants and loans were originally intended? Take Youngstown in my own State of Ohio. Youngstown is one of the most economically ravaged communities in the entire country. But when Congress appropriated $100 million in EDA Jobs Act grants last year, Youngstown did not get a single dime. Why?

Because Youngstown could not compete with the attractive deals offered by other cities. Los Angeles, for instance, which can hardly be described as an economically distressed city, received over $2 million.

If the Senate accepts this amendment today, UDAG will go the way of EDA. Hard-hit cities like Birmingham, Detroit, Cleveland, Rochester, Akron, and St. Louis will have to compete with more prosperous cities that simply do not need the UDAG incentives to attract private investment capital.

Mr. President, what is really striking about this amendment today is its timing. UDAG is scheduled to make one more round of grant awards before the election. The proponents of this amendment hope to have it enacted into law in time for this September 30, grant round, and then take a few projects back home to impress the constituents. This amendment is election year politics plain and simple.

Mr. President, it would be a real tragedy to gut for short-term political reasons, our only community development program that demonstrably works. I believe that this is a bad amendment and urge the Senate to reject it.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am proud to be a cosponsor of this amendment, which seeks to reduce the big city bias in the UDAG Program.

Our amendment would set a cap of $15 million per grant and would limit UDAG funding to $25 million per city per year.

Current eligibility requirements are heavily weighted in favor of our larger cities. I understand that 23 States currently receive 89 percent of UDAG funding so it is clear that worthy projects in small- to moderate-sized cities are getting short shrift.

Since the UDAG Program went into operation in 1978, my State of Arkansas has received just under $10 million in grants. By contrast, one city this year has applied for a $40 million grant, which would consume nearly one-tenth of the $440 million in available funds.

Our big cities certainly have their problems, but by giving them automatic preference we are neglecting more economically promising projects in smaller, but no less deserving, cities. Decisions of UDAG projects should be made based more on economic feasibility and less on general social considerations.

UDAG is one Federal program which most of us—Republican and Democrat—can support enthusiastically. Its strength lies in the partnership it creates between public and private funding, because the participation of the private sector ensure a fiscal discipline that is absent in many other Federal programs.

Several cities in my State—Little Rock, West Memphis, Texarkana, and Pine Bluff—have put together some very promising economic projects, and I would like to see them have the same kind of opportunity under the UDAG Program as New York, Chicago, or Los Angeles.

I believe that the approach recommended by this amendment will strengthen the UDAG Program by promoting more projects in more States and by reemphasizing the economic feasibility of individual applicants.

I hope the Senate will support this amendment.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senator from Iowa has agreed to withdraw his amendment to change the way in which urban development action grants are awarded. Had he persisted in pursuing this amendment, I would have opposed it vigorously.

The UDAG Program is one of the very best programs we have in the Federal Government. When the Reagan administration took office in 1981, there was some talk of ending this program or changing it substantially. The administration, to its credit, heard the pleas of the Nation's mayors not to tamper with this program. The UDAG Program has leveraged $7 private for every $1 public expended. It has produced jobs and a revitalization of cities distressed by a lack of opportunity and hope. Its been a good deal for our cities and our government.

In the last year of the Carter administration, the authorization for UDAG stood at $675 million. The program's funding was cut under the Reagan administration and for the last several years has stood at $440 million.

The authors of this amendment contend that there is not enough money available to fund all the projects which are worthy of support. That might in fact be true, but the answer to that problem is not to reduce support for projects with great merit, weaken the targeting of funds to those who need help the most, and fundamentally redirect this program in a few brief hours on the floor of the Senate.

The Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs should examine the support for this program and recommend additional support if it is warranted as I believe it is. The Senator from Michigan has indicated his willingness to examine the UDAG Program and I share that willingness, but I must oppose this amendment which would deny funding to badly needed projects in my State and others.

New Jersey is a fortunate State in many respects. Nevertheless, New Jersey has some of the poorest and most needy communities in the Nation within its borders. Who would lose under the caps which result from the Grassley amendment? Jersey City, Newark, and Paterson are the losers—three of the neediest cities in the country. Cities like Newark are struggling to survive and yet here we are talking about reducing support to the Newarks of the world in the interest of spreading the money around.

The UDAG Program was conceived as a targeted program which would put our resources where they were most needed, places with poverty and deteriorating infrastructure. Where cities could extract commitments from the private sector, the UDAG Program was there to help them and in many cases made the critical difference in making a project go. Creativity was matched with a commitment by Government and the private sector to take on some of our most intractable problems in our most distressed cities. This is no time to weaken that targeting or commitment.

The dear colleague sent around by the Senators from Iowa points out the fact that some cities had the creativity and commitment—and the need—to warrant support above their arbitrary caps. No mention was made of the needs of those communities or the quality of the proposals. The UDAG Program has done great things for our Nation's cities and should not be diluted by this amendment.

I stand ready to work with my colleague from Iowa to improve and expand this program. I oppose this hastily proposed redirection of the program.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa raises some very serious questions with respect to the Urban Development Action Grant Program. I want to commend Senator GRASSLEY for taking this initiative, and I support the intent of his amendment.

Placing a cap on the size of individual UDAG grants, and on the amount of UDAG money going to any one city in a given year, is one means available to us to restore some of UDAG's original purpose—at least for the immediate future.

For the longer term, I think a more permanent solution will be needed. But for now, for the balance of this year and until a selection system is in place that comports with the letter and the spirit of the law, the Grassley approach could be a step in the right direction.

Mr. President, I have a lengthy statement which outlines my concerns with the way the UDAG Program is currently being run, and in that statement I suggest a number of solutions.

I will summarize the statement by making two points. The core of the UDAG Program is to encourage distressed cities to develop cost-effective projects for revitalizing areas of urban decay and restoring a measure of economic health to the city getting the grant. Those are the goals: First, to assist economically troubled cities, and second, equally important, to encourage the development of creative, productive projects to achieve that result.

HUD's new ranking system fails on both counts. It fails to identify in a meaningful way the degree of economic distress of cities applying for grants. The new system fails utterly in encouraging the development of high-quality projects.

The result is that many truly distressed cities, with qualified, fundable, solid projects, have no chance of being awarded grants, and the quality of their applications is effectively ignored.

There is not time before the recess to pass and enact the kind of long-range plans I discuss in my statement. I intend to pursue those plans when we return. In the meantime, I believe every effort should be made to ensure that at least a portion of the thus-far unfunded, but qualified, high quality projects on the UDAG list are given a fighting chance. They deserve it. The purpose of the program requires it.

The Urban Development Action Grant Program, administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development since its inception in 1978, is a very creative approach to the problem of urban decay in cities across this country. It was designed to be a long-term stimulus program. The intent of Congress was to stem the tide of decay in our Nation's cities by bringing together the public and private sectors; they were to develop projects appropriate to each city's character and needs. The projects were to leverage private investment, to create and maintain jobs, and to make an overall improvement in the long-term economic profile of the city.

In setting priorities from grant recipients, it was determined at the outset that those applicants with the most severe economic problems would be given a significant advantage. In view of the need to conserve taxpayers' dollars, and the need to target those dollars to areas of greatest need, that advantage was appropriate.

It is still appropriate today.

The problem has developed, Mr. President, with regard to a new system for setting these priorities. HUD executed this new system late last year, to become effective at the beginning of 1984. It was put in place in response to a new phenomenon in the UDAG Program. The success rate of UDAG projects and the experience gained nationally in developing them, has led to a natural increase in the number of applications which meet the required standards—or, as they are called, fundable projects. For the first time in UDAG's history, the number of fundable projects exceeded UDAG's available funds.

In the past, a city with an application could continue to work with HUD to improve the quality, getting the most for our tax dollars with the greatest possible benefit to the economic health of the city. At that point, there was every likelihood the project would be funded.

We have a new situation in 1984. When HUD implemented the new plan, the focus on project quality was virtually eliminated.

I should note at this point that the Department did not follow established procedures for promulgating regulations in this case. There was no publication in the Federal Register. There was no opportunity for public comment. If comments had been sought, we might have avoided this threat to the integrity of the program. Although the failure to follow procedures is not the main point of my statement here today, I believe it is important to point out. In this post-Chadha environment, the agencies are more dependent than ever before on the collective wisdom and experience of parties affected by their regulations. Failure to seek out that experience by failure to publish proposed regulations is thus a more serious matter.

Nonetheless, my point today is that the current system is inequitable on two major counts: First, it fails to meet the statutory requirement that the Secretary must consider project quality in determining eligibility for grant awards; and, second, the system uses inappropriate data to determine the degree of economic impaction in a given area. There are other problems with the system, problems which need to be addressed; but these are the two clear cut, and the most exemplary of the overall situation.

First, with respect to project quality: section 119(d)(1)(C) of the law states that the Secretary shall establish selection criteria which must include "at least the following other criteria: demonstrated performance of the city or urban county in housing and community development programs; the extent to which the grant will stimulate economic recovery by leveraging private investment; the number of permanent jobs to be created and their relation to the amount of grant funds requested; the proportion of permanent jobs accessible to lower income persons and minorities, including persons who are unemployed; the impact of the proposed activities on the fiscal base of the city or urban county and its relation to the amount of grant funds requested; the extent to which State or local government funding or special economic incentives have been committed; and the feasibility of accomplishing the proposed activities in a timely fashion within the grant amount available."

Those are pretty tough standards, Mr. President, and the law requires that they be considered. They are an integral part of the UDAG program. Or they were, until this new ranking system was put in place.

What has happened is the HUD has given as effective total of 70 percent weight to a city's economic profile, and only 30 percent to the standards listed above. In view of the higher number of applications, and the decreasing amount of real dollars available, the result is that a great many eligible, distressed cities with excellent applications will never be awarded grants—regardless of the quality of their projects, the ratio of private capital leveraged, the number of jobs created and maintained.

This result is clearly counter to the intent of Congress and in contravention of the requirements of the statute. Cities designated as having the highest degree of economic distress and impaction—by HUD's dubious definition, which I will address in a moment—will automatically be awarded grants, regardless of the quality of the project.

Let me say at this point, Mr. President, that I do not mean to say that the projects awarded thus far in 1984 to distressed cities have not been high quality. A number of them do indeed create significant numbers of jobs and leverage significant amounts of private capital. But I think it is an ominous sign when so many projects being awarded neither create nor maintain jobs, and have leveraging ratios just barely above the minimum requirement. If history is any indication, it will not be long before the caliber of applications drops overall. If cities are not required to go through the difficult process of putting together a top-notch plan, if they know they will get Federal dollars simply because they are having a tough time, UDAG becomes not a high-efficiency, long-range stimulus, but another routine entitlement that saps the initiative for local effort.

I don't want to see that happen to UDAG. I don't think my colleagues do, either—even, and maybe especially, those in whose States the UDAG dollars are beginning to flow in ever-high percentages. Dependence on Federal largesse is a crippling addiction.

I believe project quality should be reinstated to its rightful, mandated place in the ranking system. There are a number of ways to do this. I want to commend the staff of the Housing Subcommittee of the Senate Banking Committee on which I serve, for their excellent work in suggesting alternative solutions. A computer simulation was run, for example, on the effects of requiring that a certain percentage of grading points be allocated to project quality. I look forward to working with them further on refining this approach and possibly some others. We may find it advisable to clarify some portions of the statute, or it may be possible to arrive at a reasonable interpretation of current law, by regulatory change. Again, I hope we can find some sensible solutions by working through this together.

The other item that creates so many inequities, Mr. President, is the manner in which the Department has decided to declare certain cities and urban counties as having a high degree of "impaction." Let me clarify that term for those who do not deal with the details of HUD vocabulary on a regular basis. The statute I cited above states in paragraph (A) that the Secretary shall establish criteria for grants under this section which must include (A) as the primary criterion, the comparative degree of economic distress among applicants, as measured, in the case of a metropolitan city or urban county, by the differences in the extent of growth lag, the extent of poverty, and the adjusted age of housing, called impaction; (B) other factors determined to be relevant by the Secretary in assessing the comparative degree of economic deterioration in cities and urban counties, called distress; I have already discussed paragraph (C), which is project quality.

Now, from this description, HUD has come up with a formula that ranks the amount of housing built before 1940 as a determinant of economic impaction, regardless of the quality or cost of that housing, a determinant that is graded as: Almost twice as important as the poverty level, twice as important as unemployment, twice as important as the amount of capital leveraged, 10 times as important as the number of new permanent jobs to be created, and 40 times as important as either the number of jobs to be retained or the impact on local economic conditions.

There is something seriously wrong here. I invite my colleagues to think about the so-called gentrified neighborhoods back home or right here in Washington, built around the turn of the century. Think of those wrought-iron railings and fashionable turrets. Now think of some of the postwar tract housing thrown up for returning service personnel. Then tell me how accurate a reading of economic impaction you will get from the simple age of that housing. HUD is telling us they believe that the amount of pre-1940 housing is 10 times more important than the number of jobs created when applying for a UDAG grant. I cannot accept that, and my unemployed constituents, who lost the mortgage on their low-grade post-1940 housing, cannot accept it either.

It may well be, Mr. President, that some kind of data can be developed over time that would rationally include a housing component as relevant to determining economic impaction. Until that time, I think it would be advisable to remove "age of housing" from the statute. It is simply not a reliable indicator. It is certainly not an indicator that is 40 times more important than the number of construction jobs to be created by a UDAG project.

I have to believe that the majority of the Senate has simply not yet been made aware of the relative weights that have been accorded these factors. It may help to explain why so many high-leverage, high-job-production projects in their States have not been approved in 1984, and why they will have no chance of ever being approved under this system.

It may be possible to find some middle ground here, on the matter of pre-1940 housing. If other data are already available that would make this at least a marginally reasonable factor, perhaps those data could be combined with the age of housing, and the weight given to it overall could be reduced. Again, I stress that I am trying to find a reasonable way to proceed.

In sum, Mr. President, I think it would be tragic if the goals of UDAG and its early successes were to be buried in an avalanche of mediocrity. If we don't pay attention to a project's quality, and we don't target the dollars to projects that will have a long-term economic benefit, the program will lose its special character and its special promise. It will no longer be valued because of its productive capacity, because it will have none. It will no longer have a broad base of support, because it will serve so few areas. The suggestion has been made that the administration is deliberately trying to kill the UDAG program by reducing its base of support.

I want to preserve the uniqueness and the effectiveness of the UDAG program. I want to work with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle and from across the country, to see that these qualities are preserved. We have an opportunity here to save a cost-effective program that has provided thousands of jobs and new life and economic independence for our cities and towns. It is not yet too late.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield the floor?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, it is my understanding that when another Member of the Senate has taken the floor as the Senator from Utah did, he cannot yield the floor. I am wrong about the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa yielded to the Senator from Utah for a question.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I was yielding to the Senator from Iowa. I do not need much more time for myself. But I do want to accommodate all the Senators who cooperated so much in the introduction of the amendment. The Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SARBANES. I object. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY] has the floor.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, would the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, if I may say, we need not turn this into a flap when there is no flap. As the Senator has indicated, he wants to withdraw the amendment. I think Senators on this side wish to be recognized. I would hope the Senator, when he is finished, would yield the floor so that the Senator from Ohio or the Senator from Maryland could seek recognition. Perhaps the Senator wants to withdraw his amendment at this time or perhaps other Senators would rather he waited. But I would suggest that since the yeas and nays have not been ordered, and since we appear to have an agreement, that perhaps the Senator from Iowa at this point would like to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, since the Senator from Iowa has withdrawn his amendment, I will not belabor the Senate with a lengthy speech. But I do want to make clear that there is considerable opposition in an effort to change the total thrust of the UDAG Program. It is quite obvious that there were a number of Senators on the floor prepared to speak in opposition. It is not necessary that we all do that to tie up the Senate at this hour. But we do not want to overlook in this talk with meeting with the Cabinet member, Mr. Pierce, what the original thrust of this legislation was. The Senator from Iowa was aware of that. We do not want to make an effort to change that which was the original intent.

I congratulate the Senator from Iowa for withdrawing his amendment.

Mr. SARBANES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I will take just a moment. I want to underscore something the Senator from Iowa who offered the amendment said at the very outset; that is, this is a very controversial amendment, and there is a considerable difference of opinion amongst Members, I think, on this issue. I have no objection to efforts to work with the Secretary in terms of how the criteria in the law are being applied, if in fact the law is not being applied fairly or equitably, or all the facts are not being carefully looked at. That is different from changing the criterion without doing it by legislation. After all, we have a formula. It is in the law. That is a matter that would have to be examined by the authorizing committee, as the distinguished chairman has indicated.

It may well be that the existing criteria have not been applied in the way that they should be.

That might address the problems that have been raised by the sponsor of the legislation.

I do not think it is fair to say that there is any consensus within this body that the criteria itself should be changed without the kind of an examination that would be undertaken in an authorizing committee, without actually passing on it by the Senate. That is, after all, the law, and all of us, both here and in the executive branch, are bound to faithfully execute the law.

It may be that the existing criteria which are the law have been applied in such a way by the Department that it is creating the kinds of problems that have been raised here. Obviously, I do not think any of us would object to an effort to apply the existing criteria in such a way to ease the problem for any Member of this body but that is very different from changing the criteria contained in the law without legislative action.

Mr. President, I thought it important that this point be placed upon the RECORD in view of some of the comments which have been made.

Mr. RIEGLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to this amendment.

The amendment would change the system under which the Secretary of HUD selects projects for the award of urban development action grants. The change would be profound. It would be arbitrary. It would affect planning that is already well underway in communities across the country.

I know that a number of my colleagues share my concerns about this amendment. Some of them are here in the Chamber. I would like the others to know that this is the time for them to come to the floor.

Mr. President, the proposed amendment would impose a fixed cap of $15 million on every UDAG grant—no matter what the nature or size of the project might be. It would also place a rigid cap of $25 million in UDAG awards per year on every city—no matter what the city's size, no matter what the city's need, no matter how many meritorious private development projects the city could stimulate.

This amendment would strike at the very heart of the UDAG Program's strength. It would damage a program that over the years has earned firm support within Congress, from private industry, from private financial institutions and from State and local governments.

As the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Housing and Urban Affairs, I am particularly concerned that the full Senate is being asked to act on this proposal today. This is the first time that the proposal has seen the light of day in Congress. The authorizing committee has not recommended it. In fact, not 1 hour of hearings have been held on this proposal in either the Senate or the House. The Senate is being asked to act on a major proposal without the benefit of any careful consideration of how it would affect cities across the country.

Mr. President, UDAG is clearly a program that works extremely well. It helps locate new industry in areas where there is much poverty, high unemployment and weak fiscal conditions. It creates jobs that reduce unemployment and welfare costs. It makes fuller use of the Nation's enormous investment in existing roads, water and sewer systems and other underutilized infrastructure.

Since it was enacted, UDAG has demonstrated solid results in 2,253 projects. It has accounted for over 450,000 planned, new, permanent jobs; 55 percent of those jobs have been for low- and moderate-income persons.

UDAG has stimulated almost $7 in private investment for every Federal dollar, or a total of $19.3 billion in recent years.

UDAG projects are expected to contribute $491 million in annual tax revenues to hard-pressed local governments. At the end of 1983, local governments were already receiving $63 million annually in additional revenues as a result of UDAG projects. Repayments of loans made with UDAG funds have provided an additional $45 million.

At the end of last year, UDAG projects would produce almost 93,000 housing units, approximately one-third of which are for low- and moderate-income persons.

The careful targeting of UDAG funds on economically distressed communities has brought tangible benefits to minority groups; 66,000 new permanent jobs will be created for minority persons—25,000 of those jobs were already created by the end of 1983. Minority-owned firms received $600 million in contracts and subcontracts, or 17 percent of all such contracts under UDAG.

Mr. President, I am concerned that some recently have raised a question about the regional equity of fund distribution under UDAG. From the beginning of the program, UDAG has provided assistance in those communities that are the most distressed economically, whatever region of the country they are in. There is no requirement in the law that UDAG funds be distributed on any basis other than need and the quality of the projects. And that's as it should be. Nevertheless, HUD Secretary Samuel Pierce's annual report of April 7, 1984, said:

> * * * The proportion of Action Grant funds awarded in various regions has corresponded roughly to each region's percentage of the total population residing in UDAG-eligible jurisdictions * * *" (page 106).

I understand that the claims of regional inequity are directed to a project-selection system instituted by Secretary Pierce last December. The system was implemented after HUD received fundable applications for grant amounts that exceeded the UDAG funds available. I am told that the Secretary maintains that his selection system is consistent with the legal requirement that UDAG funding priority be given to the most distressed communities.

As one Senator, I am willing to work closely with any of my colleagues to inquire into the impact of the current project selection system and to help insure fair consideration for sound projects that carry out the purposes of the UDAG program in all regions of the country.

Mr. President, adoption of the amendment now before the Senate would not significantly redistribute UDAG funds—it would merely weaken the UDAG program as a tool for all cities.

It is not correct to suggest to local communities that these arbitrary grant limits will free up a significant number of additional UDAG dollars for them. In fact, very few grants or cities have exceeded these limits over the years. And these fixed limits would benefit to only a handful of projects at best.

I think it is important to point out what cities would lose if this amendment is adopted.

First, the amendment would deprive all eligible cities of a major benefit that UDAG has given them—the ability to work with private industry and financial institutions to develop coherent solutions for local economic problems, whatever the scope of the strategy that is required. UDAG, in short, has permitted distressed local communities to think big and to tackle even problems that otherwise would overwhelm them.

The Senators from Iowa, in the "Dear Colleague" letter explaining their amendment, note that one city is applying for a $40 million UDAG grant. The Senators give no indication that they have reason to believe that this application is not sound on the merits or that this will not be among the very strongest projects under consideration.

Parenthetically, the letter is inaccurate in claiming that a grant of that amount would account for 10 percent of all funds available this year. Actually such a grant, if it is awarded in the competition, would account for only 5.7 percent of the $700 million HUD will award this year.

Mr. President, not many very large projects are submitted in the UDAG competitions. But I know from personal experience with communities in my own State of Michigan that, in some cases, very large projects are the only ones that will make a difference in the local economy. Smaller projects may be wasteful.

As many Senators know, UDAG awards are made only after the Secretary of HUD determines that the grant amount is the smallest necessary for the project to proceed. Capping the grant amount may simply mean that important projects will be killed.

Some have claimed that a $15 million cap per grant really will make no real difference—developers will easily avoid the cap by splitting large projects into smaller phases. To the extent that that is true, this amendment will only distract local development efforts with unproductive games.

Second, the amendment would place a fixed $25 million cap on the UDAG grants any city may receive in 1 year. On a per capita basis, this would mean that the average-sized eligible city could not receive more than about $500 per resident. If you look at the impact city by city, however, the picture is very unfair. In fact, 118 cities in 33 States would be subjected to annual per capita grant ceilings that are less than half of the average.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have a table showing the impact of this amendment on those cities.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Under the arbitrary $25 million cap, the average eligible city could receive UDAG grants of no more than $500 per capita. The following cities would be subjected to a per capita UDAG limit that is less than 50% of the average.

Mr. RIEGLE. This provision would also force many strong projects not to be funded for purely arbitrary reasons.

Mr. President, the UDAG Program has proven that the Federal Government can act in a timely and sensitive way to reinforce private sector initiatives that strengthen local economies.

This amendment simply cannot be given adequate consideration today while the Senate is trying to complete action on this supplemental appropriations bill. I hope that the sponsors of the amendment would accept an offer to let the authorizing committee consider the very real issues they raise. I am sure that members of the committee share a common interest with the Senators from Iowa in insuring that UDAG funds are available in a fair manner to all distressed cities.

A floor amendment is not the proper forum for considering a matter with such complex and far-reaching consequences for one of our most effective programs.

Mr. President, I want to say to my colleague from Iowa that I would not vote for his proposal. I want to express as a member of the Banking Committee that I am interested in any thoughts that the Senator has in regard to this matter. I am interested in how the Senator feels about this general area, to see if we can find some acceptable manner to try to address some of the concerns the Senator has raised.

Although I would oppose the amendment in its current form, I do want to indicate that I am willing to work with the Senator from Iowa and others to see if we can be constructive in finding a way to insure, to a reasonable extent, that we have a program that is fair and balanced, and is designed to achieve the objectives of the law.

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator will yield before proceeding.

Mr. CHAFEE. I yield.

Mr. WILSON. I thank my colleague.

Mr. President, California is one of those States which, in my view, has suffered from the existing formula and the existing administration of the law. When a State has 11 percent of the population and 10 percent of the Nation's poverty population and receives only 2 percent of the funds, it suggests the formulae are in need of revision. So I welcome news that the chairman of the authorizing committee is considering holding hearings on this subject, and I am delighted by the statement of the majority that the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shares a concern in this regard.

I commend my colleague from Iowa for focusing on this problem.

Mr. ABDNOR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAFEE. I yield.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I, too, want to commend the Senator from Iowa for offering the amendment which he has now withdrawn. I do want to say, however, that he has certainly pointed out flaws in the formula for the distribution of this funding.

Obviously, from the comments which have come from Senators of various States, there are improvements that can be made.

When we took up the jobs bill about a year ago, we got into a big discussion that many of the factors are not sufficient to cover many of the States that are in dire need of participating in the program.

Because of this, I, too, want to thank the Senator from Iowa for bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate and, hopefully, in the future we will see improvements.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for 30 seconds?

Mr. CHAFEE. I yield for 30 seconds.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I could not believe one Senator would yield to another for only 30 seconds, but I hope that is all the time I will need.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator is running.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I spoke with Secretary Pierce on three different occasions today. He has promised me that he is going to look into this matter. He is aware of this problem.

I commend my friend. I think we can work out the situation so that one region does not receive undue preference over another.

I look forward to working in developing a selection formula that will recognize the needs of all sections of this country and will do justice to them in that formula.

AMENDMENT NO. 3649

(Purpose: To sunset the National Institute of Building Sciences Trust Fund after 5 years)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I send an unprinted amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] proposes an amendment numbered 3649.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 28, line 11, strike "And provided" and insert in lieu thereof: "Provided".

On page 28, line 13, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That the appropriation of $5,000,000 made in this paragraph shall revert to the Treasury, on October 1, 1989, and the National Institute of Building Sciences Trust Fund shall terminate following the final quarterly disbursement of interest provided for in this paragraph.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, what this does is take the National Institute of Building Sciences Trust Fund, which is being set up here, and it sunsets it after 5 years, which was the sunset period we agreed to previously.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island offered this amendment originally, which was objected to by the chairman of the subcommittee, Senator GARN. In the meantime, we have worked this out to put a 5-year sunset on the bill which makes it acceptable to the initiator of the bill and to Senator GARN. So the amendment is acceptable.

Mr. CHAFEE. I hope they stand firm. That would be acceptable. Of course, they may not stand firm because the House does not even have this.

Mr. HATFIELD. We will stand firm.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3649) was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3650

(Purpose: To provide funds for the installation of symbolic stars missing in the Senate Chamber)

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. STEVENS, and Mr. MURKOWSKI, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Hawaii, (Mr. MATSUNAGA), for himself, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. STEVENS, and Mr. MURKOWSKI, proposes an amendment numbered 3650.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 55, line 18, strike the period at the end thereof and insert the following: ": And provided further, That such sums as may be necessary shall be expended for the expeditious installation of symbolic stars for the four most recently admitted States not represented on the ceiling and walls of the Senate Chamber.".

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, 22 years ago when I was elected to the other body, I happened to be sitting in the Chamber and I looked up at the ceiling and counted only 48 stars surrounding the American eagle. Hawaii had been a State for 3 years.

I went up the Speaker of the House, Mr. John McCormack, at that time, and I said to him, "Mr. Speaker, when are you going to put that star up there for Hawaii?"

He said, "As soon as you tell me, Sparky, who else but you would count the stars."

For 2 years he gave me the same response. So 1 day, when I had Congressman Richard Hanna and Congressman Robert Leggett of California, sitting next to me in the Chamber, I said to them, "Hey, you guys, will you do me a favor? Will you count the stars up there?"

Some Members may know Dick Hanna, who was humorous, and he said, "Well, there is nothing else to do." Then Leggett said, "Hey, there are only 48."

I said, "That is right. Hawaii is missing and so is Alaska. Will you come with me?"

So I took them up to the Speaker at the desk and I said, "Mr. Speaker, here are two other Members who counted the stars."

He slapped his knee and he laughed, and he said, "OK, Sparky, you win, you win." That is how I got Hawaii's star, and Alaska's in the meantime, up in the House Chamber ceiling.

In 1976, 8 years ago, when I was elected to this body, I came into this Chamber. I looked at the ceiling and I counted only 48 stars. I looked at the wall and I counted only 46 stars. So, in this silver anniversary year, 25 years of statehood for Hawaii and Alaska, I ask my colleagues to join me in the amendment which will place not only the two stars up on the ceiling for Alaska and Hawaii, but two additional stars for New Mexico and Arizona on the walls, so that citizens of those two States can celebrate with the citizens of Hawaii and Alaska in this silver jubilee of statehood for Hawaii and Alaska.

It will not cost anything, Mr. President, it is merely to be included in the amount already asked for in the bill. The estimated cost will be, I understand, less than $900.

Mr. HATFIELD. $900.

Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. HATFIELD. I am very happy to work with the Senator to accomplish this objective. I do think, though, that in order to have this amendment in the proper form, it should indicate up to $900. There may be additional funds required later, but I think we ought to put a price tag on it. Will the Senator modify his amendment?

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I will modify my amendment.

Mr. HATFIELD. That is the estimate, is it not?

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Senator has pointed out a deficiency in this Chamber. I am happy to join him in correcting that deficiency.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, the amendment is cleared on this side, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment. Will he send the modification to the desk?

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 55, line 18, strike the period at the end thereof and insert the following: ": And provided further, That not to exceed $900 shall be expended for the expeditious installation of symbolic stars for the four most recently admitted States not represented on the ceiling and walls of the Senate Chamber.".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3650, as modified) was agreed to.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3651

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] proposes an amendment numbered 3651.

Mr. HATFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 52, after line 26, insert:

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISION E

Sec. 1. (a) Subject to the approval of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, the Architect of the Capitol shall have authority to borrow (and be accountable for), from time to time, from the appropriation account, within the contingent fund of the Senate, for "Miscellaneous Items", such amount as he may determine necessary to carry out the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint Resolution transferring the management of the Senate Restaurants to the Architect of the Capitol, and for other purposes", approved July 6, 1961, as amended (40 U.S.C. 174j-1 through 174j-8), and resolutions of the Senate amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto.

(b) Any such loan authorized pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall be for such amount and for such period, as the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration shall prescribe, and shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate to the Architect of the Capitol upon a voucher approved by the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.

(c) All proceeds from the repayment of any such loan shall be deposited in the appropriation account, within the contingent fund of the Senate, for "Miscellaneous Items", shall be credited to the fiscal year during which such loan was made, and shall thereafter be available for the same purposes for which the amount loaned was initially appropriated.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this is a housekeeping amendment which relates to the housekeeping accounts carried for the restaurant and the Capitol Architect. Because of the cyclical character of the restaurant when we go into recess, there are fewer moneys and revenues that come in and, therefore, there are times when the suppliers are not able to be paid until we return to session. The Rules Committee, this afternoon, adopted a policy that will provide for temporary borrowing from the miscellaneous account fund from the Senate contingency fund to be approved by the Rules Committee and to be repaid to that fund during the later cycle, when the restaurant is fully functioning with the whole complement of the Senate. This basically is to implement the Rules Committee policy to give a little smoother operation to the Senate Restaurant.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, the amendment has been cleared on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3651) was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3652

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] proposes an amendment numbered 3652.

On page 20 after line 8 insert the following:

INDEPENDENT AGENCIES

Funds Appropriated To The President

Appalachian Regional Development Programs

For an additional amount to carry out the programs authorized by the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965, as amended, $5,000,000 to remain available until expended.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this is a noncontroversial amendment which I believe has been cleared on both sides of the aisle. The amendment simply appropriates $3 million for economic and development activities in Pickens County, AL, and $2 million for an industrial site in Columbus, MS. These additional funds are needed to continue activities currently planned by the State and local authorities in areas which are economically pressed and, by some slip or error, these were not included in the bill. So I offer them at this time.

I think the Senator from Louisiana, the ranking minority member, has a comment to make.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, this has been cleared on this side.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3652) was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to reconsider the vote, Mr. President.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3653

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I have three technical amendments at the desk, and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc. These correct technical errors in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] proposes unprinted amendments en bloc numbered 3653.

On page 7, lines 7 and 8, strike the words "available for the Year of the Ocean Program" and insert in lieu thereof, "made available to the Year of the Ocean Foundation".

On page 8, line 4, following the word "which" insert the words "not to exceed".

On page 47, line 4, beginning with "the", strike out through "is" on line 25 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Public Law 98-211) are".

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, the amendments have been cleared on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment (No. 3653) was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. McCLURE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CORRECTION TO AMENDMENT 3617

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the D'Amato amendment numbered 3617, agreed to earlier today be deemed to restore the matter appearing on page 43, between lines 14 through 18 with the exception that the sum "$25,000,000" on line 15 is stricken and in lieu thereof, insert: "$21,700,000".

Mr. President, this is a technical amendment to correct an error.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, the request has been cleared on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I believe there is one amendment outstanding at this point. The Senator from Washington State is, hopefully, working out some final negotiation. If I am correct, I believe there are no other amendments now to be offered.

I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the supplemental appropriation bill contains $25 million to initiate construction on a permanent regional military training center in Honduras. This is just a downpayment on a $45 million facility—another $20 million is requested in the fiscal year 1985 foreign aid appropriation.

Mr. President, the regional military training center was first established last May to train Salvadoran and Honduran troops in battalion-sized units. At the time it was established, I requested information from the Department of Defense concerning future plans for this facility. The response I received is classified, but I will be pleased to share it with any of my colleagues who care to read it. But I can tell my colleagues that the document states that any "follow-on permanent construction will cost $2 million."

Mr. President, nearly 1 year ago, the Department of Defense was telling us that it would cost only $2 million to make the RMTC a permanent training facility.

But that was 1 year ago. Today, we have before us a proposal which seeks the expenditure of $45 million to make this facility a permanent regional military school. This is a twentyfold increase to be committing to this region at a time Honduras is publicly beginning to question its military relationship with the United States.

Is it wise to spend on a facility that we may or may not be able to use in the future to train Central American military units.

There are a number of issues which should be brought before the Senate before these funds are approved.

This new proposal to vastly expand and make permanent the regional military training center is a very good example of how this administration has conducted its Central American policy—a policy of incremental escalation.

The administration has slowly increased the U.S. presence in Central America, and some officials within the executive branch have even suggested that the United States should build a permanent U.S. military base in Honduras.

But that is not the issue before us today. We will debate permanent U.S. military bases in Central America when the military construction appropriations bill is debated by the Senate.

The issue before us today is whether or not we should appropriate $45 million of U.S. taxpayers' money as a gift to Honduras and El Salvador to build and operate a new regional military training center.

Now, I have visited the existing RMTC, as have many Members of the Senate. The RMTC was initially an austere facility. Both trainers and trainees lived in tents in stifling heat and often torrential rain.

But the facility has already been upgraded: The tents have disappeared and C.A.T. huts have been built to replace them.

When I was there in February, the commander of the RMTC, a Honduran colonel, told me that they would train a total of 18 battalions during calendar year 1984, using the facilities presently in place. He asked for no expansion. He asked for no funds to make the RMTC a permanent facility. He said they would train 18 battalions with no change in the existing facility structure.

But the administration has presented us with a plan to spend $45 million for a new facility—a facility that no country in the region has asked for.

In fact, Mr. President, recent reports from Honduras indicate a growing concern with the U.S. presence in that country.

The Christian Science Monitor says, "U.S. role under fire in Honduras."

The Louisville Courier Journal says, "U.S. military activities make Honduras uneasy."

The Washington Times says, "concern increases over relations with Honduras."

The Washington Post says, "Hondurans start chafing at U.S. ties."

The point of these articles is clear—Honduras is having second thoughts about U.S. policies toward that country.

What are the issues which concern a growing number of Hondurans?

Why is our most reliable ally in the region beginning to appear to have second thoughts about the U.S. policy toward Honduras?

First, the U.S. special forces are training a larger number of Salvadoran troops at the RMTC in Honduras than they are training Honduran troops. In fact, we are training three Salvadoran battalions for every two Honduran battalions trained.

I remind my colleagues that in 1969 El Salvador and Honduras fought a border war. There is still a great deal of residual fear and resentment left over from that war. The border dispute is still unresolved. I can report to my colleagues that many Hondurans are fearful that the Salvadorans, who are being trained on Honduran soil at the RMTC, may someday be used against Honduras to settle the old border disputes.

The new Chief of the armed forces in Honduras, General Lopez, and many members of the military supreme council, have publicly stated their doubts regarding the advisability of continuing to train large numbers of Salvadorans at the RMTC. Yet, no change has been made in the training ratios.

And I am told by recent visitors to Honduras that it is by no means a certainty that the Government of Honduras will continue to allow the RMTC to function in the present manner.

Last Thursday's Christian Science Monitor printed an article which read: "A high-powered Honduran Government commission has advised President Roberto Suazo Cordova to halt a U.S. training program for Salvadoran troops, pending the solution of a border dispute with El Salvador. The commission also recommended a halt on joint maneuvers involving Salvadoran troops."

Now, I am told by administration officials that the commission's recommendations were designed to get attention rather than to necessarily change existing policy.

Well, the recommendations got my attention. They are but one more public example that the United States no longer can roam freely in Honduras, implementing a regional policy which threatens to disrupt Honduras' already fragile and struggling democracy.

The former commander of the Honduran Armed Forces, General Alvarez, negotiated secret agreements with U.S. officials—agreements which permitted the United States to build 10 military facilities which dot the Honduran countryside. General Alvarez turned his country into what some have called, a North American aircraft carrier.

But many Hondurans felt that General Alvarez was a poor negotiator. He gave the U.S. Southern Command and the Nicaraguan Contras a free rein in his county. In return, the Honduran economy, already the poorest country in Central America, took on the character of war. The Ministry of Agriculture ran out of capital investment funds in order to buy land to build the U.S. airstrips. Social services were cut while the defense budget increases led to a large and unpopular tax increase with accompanying social and political unrest.

Well, there have been some serious changes in Honduras. General Alvarez is no longer the chief of the armed forces. He has been ousted by the senior officers which make up the military supreme council.

There is no doubt but what the new military leadership in Honduras is still pro-United States. But General Lopez and the supreme council will no longer negotiate deals which leave their country less secure and less than adequately compensated.

General Lopez knows that the border dispute with El Salvador has not been resolved. General Lopez was a hero of the 1969 war—a pilot who bravely fought for his country.

So, General Lopez has not forgotten that the regional crisis is not purely a crisis between East and West as some would have us believe. He knows the 1969 war was fought because of economic and population issues and strains which remain at the root of the regional war—strains which would exist without the Sandinistas, and the Cubans, and the Soviets.

General Lopez is a Honduran patriot. He will insist that his country strike a more proper balance with regard to its relations with the United States and the Reagan administration's policies in Honduras.

So, Mr. President, the complexion of our relations with Honduras is changing. Hondurans are demanding better compensation for their participation in the U.S. strategy for the region. And the jury is still out. Today, as we debate the regional military training center, we do not know the outcome of the new reality in Honduras. We have no assurances that the Hondurans are going to continue to allow the current level of U.S. presence in their country.

A recent Washington Times article stated that "one action that has contributed to the negative direction of the (U.S.-Honduran) relationship was the closing by Honduras of one of the U.S.-manned radar stations on its territory."

Now, I do not know if the Washington Times' version of the closing of Tiger Island is correct or not, but it should be instructive to us here today. If the Hondurans can close the Tiger Island radar site, they can certainly close the regional military training center. And I say to my colleagues that, as we appropriate more funds to strengthen the Salvadoran military, we are increasing the fears in Honduras that, once the civil war is over in El Salvador, a strengthened Salvadoran Army could seek to settle the older border dispute.

Mr. President, we have no formal agreement with Honduras regarding the construction of a RMTC. The Congress may appropriate $45 million in fiscal years 1984 and 1985. We may invest these funds only to see the Hondurans close the facilities to regional armies.

So, as we debate this funding today, we have no guarantees that we are not merely throwing these funds away. With no formal agreement, with the present strains in United States-Honduran relations, and with the continued unresolved Honduran-El Salvadoran border dispute, we are running a grave risk that the funds we appropriate today will not be fully utilized for that which they are appropriated.

Mr. President, today I received a transcript from a press conference held Friday in Honduras by the Minister of the Presidency, Carlos Flores, the President's chief of staff. He made it clear that the jury is still out on the future of the regional military training center. I would like to quote from the press conference.

(Flores) "I would say that our basic and foremost objective should be the training and professionalization of the Honduran Army. As for Honduras' possible assistance to other countries in the region, this is subject to the discussion and analysis of the document that we have presented. I would like to make an additional remark: We have said again and again that El Salvador has our unconditional political and moral support, because we favor that country's democratization process. The Salvadoran Government is the result of free, honest elections. But our assistance and cooperation depend primarily upon El Salvador's political willingness to resolve the border issues. In other words, there is a relationship between the two aspects—our willingness to help El Salvador consolidate its democratic system has a direct relationship to El Salvador's willingness to solve the border problem."

(Reporter) "Does this mean that if the Salvadoran Government does not put its avowed willingness to solve the border problem into practice, the training of Salvadoran soldiers in Honduras will be suspended?"

(Flores) "I would not like to jump to any conclusions. I would only like to say this clearly: We require a prompt resolution of the border problem, and this solution is directly linked to Honduras' possible assistance to El Salvador, a nation we admire."

So, I think it is clear from Secretary Flores' statements that the future of the RMTC in Honduras is very cloudy.

Frankly, Mr. President, I am not at all sure what we are buying with this $45 million. As I said earlier, we were planning to train 18 battalions this year in the austere facilities which already exist. Perhaps there are legal reasons for moving the facility to another location to property free of encumbrances. But that doesn't necessarily mean we should spend $45 million to do it.

The facility we are using today cost $2 million in capital cost. The capital cost alone of the proposed new permanent facility is almost $30 million—15 times the cost of the original facility.

So what are we buying for a 1,500-percent increase in cost? One would think a vastly larger number of troops would be trained at the new regional military training center. But for a 1,500-percent cost increase, we will be training relatively the same number of Central American soldiers we are training in the existing facility.

Now, as the ranking minority member of the Military Construction Appropriations Subcommittee, I am very sensitive to the cost of military facilities. I realize that this is not a Milcon project. We are providing security assistance funds to El Salvador and Honduras to build the facility. And certainly, a foreign aid construction project is a different animal from military construction. But we still need to know what we are buying with our $45 million investment.

The administration cannot tell us exactly how these funds will be spent because the RMTC has not even been designed yet. On the Military Construction Subcommittee, we do not appropriate construction funds until projects are at least 35 percent designed. But the RMTC is not 35 percent designed. Design has not even been initiated. And today, we are asked to appropriate construction funds without knowing what we are constructing. Whether foreign aid or military construction, I submit that appropriating construction funds without having some idea what we are buying is a bad practice—one which is unbecoming to a Senate concerned with the growing cost of Government programs.

The last issue I would like to discuss is the impact of establishing a permanent RMTC on the Contadora peace negotiations.

I think a majority of the Congress and the American people agree that a negotiated settlement to the crisis in Central America is preferable to a military solution. To that extent, the peace process proposed by the Contadora group of nations appears to offer the best opportunity for peace.

I am concerned, however, that the establishment of a permanent military training center in Honduras, as the administration proposes, runs counter to the goals and objectives of the Contadora process.

The peace proposal which the Contadora group drafted last month seeks the withdrawal of foreign military advisers and a reduction of arms in the region. A permanent RMTC means more foreign military advisers and a growth in regional armies. Such a facility could, therefore, actually harm the prospects of successful peace negotiations.

Mr. President, if the RMTC is to become an impediment to peace in Central America, it is not then in the best interests of United States policy in the region.

Mr. President, I raise these issues today because I believe the Senate should be aware of our growing presence in Central America.

I have brought what I believe to be a major policy issue before the Senate. Over the past year we have seen an incremental escalation by this administration in Central America. Building a permanent regional military training center in Honduras is but another increment in that escalation.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise to engage in a floor colloquy with Senators HATFIELD and JOHNSTON about funding for a special study to be conducted by the Army Corps of Engineers in my State.

In 1983, President Reagan declared Jefferson County—the largest county in Alabama—a disaster area. He declared it as such because on December 1, 1983, approximately 10 inches of rain fell in about 12 hours on the Birmingham area of Jefferson County. Severe flooding was experienced there along area creeks, including Valley Creek. The Corps of Engineers estimated that $8.5 million in flood damages will occur every year in the Valley Creek area.

On yesterday, I received final word that the Mobile, AL, district of the Corps of Engineers had completed a reconnaissance scope study of the flooding problems along Valley Creek through certain parts of Jefferson County. I was also notified that the reconnaissance report on the study had been approved by the division office of the corps in Atlanta, GA.

The corps conducted this initial investigation under the continuing authority of section 205 of the Flood Control Act of 1948, as amended, and found that further study was warranted. Having spent the approximately $7,500 allocated to it for its initial study, the corps now needs additional funding to the tune of $161,000 to conduct the second phase of its study. However, it will need a different authority to authorize these funds, since the nature and size of the Valley Creek flood control project dictate that no further funds be used under section 205.

The corps has indicated to me that further study can be conducted pursuant to the existing survey authority for the Warrior River and tributaries in Alabama, contained in House Document 414, 84th Congress 2d Session. Currently, there are no specific funds available to initiate such a second-tier reconnaissance type of study at this level.

Senator HATFIELD and Senator JOHNSTON, as you both know, the fiscal year 1985 energy-water appropriations bill has already been enacted into law (Public Law 98-360). I believe, however, that there is another way to obtain this funding very easily. Rather than offer an amendment to this supplemental appropriations bill to include the $161,000 which the corps needs to conduct the second phase of its reconnaissance study, I believe that it would be simpler for Congress to direct the corps to take this amount of money out of its own available funds to continue this reconnaissance feasibility study in fiscal year 1985, which begins October 1. Language to this effect can be put in the conference report on this bill. Then, maybe Senator HATFIELD and Senator JOHNSTON could send a letter to the corps explaining the congressional intent with regard to this matter. As added insurance, the Appropriations Committee could put some appropriate language in the continuing resolution, which will come down the pike prior to adjournment.

Mr. HATFIELD. I understand the senior Senator from Alabama. That would be a simple way to handle this particular matter, and I thank him for not offering an amendment. We will be happy to work with the Senator at the conference on this bill and try very diligently to see that this is done in a manner satisfactory to the Senator's interest.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I agree with the distinguished floor manager of the bill. I want to assure Senator HEFLIN that we will do all that we can to help him out in this regard.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to thank both the distinguished majority floor manager of this bill, Senator HATFIELD, and Senator JOHNSTON for their kindness and cooperation on this matter.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I want to express my full support for the committee amendment restricting the expenditure of funds by the Federal Communications Commission to implement its tentatively adopted changes in the so-called 7-7-7 rule as they apply to television station ownership. This amendment, offered in committee by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] and the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], is an absolute necessity if the Congress is to have an adequate opportunity to consider the many important policy questions which are raised by the Commission's actions.

What the FCC has tentatively decided to do, within the past few weeks, is change its longstanding, multiple ownership rules that will permit any single entity to dramatically increase its ownership of television stations. For example, each network will have the ability to acquire seven additional VHF television stations in major markets which will provide them with direct access, through wholly owned stations, to over one-third of American viewers. Under the new FCC rules, all limitations on network ownership of television stations will be removed by 1990. Congress needs time to evaluate the impact this fundamental change in communications policy will have on diversity and competition in the broadcast marketplace.

This is why, on July 25, along with the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], I sent a letter to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary asking for hearings on concentration of power in the broadcast industry. I am pleased that the chairman has announced hearings will be held on September 11. This will allow us the opportunity to begin the process of a complete study of the issues. It is vital that we consider the impact on the public of a complete grant of power to the networks, or any other entity that is in a financial position to acquire a commanding group of television outlets across the country. We must study the effects on diversity of viewpoints which will be available to the public in news and public affairs broadcasts; we must look at the impact on minority groups who are greatly underrepresented as owners of station licenses which are instruments of public trust granted by the Federal Government; and we must study the financial impact on companies which produce programming for television broadcast.

On August 2, 1984, the Senate Appropriations Committee, by an 18-to-7 vote, adopted an amendment to H.R. 6040 which was sponsored by Senators RUDMAN and INOUYE. The amendment defers until June 30, 1985, implementation of the FCC order as it applies to television stations—an appropriate time for congressional review.

The networks currently control 100 percent of national prime time programming and 100 percent of all nationally delivered news, morning and evening. With their currently five owned and operated VHF stations in the largest national markets, they reach some 20 percent of TV households. Through their affiliates, they reach 100 percent of TV households.

It has been suggested that the 7-7-7 rule is outdated because there are a great many more television stations in existence today than there were when the rule was adopted in 1953. The Washington Post noted in its editorial in opposition to the rule that there has been an almost sixfold increase in the number of television stations in the past 31 years. While this observation sounds impressive, it really misses the point. While new television stations were cropping up around the country over the past 31 years, the networks maintained their commanding market shares.

I have been able to obtain statistics from 1956 for the networks' owned and operated stations, and they are quite enlightening when compared to today's. According to an article in the journal Law and Contemporary Problems, in 1956 the networks had the following shares of the national market as a percentage of the total number of television households: NBC—23 percent; CBS—20 percent; and ABC—19 percent. Today the figures are: NBC—19.75 percent; CBS—20.57 percent; and ABC—20.75 percent. What these figures show is that the networks' dominance has not been diminished in the least over the past 30 years. The conclusion to be drawn is the mere increase in the number of stations provides insufficient justification to do away with the rule.

Clearly, then, the number of stations a given entity may hold is irrelevant. It is the audience they reach that is crucial. To quote FCC Commissioner Mimi Dawson in her dissenting opinion to the FCC decision that one cannot equate a TV station in New York City, the Nation's largest market, with a TV station in Glendive, MT, the Nation's smallest.

If the networks can acquire seven additional stations, each could directly reach 35 percent, and with cable extension, 40 to 45 percent of American viewers. With these major owned-and-operated stations, three entities can control almost one-half of all local news in the Nation, along with the national news they already control. When all limits are removed, the potential for network dominance of local news and programming will be unlimited.

With 12 owned and operated stations each, the networks can effectively stunt the recent growth in first-run syndicated programming, such as "PM Magazine" and "Entertainment Tonight." To launch a first-run program, independent producers must place their show on stations in New York, Los Angeles, and Chicago, and reach a minimum of 60 percent of the national audience; otherwise such productions are economically unfeasible.

Of the commercial television stations, VHF and UHF, excluding religious broadcasters and foreign language stations, 78 percent are affiliates of the networks. A fourth network would have to entice a large percentage of the affiliates to preempt network programs, which they are reluctant to do on any sustained basis for fear of angering their network. Network-owned and operated stations simply never preempt programs from their network for independently produced entertainment programming.

With networks reaching, through their owned and operated stations, 35 to 45 percent of the national audience under the new rules—and after 6 years when the FCC order sunsets, potentially reaching 100 percent of the national audience, it will be impossible for a fourth network or ad hoc networks to emerge because they will be incapable of attracting sufficient advertiser support. It could simply never happen, mainly due to FCC decisions made in 1947 and 1952 which set in concrete the television allocation landscape.

The new rule may also allow the three networks to, through a backdoor approach, repeal the financial interest, syndication, and prime time access rules. Furthermore, if the fairness doctrine is repealed, a public official will not be entitled to equal time to rebut an attack by a network station.

Without congressional action, the FCC decision will become effective in the near future. It is imperative that Congress be afforded some opportunity to examine the implications of this decision on competition, diversity, and first amendment principles in the broadcast marketplace. The amendment to the supplemental appropriations bill provides a reasonable means for Congress to protect its opportunity to study this matter before it is too late.

Mr. President, in the recent past this Senator has had some disagreements with the Federal Communications Commission. In this Senator's view, some of its decisions have been very different in scope and effect than was advisable. In other words, they were not at all close to what I would have voted for if I were a member of the Commission. But they did not rise to the level of being so obnoxious that they were in need of remedial legislation. However, one, prior to the instant decision, was so out of line with reason that the Senate voted overwhelmingly to stop it.

Let it not be said that I want to run the FCC. It is simply that sometimes the Commission's efforts need to be redirected by the Congress—which is entirely in order in that the Commission is an article I institution.

No matter what the Commission might ultimately decide to do, the Senate needs to review the issues which have been raised. As I have noted, hearings have already been scheduled for next month before the Judiciary Committee. I also understand that the Commerce Committee may wish to hold hearings early in the next Congress.

While I believe that the Commission has taken the wrong road in its search for a reasonable policy on station ownership, I have an open mind on what the proper solution should be. This being said, at this time I have a strong inclination as to what might reasonably be included in a final rule.

Mr. President, as I have noted, merely restricting the number of stations that a single entity might own does not deal with the real issue of power in the marketplace of ideas and programming. Total reach of an individual group of stations should be the primary benchmark. In this regard, I find great merit in the dissenting views of Commissioner Dawson. To this Senator, it is not unreasonable to allow an individual entity to be limited to a reach of 30 percent of the Nation's households, with no more than 25 percent through VHF stations.

In order to protect the interests of Hispanics, Asians, blacks, and other minorities, and women, all of whom are underrepresented as owners of television stations, a limit should be placed on the number of stations any one entity may own. Without such a numerical limit, a single person could acquire 40 or 50 stations and still be within the household reach limits. This type of massive acquisition could so inflate the price of small stations that groups who have not, to date, been able to purchase television stations would be effectively precluded from doing so. To prevent such a situation from occurring, the numerical limit chosen by the Commission in its tentative ruling—12 VHF stations—seems reasonable. In keeping with court rulings, such a limit would be subject to waiver, but only under the most compelling circumstances—none of which come to mind. Indeed, I would think it appropriate to keep the number of waivers within the number which have been issued under the current rules.

In light of the fact that the existing 7-7-7 rule had no sunset date and it stood for 31 years, it would seem reasonable to issue a new rule without a sunset provision. As the change I have outlined is a significant one—increasing by 140 percent the total number of VHF stations which someone may own—it should be established with some permanence, thereby requiring an affirmative action by the Commission to further change it.

And finally, Mr. President, it would seem appropriate and in concert with the interests of the Senate that such a rule as I have outlined not be implemented prior to the end of March of next year. In this way, the committees of jurisdiction would be in a good position to complete their studies of this matter while the status quo was maintained.

Mr. President, I believe that a rule encompassing what I have outlined would be both progressive and reasonable in scope and content. I might note that a number of Senators with whom I have discussed this matter have expressed a great deal of interest in it. It is my hope that the Commission might adopt such an approach during the reconsideration phase of its proceedings.

AGRICULTURAL CREDIT

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I want to commend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] for bringing the problem of agricultural credit to the attention of the Senate yesterday, and I was proud to join him in that effort. It seems to me that the very least we can do is make sure that our agricultural producers—the most efficient and productive in the world—receive credit on at least the same terms as those provided to foreign governments.

Frequently, we hear about the debt problems of many countries. In recent months, it's been in Latin America. Each time, the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Donald Regan, and others have convened meetings to discuss the situation and recommend ways to avert a crisis. The credit situation in rural America is more important, Mr. President, but the problem is that it's on a daily basis, and doesn't receive the attention like Argentina or other countries when they have problems.

We've got to bring this to the attention of Mr. Regan, the President, and other officials of this administration. Even though our producers are extremely efficient, and even though agricultural exports are about the only reason our trade posture is not even worse—we enjoy about a $20 billion a year surplus in agricultural trade—many farmers are finding it difficult to stay in business due to the lack of credit. Certainly, the way out of this problem is to improve farm income, through stepped up exports and other measures, but we also must pay close attention to the credit situation. Most of the lenders involved are not huge banks, but small, rural banks who stick with these men and women and work with them to help them continue their farming operations. However, the overall debt load facing the agricultural sector of our economy is comparable to that of certain foreign, debtor nations, as Senator EXON pointed out when he introduced Senate Concurrent Resolution 130 on June 29, 1984.

The resolution asks for equity. It says treat our own people at least as well as we treat foreign, debtor nations. Indeed, we should do more, and I hope we will. We must ensure that we have a strong agricultural base in this country. It's truly the one area where we have a clear advantage over other countries, and we have to continue to make sure that this is the case. Certainly, we've got to do more work on the Federal budget deficit. That's why I've supported a complete freeze on Federal spending each of the last 2 years, and it's also why I continue to hope that we can adopt a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced Federal budget. I've supported this amendment since coming to the Senate, and although we passed it in 1982 in this body, it was defeated in the House of Representatives. Reducing the deficit, and moving toward a balanced Federal budget would ease the pressure on interest rates, and help the credit situation in rural America. In addition to that, however, we should agree to the provisions of the pending amendment.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to go on record in support of this concept, and once again I commend my colleague from Nebraska for his efforts.

POLAR ICEBREAKING FORCE

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I am pleased that the committee has included, in chapter X of the bill, a provision that will keep the polar icebreaker fleet operated by the Coast Guard at its current strength of five vessels. That action is a sound one that is in the national interest.

I am particularly grateful for the cooperation and understanding displayed by my colleague from North Dakota [Mr. ANDREWS] in the matter. I was gratified to have the opportunity to work with him and with members of his staff to define the language that appears in the bill. I also appreciate the cooperation of several of our colleagues in dealing appropriately and effectively with the matter.

Mr. President, the President's budget for fiscal year 1985 provided for a reduction in the number of polar icebreakers from five to four. In my judgment, that reduction would seriously affect the ability of the Coast Guard to do its job.

The Coast Guard has testified that it has missions that require the availability of 4.2 icebreakers. It should be obvious that we cannot have one-fifth of an icebreaker in commission and operational, so the ability to meet the commitment requires five ships. I suspect that someone, somewhere, looked at that 4.2 and concluded that, since it was closer to four than to five, four ships would be adequate.

My colleagues will understand that meeting a 4.2-ship commitment with only four ships would impose much hardship on both ships and men. Moreover, and perhaps more important, a four-ship force would have no capacity to respond should a ship suffer a major casualty, as happens to icebreakers with some regularity and as has happened to one ship during each of the last 2 years. As my colleagues will understand, icebreaking can be a difficult and dangerous undertaking, particularly in the polar regions.

Because the availability of an adequate Coast Guard icebreaking capability is vital to a number of civilian- and defense-related activities in polar waters, some of which are essential to our national security, the consequences of a casualty to an already reduced force could be very serious indeed. I note that there are only two icebreakers based on the east coast, so that the decommissioning of one would eliminate a backup and emergency response capability, should the other ship encounter difficulty.

We should also note that, as fully equipped and manned vessels, the Coast Guard icebreakers are able and available to perform other service, and that they have done so with regularity and with success.

Based on my experience in the Navy, I can testify to the importance of adequate redundancy in a force and to the hardship that attempting to sustain a five-ship mission with a four-ship force would impose on both men and materiel.

Both the House and Senate authorizing committees, after hearings on the issue, recommended sustaining the current five-ship force. That position was included in the authorization bill subsequently passed by Congress and signed into law.

I note that the authorization bill changed the procedure for funding the fixed costs of the polar icebreaking force by placing all the funds to meet those costs in the Coast Guard budget. The other agencies involved, which use the services of the icebreakers for various purposes, must still pay operational costs. I believe that the change in the funding pattern may help to alleviate the apparent reluctance of the other agencies to bear a portion of the fixed costs from their own budgets.

It is, of course, clear that two of the five icebreakers now in service are very old and should be replaced. The Congress has mandated that the Department of Transportation begin the process of purchasing two new polar icebreakers to be operational by the end of fiscal year 1992. Those ships would replace the two oldest current icebreakers, Northwind and Westwind. Until the new ships are ready for service, however, it would, in my view, be foolhardy for us to reduce our polar icebreaking force to a point where it would have neither flexibility nor redundancy nor the ability to respond effectively to an emergency.

Because we have not yet been able to take up the Department of Transportation appropriations bill for fiscal year 1985, there has not been an opportunity to address the matter directly. The Coast Guard, however, faces the necessity to commence steps to lay up one ship. It would be most unfortunate if those actions were to take place needlessly, at significant costs in money and to the individuals involved. In consequence, we determined that the best method of proceeding was to include the provision that appears in the bill before us today. That provision does not prejudge the ultimate outcome, but prevents any activity until we are able to make a determination about fiscal year 1985.

Mr. President, at the appropriate time I hope that we can take action to ensure funding to maintain a five-ship polar icebreaking force in fiscal year 1985. Until then, the provision in this bill will ensure that we continue to sustain an essential national capability. I commend my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee for their wisdom in including it.

FUNDING FOR ASBESTOS CLEANUP IN SCHOOLS

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise in support of the inclusion of $50 million for the Environmental Protection Agency to begin implementing the School Asbestos Hazard Abatement Act of 1984.

The problem of asbestos in the schools is a serious one. Exposure to asbestos is associated with some very serious diseases, including asbestosis, mesothelioma, and lung cancer. These diseases display themselves many years after exposure. Asbestos is a ticking time bomb. In most cases, not enough time has passed for the devastating symptoms to show up in the children, teachers, and school administrators who have been sitting in classrooms with crumbling asbestos.

And there are many schools that were built with this dangerous substance. A recent, unpublished survey by the Environmental Protection Agency, cited in a New York Times article on August 7, 1984, found 31,000 schools across the country with asbestos. They must be cleaned up in order to assure our children safe and healthy places in which to learn.

The existing asbestos program of the Environmental Protection Agency requires all schools to inspect for asbestos and to notify employees and parent-teacher organizations when the substance is found. However, until the Senate and the House of Representatives recently approved the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act of 1984, no Federal assistance was authorized to assist hard-pressed school districts in paying for the cleanup. I was pleased to have worked with a bipartisan group of Senators on drafting that bill.

Mr. President, the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act does nothing to clean up schools without funding. The Appropriations Committee is to be commended for including in this supplemental appropriations bill the full $50 million authorized by the asbestos abatement legislation for 1984. I hope that EPA will waste no time in getting this important program underway.●

IN SUPPORT OF THE ASBESTOS SCHOOL HAZARD ABATEMENT PROGRAM

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I am pleased that the fiscal year 1984 supplemental appropriations bill (H.R 6040) contains $50 million in funding for the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Program. On June 6, 1984, I joined with my distinguished colleagues, Senators ABDNOR, STAFFORD, and LAUTENBERG, in offering an amendment to S. 1285, the math-science bill, to establish the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Program within the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA]. Today—in this bill—we are providing funding for the program.

The Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Program directs the Administrator of EPA to make loans and grants to financially needy local educational agencies, to undertake asbestos abatement work. A total of $600 million is authorized to be appropriated for the program over 7 years: $50 million in each of the fiscal years 1984 and 1985, and $100 million in each of the 5 succeeding fiscal years. Abatement actions could include one or more of the following activities: Removal, replacement, encapsulation, containment, or enclosure. The appropriate abatement measures will depend upon the nature of the asbestos threat in any given school building.

The Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Program also sets aside funds for EPA to expand its Scientific and Technical Assistance Program in the area of asbestos hazards in schools. In fiscal year 1984, 10 percent of the funds appropriated for the abatement program will be reserved for program administration and a scientific and technical assistance effort. Specifically, the EPA is directed to establish a training center to provide instruction on asbestos assessment and abatement, develop and disseminate abatement guidance documents, and develop a comprehensive testing and technical assistance program.

EPA estimates that between 12,000 and 14,000 public and private school buildings contain friable asbestos—that is, the type of asbestos that could be released into the air. Many local educational agencies simply do not have the financial resources to undertake a major asbestos abatement effort. Certain States have made some assistance available for abatement programs in schools. But such resources, too, are limited. New York State, for example, has spent $1.75 million annually over the last 4 years to assist schools in controlling asbestos hazards.

Mr. President, it is both appropriate and necessary for Congress to provide increased Federal resources to assist in abating this problem when it threatens the health of American children in public and private schools across the country. We must move ahead in a more systematic and rapid manner to abate the asbestos hazard where it exists in our Nation's schools. Establishing the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Program is an important step, as is appropriating the $50 million needed for program activities in fiscal year 1984.●

LAKE GASTON PIPELINE—AN ENVIRONMENTAL NIGHTMARE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the House of Representatives last week took a sensible and prudent step that is immensely important to many citizens of North Carolina and southside Virginia. It approved a committee report to accompany the supplemental appropriations bill that included a restriction on funding for a pipeline between Virginia Beach, VA, and Lake Gaston in North Carolina. The report stipulated that no water should be transported to Virginia Beach from the lake until completion of a full environmental impact statement by the Corps of Engineers and the EPA.

Mr. President, for background purposes, I would mention that Virginia Beach has proposed building an 85-mile pipeline that would carry up to 60 million gallons of water each day from Lake Gaston. Understandably, the proposal has met with strong opposition from the people of my State, as well as from people living in the southside area of Virginia, which borders on the lake.

Mr. President, I have opposed this pipeline project from day one, and so have the citizens who have turned out in droves to participate in the public hearings on the proposal. Indeed, it has become an environmental nightmare. The Corps of Engineers prepared a simple environmental analysis which concluded that draining 60 million gallons of water from the Roanoke River Basin would have no real impact on the lakes or tributaries in the system.

Public hearings have raised substantial questions about the impact of the pipeline on the environment. In my judgment, only a full and detailed examination of the proposal can provide satisfactory answers to those questions.

Mr. President, as all parties to this controversy know, the pipeline proposal is being fiercely contested in Federal court. An action to block the pipeline until an EIS is done is now pending in the Eastern District of North Carolina. A similar action is pending in Virginia.

If it is the opinion of my distinguished colleague from Oregon, Senator HATFIELD, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that the Senate should not take a position on the project pending outcome of the litigation, then the Senator from North Carolina will not force the Senate to engage in lengthy debate on this regional issue.

However, Mr. President, it is my firm conviction that an EIS should be completed before the pipeline is built. Now is no time to throw caution to the wind and then, at some time down the road, regret the shortsightedness.

I urge Senators who will be participating in the House-Senate conference on this bill to acquiesce in this matter and adopt the position taken by the House.

W.G. HUXTABLE PUMPING STATION

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am pleased to call the Senate's attention to the Appropriation Committee's action in including funding to pay damages for the May 1983 equipment malfunctions and operational difficulties at the Corps of Engineers W.G. Huxtable pumping station near Marianna, AR.

This amendment will correct a serious injustice that occurred early in 1983 when the actions of a Federal agency resulted in economic hardship and losses to farmers in eastern Arkansas. I would emphasize, Mr. President, that this disaster occurred through no fault of private citizens.

It is appropriate to relate to my colleagues some of the background information that is necessary to understand why.

The Huxtable pumping plant was authorized by Congress and construction was completed in the mid-1970's by the Army Corps of Engineers. It's purpose was to help alleviate flooding in the eastern part of Arkansas. At the time of its construction it was one of the largest projects of its nature in the Nation. It has been a tremendous asset to the agricultural community in eastern Arkansas.

In May 1983, Mr. President, this plant was operated at a reduced capacity and eventually shut down for several hours during a critical period of heavy rainfall. The resultant flooding of farmland, which would not have occurred otherwise, devastated thousands of cropland acres, crops, and structures in the area.

The committee provision would respond to the fact that legal recourse would otherwise be unavailable to these individuals.

The committee provision would appropriate $2 million to pay the damages and the committee has directed that the Corps of Engineers "work closely with local interests and representatives of the Department of Agriculture to determine eligibility and to settle claims for damages incurred."

I commend the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Energy and Water Development [Mr. HATFIELD], the ranking member [Mr. JOHNSTON], and my colleague from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] for their efforts on this matter.

PACKWOOD-BRADLEY AMENDMENT NO. 3622

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I regret that a meeting away from the Senate prevented my casting a vote on the tabling motion on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. Had I been in the Chamber I would voted aye.

Mr. President, the problem of the population explosion is a heavy yoke around the neck of government leaders in developing countries which are trying to improve the lives of their citizens. These leaders need our help. That is the message that is coming out of the International Conference on Population now going on in Mexico City.

Spiraling growth rates in the Third World are a brake on economic growth and development. Our contributions to organizations which provide family planning services are used to assist governments which are struggling to deal with this problem. Our funds are not used for abortions or other activities prohibited by U.S. law—a law which I strongly support. Our funds are used to support voluntary family planning activities which are alternatives to abortion.

If we cut off contributions to organizations such as the U.N. Fund for Population Activities or the International Planned Parenthood Federation, we are actually jeopardizing our own interests. These organizations have proven track records. A cutoff of support for these organizations will cripple some of the most effective organizations involved in providing family planning services. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in response to amendments I have been pleased to sponsor, has more than once approved increased funding for population assistance programs and earmarked contributions to the U.N. Fund for Population Activities.

The newly announced U.S. policy unfortunately seems to be having an effect well beyond that which was even intended by its authors; 10 years ago the United States was in the vanguard of those who were rightly pointing out the danger of uncontrollably escalating population growth rates. Now, at a time when developing countries are reaching out to us as never before for help in dealing with this problem, future U.S. support appears to them to be uncertain.

This is no time to abandon our longstanding commitment to international population assistance programs. I support the Packwood-Bradley amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 3611—RELATING TO TAIWAN

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, my distinguished colleague from Rhode Island [Senator PELL], offered an amendment concerning the future of Taiwan. A challenge to the germaneness of this amendment has been sustained by the Senate.

Mr. President, the amendment proposed by Senator PELL is inappropriate and untimely. The Senate was wise not to consider it. Bilateral relations between the United States and the People's Republic of China are improving but obviously still have growing pains. The People's Republic of China is adamantly opposed to any action by the United States which implies, even remotely, interference in their internal affairs. It makes no sense in the present delicate climate to add one more complicating factor to the task of continuing the momentum of improved relations.

The Taiwan Relations Act and numerous statements by the United States, including the 1972 Shanghai Communique, make abundantly clear that the future of Taiwan must be decided in a peaceful manner by the Chinese themselves. The United States has deliberately refrained from taking a position on any particular outcome or procedure. Neither U.S. interests nor the objective of finding a peaceful outcome would be served by injecting ourselves into this issue at a time when our relations with the peoples of the region are proceeding in a manner that supports a long-term solution. Resolution of the Taiwan question is going to be reached gradually and, most importantly, by the parties themselves. Measures such as the amendment offered by my friend from Rhode Island do not support that process.

Mr. President, I would also point out U.S. policy set forth in 1972 and followed by four of our Presidents: "The United States acknowledges that all Chinese on either side of the Taiwan strait maintain that there is but one China and that Taiwan is part of China."

Finally, Mr. President, I note that the Pell amendment is opposed by the Taiwan authorities.

NATIONAL CENTER FOR TOXICOLOGICAL RESEARCH

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I want to commend the House and Senate Appropriations Committees for including important new funding in the 1984 supplemental appropriations bill for the National Center for Toxicological Research [NCTR] near Pine Bluff, AR. Development of this facility is clearly one of many steps which Congress must take to enhance the Federal Government's research capability.

The House of Representatives approved $13.87 million for renovation and construction at the facility. The Senate Appropriations Committee included an additional $1 million in its version of the bill.

I am hopeful that the bill will soon receive final congressional approval, be signed by the President and funds be obligated for the work at NCTR.

Mr. President, I am proud to note that although the administration did not recommend any funding for NCTR in this supplemental bill, the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control, also known as the Grace Commission, recognized the facility's effectiveness and recommended that more Federal research be conducted there.

For the benefit of my colleagues who are unfamiliar with NCTR, this facility is engaged in research for a number of Federal agencies, including the Food and Drug Administration and the Environmental Protection Agency. The personnel at NCTR examine toxic and potentially toxic substances which occur in our environment and identify methods to reduce or eliminate their adverse affects. The absolute necessity of this kind of research is growing as our Nation expands technologically, so that we can be sure we understand the human health implications of the new developments.

Finally, I want to commend my colleagues in the House, Congressmen ALEXANDER and ANTHONY, and my colleague in the Senate, Senator BUMPERS, for their efforts on this matter of importance to our State and our Nation.

DODD AMENDMENT NO. 3620

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, the establishment of democratic governments in Central America is of strategic importance to our Nation. How we go about achieving this goal has been a matter of great debate in the Senate. The bill we have before us would provide yet additional military assistance to El Salvador. It would also provide for new moneys for a variety of nonmilitary programs.

Mr. President, I firmly support the enhancement of social and economic assistance to Central America. If we do not do all we can to shore up the economies of the region, to improve the health of its citizens, and the education of its children, no amount of military aid will bring about stability and democracy in the region. However, we do not succeed in addressing the serious economic and social problems in the region simply by throwing money at the problem. Congress should carefully define and put into place the programs through which new funding would be spent.

That has not yet happened. The bill before us would provide initial spending for a number of social and economic programs recommended by the so-called Kissinger Commission, the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America. However, authorizing legislation, addressing the proposals of the Commission, has not yet come before the Senate. I believe that this body should waste no time in reaching such legislation. Until we do, however, I believe we would have no assurance that the funds we would appropriate would actually further the goals we seek: strengthening the economy and the social fabric of our neighbors in Central America.

That is one reason, Mr. President, that I shall support the amendment of my colleague from Connecticut [Mr. DODD]. His amendment would delete foreign aid appropriations in the bill that are not authorized by current law. That would include the initial funding for the nonmilitary programs recommended by the Kissinger Commission.

The amendment before us would also cut military assistance to El Salvador. This Congress has already provided over $126 million in military assistance to El Salvador in the current fiscal year. That is roughly 50 percent above fiscal year 1983 levels. I supported passage recently of House Joint Resolution 492, which provided $62 million in supplemental military assistance to El Salvador. I am not convinced, however, that El Salvador immediately needs and can absorb the infusion of some $116 million in additional military assistance as provided by the bill. The funding is almost equal to the total amount already appropriated during the current fiscal year.

Moreover, the moneys would remain available through the end of March 1985. That would, I fear, reduce the ability of Congress, to use the threat of withholding military assistance as a means to maintain effective oversight over progress toward democracy and human rights in El Salvador. I know I am not alone in my hopes that President Duarte will make progress in stabilizing his country, and enhancing democratic principles. However, our continued support to President Duarte should be based on continued progress.

Mr. President, I note that my distinguished colleague from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE] plans to offer later an amendment to delete only the $116 million in military assistance to El Salvador. For the reasons I have outlined, I intend to support that amendment as well.

Progress in Central America, specifically in El Salvador, will unavoidably come slowly. I am heartened by the progress we have seen, with the election of President Duarte, and the conviction of the murderers of the four churchwomen. However, much remains to be done to bring to justice those responsible for so many other deaths and abuses of human rights, to stabalize the economy, and to strengthen the democracy. We will not achieve these goals by providing new funds for economic and social support before the Senate has had a chance to approve the programs and put them into place. We will not achieve these goals by providing more military assistance than is wise or justified.

CARGO DIVERSION

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I am concerned that the committee has struck the House provision, in chapter III of the bill, that prohibited the Department of Defense from making certain proposed changes in Military Sealift Command shipments to the Pacific. The language was identical to a provision approved by the Senate as part of the Defense authorization bill, and the matter is of great concern to several Members of this body.

I do of course understand that the committee's action was taken in response to actions by the Department of Defense to terminate the activities that necessitated the provision in the first place, and that in consequence it may be that legislative language is no longer absolutely necessary. Nonetheless, I remain concerned that the Congress make it clear that the Department should not act hastily or without demonstration of clear benefit in making changes to existing shipping procedures. Any action of that nature has consequences for the jobs and welfare of Americans who work in the affected ports, and we cannot take lightly the imposition of hardship upon them.

May I ask the chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee the reason for deletion of the provision?

Mr. STEVENS. I appreciate the concern of the Senator from Alabama. He has stated the situation correctly, in that it appears that actions by the Department of Defense have eliminated the need to include the provision in the bill before us. Moreover, as the Senator knows, provisions of that sort in an appropriations bill tend to acquire a life of their own, and our judgment was that, absent an immediate need for the provision, it would be preferable not to enact it into law.

Mr. DENTON. I thank the Senator for his comments, and I understand his concern. Certainly I do not believe that the Congress should prevent the administration from finding more cost-effective ways of doing things, but I do believe that, when there are serious consequences for the economies of the affected localities, the case should be clearly made and the Members of Congress who represent those localities should be advised of significant changes to current operational patterns.

May I inquire of the Senator from Alaska whether the subcommittee agrees that, in evaluating its programs, the Department of Defense should keep in mind the need to sustain an adequate capability to move military cargo in time of mobilization or emergency?

Mr. STEVENS. I assure the Senator that the subcommittee has that consideration very much in mind, not only in this instance but in others as well. It was for that reason that we included report language urging the Military Sealift Command to consider the need to ensure participation of the four port ranges—the Great Lakes, the east and west coasts, and the gulf coast—when it makes decisions about its shipping patterns. We agree with several Members of this body that we must maintain a distributed capability to move essential military cargo, and the intent of the report language is to ensure that we do exactly that.

Mr. DENTON. I thank the Senator for his assurance. It is, of course, the case that the provision approved by the House will have to be dealt with in conference. It may be that, when the conference occurs, our colleagues in the other body will believe strongly that the provision should remain in the bill. When it struck the provision did the subcommittee mean to state the firm opposition of the Senate to its inclusion in the bill, or did the subcommittee simply consider that the provision appeared unnecessary?

Mr. STEVENS. I assure the Senator that it was on the latter basis, and that our actions probably would not have been taken if the conditions that first necessitated the provision still obtained. If our colleagues in the other body believe that there is still a clear need for the provision, we shall, of course, listen to them very carefully.

Mr. DENTON. I thank the Senator. I understand the position that he has stated. I remain concerned, however, that the Department not again take hasty or ill-considered action that would have highly negative effects upon the national capability to move military cargo and upon the number of ports available and utilized for that purpose. So long as any proposed change is carefully considered, supported with information to show clear benefit, and coordinated in advance with the parties most directly concerned, I will not consider that a prohibition of the sort inserted by the House is essential. I believe that the legislative history now makes clear the views of the Congress on the matter, and I hope that the Department of Defense will act accordingly.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Alaska for his cooperation.

ANIMAL DAMAGE CONTROL

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the livestock producers in Montana and Idaho, and perhaps in a few other States, are facing a crisis in the operation of their Animal Damage Control Programs this year. These programs, operated through the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, have been severely affected this year by inflation and increased pay costs. On top of this, there is an increase in the number of coyotes this year and, as a result, livestock depredation is also increased.

Because of these factors, the Montana Animal Damage Control Program is in dire need of $60,000 to get them through the remainder of the fiscal year. I understand that Idaho has also had to cut back on their predator control efforts to stay within budget limitations.

I and others have requested increased funding for this important program, and I want to thank the Senator from Idaho and all members of the Appropriations Committee for recommending an increase of $3,500,000 in the animal damage control operations budget in the fiscal year 1985 Interior appropriations bill soon to be before the Senate. I understand that the Department of the Interior has indicated that these additional funds, if appropriated, would permit an additional $2.9 million to be used in Western States to reduce livestock and agricultural losses, and particularly to protect lambing ranges.

There is an additional problem with adequate funding of the Animal Damage Control Program. The Fish and Wildlife Service is now charging each State 15 percent of their allocation to cover the administrative costs of the program. This means that the limited funds available to the States are cut even further. There is no question from anyone familiar with the ADC Program that the actual fieldwork is where the real value of the program lies.

Mr. President, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee [Mr. McCLURE] if he believes the Fish and Wildlife Service should attempt to make additional funds available to Montana and Idaho to get them through the remainder of the fiscal year?

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Montana for raising this issue during the consideration of the supplemental appropriations bill. As the Senator knows, I share his concern over the funding levels for the Animal Damage Control Program. It is my hope that the Department of the Interior can make additional funds available to Montana and Idaho from their existing budget later on this year.

I have checked with the Fish and Wildlife Service today and am told that there is actually not much control work that can be done this time of year. Most predation occurs in October through March, when young livestock are born and the livestock is still concentrated, and also when the young are being moved to spring pastures. If additional funds are provided now, and I hope they are, we expect that the Service could possibly address a few hotspots or begin preparation for this fall and winter's control operations.

I also am very concerned about the 15-percent reduction in ADC funds to the States that goes to administrative costs. As the Senator from Montana points out, the real value of the ADC Program is the fieldwork that is carried out—not paying more to administrative costs. As a result, the committee has included language in the report accompanying the fiscal year 1985 Interior appropriations bill addressing those overhead charges.

Mr. President, it is my intention to join with the Senator from Montana in asking the Department to seek to make additional funds available to Montana and Idaho for the operation of their ADC Program for the remainder of the fiscal year.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Idaho for his remarks and for his commitment to a strong ADC Program. I am confident that with the assistance of the distinguished chairman, we will secure sufficient funds to continue full operations of the program in Montana and Idaho. I remain concerned, however, that the immediate shortage of funds in Montana may force the layoff of employees before the fiscal year 1985 funds become available.

Mr. McCLURE. I understand the Senator's concern. I agree that the Fish and Wildlife Service should make sufficient funds available to maintain current staffing levels for the balance of fiscal year 1984.

Mr. BAUCUS. I thank the Senator for his assistance and his attention to this important matter which is so vital to livestock producers in both of our States. As he knows, I considered asking the Senate to approve an amendment to this bill that would have appropriated additional funds or required the expenditure of available funds for the ADC Program in Montana.

However, I am pleased to defer to the distinguished subcommittee chairman's judgment to address the problem in this way. I look forward to working with him to make sure the Fish and Wildlife Service responds favorably to our request.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I want to thank the committee for including in the bill the funding requested by Senator STENNIS and me to establish the Mississippi Institute for Technology Development.

This pilot project would establish a private, nonprofit corporation which will conduct scientific research and transfer it into usable technology for commercial application.

The institute is a partnership of State government, industry, Federal laboratories, and universities throughout Mississippi working together for technical and economic progress. It is projected that the ITD has the potential to help create 33,000 jobs.

With the establishment of the Mississippi Institute for Technology Development, the State's greatest assets of talented young minds, excellent institutions of higher education, and an innovative business community, are used to stop the "brain-drain" suffered by Mississippi, as well as States of similar makeup. Challenging jobs are provided which will in turn create needed and innovative new products and services.

I commend my colleague, Senator STENNIS, for his splendid leadership on this venture, as well as Senator LAXALT for his cooperation, and all the fine Mississippians whose hard work and bright minds have made the Mississippi Institute for Technology Development a reality.

I would also like to thank Senator LAXALT again for his assistance with my request for funds to provide a temporary docking facility for the NOAA research vessel, The Chapman.

I have been involved in recent efforts to ensure the progressive development of Mississippi's gulf coast fishery. This vessel is an integral part of the planned expansion and development of our fishery and the gulf coast fishery in general. The subcommittee's interest and cooperation are greatly appreciated by this Senator. I look forward to continuing our work together on the gulf coast fishery initiative.

Mr. LUGAR. Indiana University is in the process of establishing a Center for Excellence in Science and Math Education at its Bloomington campus. This project, which we believe is the first in the United States, will focus on the development of training programs for elementary and secondary teachers and administrators of math and science. This center has already received a commitment of funding from the State of Indiana and the Indiana University system for $44 million over the next 6 years to operate the center and in addition the center will receive substantial additional support from a number of national and local corporate sponsors.

This center will exist and will grow as the Nation moves to upgrade its math and science teaching infrastructures. However, we are still in the process of identifying sufficient funds to develop the actual facility which will house this model program. As planned, the facility, associated computers, advanced communications links, instructional technology, laboratories, and other associated capital costs will require $42.3 million to build. The university and the State along with private donors will be able to commit $32 million to this project. At this point, we are seeking $10.3 million from the National Science Foundation to supplement the funds that have been raised locally.

Given the National Science Foundation's commitment to support mathematics and science education and to improve the quality of that education with a special emphasis on teacher training, and the expanded program that NSF has developed to implement that commitment. Would you agree that this center which will emphasize instructional materials development and evaluation, demonstrations of innovative teaching and the application of high technology to science and math curricula and the teaching process is within the mandate Congress has set for the National Science Foundation?

Mr. GARN. Yes; in fact the Senate Appropriations Committee report which accompanied the 1984 appropriation for the National Science Foundation specifically emphasized the need for NSF to support these activities.

Mr. LUGAR. Would you also agree that capital support for a project such as the Center for Excellence that is being developed at IU is within the scope of NSF's authority and within the direction that Congress has set for the Foundation?

Mr. GARN. Yes, again the 1984 appropriation report for NSF (98-152) stated that:

> The Committee is particularly interested in the Foundation developing a "partnership program" for education in which the Federal Government participates with private business, State governments, and educational institutions to improve the quality of science and mathematics education.

And because the National Science Foundation Act of 1950 (Public Law 81-507) provides NSF with the authority to do all things necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter, and is not precluded from funding capital projects, I believe that this project is a perfect example of the kind of project contemplated by the Congress and authorized by law to advance science and math education in the United States.

The National Science Board, in July, directed the Foundation to closely review the infrastructure needs of the Nation's research institutions, including the need for construction of new facilities to conduct priority research activities. Clearly this form of institutional support is permissible under its statutory authorization, and an aspect of research needs which should be closely examined by NSF.

I would also note that the Senate just confirmed a new Director of NSF, and the Agency has a new Assistant Director for Science and Engineering Education. I am confident that these gentlemen will carefully evaluate this new and important direction in science and math education.

I have had the opportunity to review the Indiana University proposal and I am very impressed with the deep commitments made both by the State and by the private sector. These commitments, and the well reasoned and thorough documentation supporting the proposal speaks for its favorable consideration by NSF as an important step toward advancing science and math education in America.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as the Senate considers appropriations for U.S. foreign assistance to Central America, I believe we should examine the premises that lie at the heart of this debate. Many people who oppose U.S. military and/or economic assistance to Central America have stated that Central America, specifically El Salvador, will become "another Vietnam." I am sure they are sincere in their belief, Mr. President, but there are important differences between Central America and Vietnam, and I believe this needs to be pointed out. As U.S. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick has stated, one of the key differences between the two is the Pacific Ocean. Yesterday morning the New York Times printed an excellent article by U.S. Army Col. John D. Waghelstein who has served in both Vietnam and El Salvador. Colonel Waghelstein states emphatically that having served in both places, he is firmly convinced that El Salvador is not "another Vietnam." He also expresses his support for the Reagan administration's policy of keeping U.S. combat troops out of El Salvador.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this fine article entitled "Choices in Central America" be printed in the RECORD in its entirety.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Aug. 7, 1984]

CHOICES IN CENTRAL AMERICA

(By John D. Waghelstein)

CARLISLE BARRACKS, PA.—As Congress votes again this week on military and economic aide to Central America, a familiar question arises once more: isn't El Salvador another Vietnam?

Having served in both places, I am firmly convinced that it is not. I also believe that the Reagan Administration is right to assert that we can fight a successful counterinsurgency in El Salvador without committing troops.

To begin with, I think stability is more important to us in Central America in general and El Salvador in particular than it was in Southeast Asia. Saigon was 9,000 miles from Washington, San Salvador is only 1,900 miles away. We had no long-standing involvements in Vietnam: Rather, we filled the vacuum left by French colonialism. In contrast, El Salvador has been well within our traditional sphere of influence since the Monroe Doctrine, in 1923.

We are however, much restrained in Central America by our own pubic opinion, which is playing a somewhat different role this time around. In Vietnam, the public was initially supportive. Today, the public is preoccupied with a repeat of Vietnam, and the Salvadoran left has mounted an extensive compaign to prey upon that preoccupation.

The American military establishment also sees a difference in Central America. In Vietnam, it was eager to expand its involvement and was confident of it ability to defeat the insurgency. Despite some early attempts at civic action and nation-building, we turned eventually to a military solution. In El Salvador, security assistance is stringently limited and we are all aware of the need for economic, social and political reform as well as efforts to win Salvadoran popular support for the Government.

In Vietnam, there was a steady increase in numbers and involvement from observers to trainers to advisers to combat divisions. Economic and military aid increased from millions to billions of dollars and went unchecked until 1968. In El Salvador, in contrast, we have ourselves imposed a limit of 55 trainers and a relatively low level of material support.

The political situation is also very different in El Salvador. In Vietnam, with the possible exception of Ngo Dinh Diem, there was no effective popular leader to mobilize the population. The besieged Salvadoran Government is also frail, but the 1982 and 1984 elections were important first steps toward democracy, and the legitimacy of the Government has been greatly enhanced by the election of President Jose Napoleon Duarte. In this, El Salvador is more reminiscent of what happened in Venezuela in the early 1960's under President Romulo Betancourt, who also defeated an insurgent force with United States help but not direct intervention.

In Vietnam, human rights abuses were institutionalized and endemic, and never brought under control. Such abuses are also a great problem in El Salvador, and even many people in the United States who traditionally supported anti-Communism abroad have been put off by the right-wing death squads. Certainly, the general high level of violence in El Salvador makes if difficult to curb these abuses. Yet the Salvadoran leadership is beginning to deal with the problem.

In Vietnam, the insurgency had a well-developed base of operations and a motivated fighting force. In El Salvador, the insurgency is less than 15 years old and has only become effective in the last three years. Out of a population of 17 million, the Vietcong had between 200,000 and 300,00 active combatants who enjoyed the support of millions of landless and poor peasants. In El Salvador, 8,000 guerrillas have the support of 20,000 to 30,000 followers in a population of almost five million. The Vietnamese insurgency was countrywide, highly sophisticated and unrelenting. The Salvadoran insurgency has only recently spread from the city to the country-side and it tends to be regional and sporadic in focus.

Salvadoran insurgents receive assistance from the Eastern bloc, Libya, Cuba, the Palestine Liberation Organization and Nicaragua, which also provides the safe area from which the guerrillas' political leadership operates. Yet all of this together does not add up to the vast amounts of advice and assistance that the Vietnamese insurgents received from the Soviet Union and China.

What can the United States do, given these similarities and differences? Unilateral intervention in Latin America is no longer feasible unless a threatening outside power is involved. United States support for a peacekeeping coalition of Latin American nations would have wider support. But the most we can expect in El Salvador from our other Latin American neighbors would be training, advice and some material support. What this means is that the outcome of the insurgency will depend on the Salvadoran Government's ability to solve its own problems and to deal effectively with the social, political and economic causes of the war and with the military threat posed by the guerrillas.

Given the concern of the public and Congress, and the caution being exercised by the military regarding our involvement, there is little case to be made for direct involvement in El Salvador. With careful application of advice, training and material, however, a successful counterinsurgency can be pursued without committing United States combat troops.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the legislation now before this body. I find a significant portion of the $6.8 billion appropriation we are being asked to approve to be neither urgent nor appropriate for consideration in a supplemental appropriations bill.

I am most distressed over the growing tendency of Congress to appropriate, on a supplemental basis, funds that should be appropriated through the regular annual appropriations process. By following such a practice we are further adding to the public perception that congressional budgeting is either inept, dishonest, or both.

The shortfall in funding for food stamps or Federal pay—to cite two examples—is a shortfall that is not only not unexpected—it is fully calculated. Every year we are required to provide supplemental appropriations for these two programs. The obvious intent of this practice is to lower spending projections—and deficit projections. That is a practice we must change.

In addition to my procedural objections, I also oppose the bill on fiscal policy grounds. The administration's supplemental request was for $6.3 billion. Depending on whose estimates one accepts—the bill before us exceeds the administration's request by $500 million to almost $1 billion. The CBO's "Appropriation Bill Report" for this measure is 47 pages of fine print encompassing funding additions for hundreds of programs.

We are told we must vote for this measure to keep critical programs running. That may be; but, it is also true that this legislation includes numerous funding provisions which are not critical and which serve only to increase Federal spending.

Mr. President, it is time for us to rationalize the appropriations process—and to exercise fiscal restraint. For those reasons I intend to vote against this supplemental.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I support the fiscal year 1984 supplemental appropriations bill as reported by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

H.R. 6040 provides $6.8 billion in budget authority and $3.6 billion in outlays. It includes supplemental funding for both pay and programs, covering all but one of the appropriations subcommittees.

As reported by the Senate, the bill includes $700 million in budget authority for food stamps, $447 million for the strategic petroleum reserve, $353 million for student financial assistance and $368 million for the Central American Democracy, Peace and Development Initiative.

With prior-year outlays, appropriations action to date and adjustments for mandatory programs, the bill leaves the Appropriations Committee $9.4 billion in budget authority below its section 302(a) allocation under the fiscal year 1984 budget resolution, but $0.7 billion over in outlays.

Any major spending amendments to the bill would cause the committee to further exceed its outlay allocation under the budget resolution. I, therefore, urge my colleagues to support the bill as reported by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. President, I submit two tables showing the relationship of the bill to the congressional spending budget and the President's budget request for the RECORD.

FISCAL YEAR 1984 SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL, H.R. 6040, SENATE-REPORTED BILL

[Senate Appropriations Committee status—in billions of dollars]

	Fiscal year 1984—
	Budget authority	Outlays
Action to date by Appropriations Committee [1]	520.7	507.7
H.R. 6040, as reported in the Senate	6.8	3.6
Adjustment to conform mandatory programs to budget resolution assumptions	+1.0	+2.1
Appropriations Committee total	528.5	513.3
Committee 302(a) allocation [2]	537.9	512.6
Committee total compared to committee 302(a) allocation	−9.4	+0.7
President's request for H.R. 6040 [3]	6.3	3.3

[1] Includes all enacted regular appropriations bills, the second continuing resolution, enacted supplemental bills, outlays from prior-year budget authority and other prior actions. Excludes $8.5 billion in budget authority for the IMF (no outlays) assumed in the President's request and budget resolution for fiscal year 1983, but not enacted until fiscal year 1984.

[2] Includes reserve fund allocations made on September 14 and October 27, 1983.

[3] Includes $0.5 billion in budget authority for the strategic petroleum reserve not considered in fiscal year 1985 request.

TOTAL BUDGET STATUS

[In billions of dollars]

	Fiscal year 1984
	Budget authority	Outlays
Revised second budget resolution (H. Con. Res. 91)	922.1	852.1
Current level [1]	920.5	854.5
Amount remaining (−) or over (+)	−1.6	+2.4
Net effect of this bill on current level [2]	+4.2	+0.6
Amount over including this bill	+2.5	+3.0

[1] As of July 23, 1984. Includes $8.5 billion budget authority for the International Monetary fund which was in the President's request and the budget resolution for fiscal year 1983, but not enacted until fiscal year 1984.

[2] Certain entitlements and pay raises included in this bill are already included in current level.

Note: Details may not add to totals due to rounding.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise to urge the conferees on this bill to reject affirmatively the House report language dealing with the Lake Gaston pipeline.

The House committee report states, and I quote:

The Committee directs that none of the funds available to the Corps be used relative to the transfer of water from the Roanoke River Basin (Lake Gaston) to the James River Basin (Virginia Beach, Virginia) until the Corps has made an Environmental Impact study and both the Corps and EPA determine from such study that there will be no damage to fish and wildlife and no detrimental effect on the environment.

Mr. President, I want to elaborate on the proposed Lake Gaston pipeline and the status of the project at this time so that you will understand why it is so vital that the conferees not impose this onerous burden on such a worthy project.

This project would consist of an 84.5-mile pipeline from Pea Hill Creek, which is a branch of Lake Gaston, in Brunswick County, VA, to an existing raw water pipeline in Suffolk, VA, owned by the city of Norfolk. The estimated total cost is approximately $176 million—all of which will be paid by local taxpayers at no Federal expense.

Mr. President, the Virginia communities of Virginia Beach, Chesapeake, Franklin, and Isle of Wight desperately need this supply of water.
